What businessmen's organization has not been guilty of passing resolutions which support programs or projects which weaken our fiscal or economic strength and aid the trend toward defeat?

Here then, is where the real war is being fought: the war at home for simple principles and policies that will keep us strong. If we can be victorious here, we will defeat communism and international slavery on whatever terms they choose: political, diplomatic, ideological or (God forbid) military.

PERSONAL MINIATURE

And how can this critical war be won? Only by winning still another war—that war which each must fight inside himself. Deep inside each of us is going on a personal minature of this domestic war. A war to determine which side we are really on, rather than the one we claim to support. On this front is a tremendous array of forces; appeal of immediate benefits, business advantage or personal profit; power of inertia; reluctance to get involved; the tendency to convince ourselves that one man doesn't really count. We even see a peculiar belief that America is somehow immune to the same germs of decay that have destroyed other civilizations.

GOLDWATER DENIES WAR PERIL ON CUBA

file Pres. Pol.

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP) —Seantor Barry M. Goldwater, Republican of Arizona, discounted today the danger of wa with the Soviet Union over Cuba. He advocated an economic blockade, support of Cuban exile attacks and invasion if necessary to destroy Communism on the island.

He said he believed that United States troops might not be needed for such an invasion.

President Kennedy has adopted a policy of discouraging commando raids by Cuban refugees, on the ground that they have no military value and threaten to involve the United States in war.

On a taped radio-television program (American Broadcasting Company—"Issues and Answers"), Senator Goldwater said the United States should blockade Cuba economically and support Cuban exiles in sabotage, espionage or invasion.

He acknowledged that "Russia might start a diversionary effort, maybe in Iran or Berlin or something like that," but he insisted there would be no risk of a major war in any United States action against Cuba.

Discussing Negroes' voting rights in the South, the Senator criticized Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy "for no moving into these cases where they can prove that a man is denied the right to vote by reason of race, creed or color."

ROCKEFELLER GAINS ON MIDWEST TRIPS

Flies Home After Winning Wide G.O.P. Reappraisal

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

OMAHA, April 7—Governor Rockefeller flew home this morning after two days in Kansas and Nebraska, states where the Republican response to Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizon ranges from enthusiasm almost to idolatry.

He left behind him in both states Republican leaders who were re-examining the earlier farm belft image of Mr. Rockefeller as an upstart Eastern millionaire virtually indistinguishable in political point of view from President Kennedy.

"He did himself a lot of good out here," one Republican leader observed. "A lot of our people just weren't ready to buy him. Now they know that he and Goldwater really aren't so far apart after all."

Governor Rockefeller won this reapprasial by putting his "i am a Republican" speech to its severest test to date. This capsule version of the differences between Republicans and Democrats as he sees them, which he has been developing over the last year or so, stood him in good stead.

In Topeka, Republicans at the largest fund-raising dinner in Kansas history, interrupted more than 30 times with applause, cheered his warnings against "domination from Wash ington" and roared when he told a joke.

In this city, his reception at what was described as "the largest dinner ever given for a human being in Nebraska" was cordial but considerably more subdued.

The only real ovation at the Omaha dinner went not to the guest of honor, Senator Roman Hruska, not to the main speaker, Mr.Rockefeller, but to the conservative Senator John G. Tower.

Nebraska party leaders had sold about 2,200 tickets at $50 each and succeeded in heading off a planned walkout demonstration by some 50 fervent Goldwater supporters. Instead the adament conservatives bought tickets but stayed home, leaving several tables vacant.

The Rockefeller Republican speech, delivered in about the same form at both dinners, upholds the private enterprise system, states' rights, fiscal integrity and "a firm and positive foreign policy" and touches on civil rights in the form of support for "the worth and dignity of the individual."

Over the last year, Mr. Rockefeller has expanded his list of Republican principles from three to six items. The latest addision is "the people's right to know," coupled with charges that the Kennedy Administration has been keeping the citiznery in the dark by "news management."

In Omaha he augmented his profession of party regularity with the assertion that "not enough reverence is being shown for the American flag today."

While attempting to put his most conservative foot forward in the farm belt, Mr. Rockefeller made no attempt to deny some of the liberal positions he has assumed in the course of his New York political career.

He described in some detail to a news conference his plan for medical care for the aged, a subject that is anathema to most doctors in the prairie states. He also called the "John Birch Society, which is active in this area, a "splinter group" that should operate within the framework of the two-party system.

New York's State Liquor Authority scandals pursued Mr. Rockefeller halfway across the nation. Reporters in both states wanted to know what he was doing about the situation and whether he thought he had been damaged politically.

To the latter question, he gave almost th3 same answer he used months ago when asked if his divorce would hurt his career: He said it would be up to everyone individually to decide that for himself.

Having successfully visited the two states that cast the highest percentage of Republican votes in 1960, Mr. Rockefeller will turn his political travels to Washington, D.C., and Cincinnati later this month.

On Wednesday he will address a Republican Congressional breakfast in Washington and make a couple of other informal speeches during the day.

On April 29 he goes to Cincinnati for a fund-raising dinner honoring Representative Robert A. Taft Jr. and Ray C. Bliss, Ohio's Republican state chairman.

Republicans Start a Second 'Goldwater Draft' for '64, But He Refuses to Help

By CABELL PHILLIPS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 8—A new "Goldwater for President" boom was started here today. Whether it would survive any better than several others like it, in face of a cold response of Senator Barry Goldwater, himself, remained an open question.

In his office on Capitol Hill, the Arizona champion of Republican conservatism, said: "Sorry, I have no comment whatever."

Members of his staff said that neither they nor the Senator had had any knowledge of the movement and that they had learned of it only from reporters who had asked for a Goldwater comment.

Managers of this new enterprise, which calls itself the National Draft Goldwater Committee, are:

Chairman, Peter O'Donnell Jr., Republican State Chairman for Texas; co-chairman, Mrs. Ione F. Harrington, Republican national committee woman from Indiana; secretary, Mrs. Judy Fernald, Upper Montclair, N. J., a former co-chairman of the Young Republican Federation, and treasurer, J. William Middendorf, Greenwich, Conn., a member of his state's Republican Finance Committee.

All except Mr. Middendorf appeared at the Mayflower Hotel this morning for a news conference to announce their committee's purpose. Stating that they had not consulted Senator Goldwater about their plans, they said they hoped to be the catalyst for the many independent movements around the country to get the Arizonan into the Presidential competition next year.

The committee has been formed, they said in a prepared statement, "to mobilize the tremendous, spontaneous enthusiasm for Senator Goldwater that is sweeping the country."

Goldwater Not Consulted

"We want to make clear," the statement continued, "that we have not consulted Senator Goldwater about forming this committee. We take him at his word when he says his present intention is to run for re-election to the Senate next year.

"But we are confident that when Senator Goldwater has seen tangible expressions of support from men and women all over this country, he will respond to that call to duty in the same selfless spirit which led him to serve our country so ably in the Air Force and the United States Senate."

In answering reporters' questions, Mr. O'Donnell refused to speculate on what the committee would do if the Senator should unequivocally reject their overtures. But he pointed out that this was "a draft movement," and that a draft had been necessary in 1952 to overcome the reluctance of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower to run for the Presidency.

Sure of South's Support

Strong support for the movement, Mr. O'Donnell said, will come from the South. The people there are instinctively conservative, he remarked, and identify Mr. Goldwater with conservative goals.

"He is in a position to sweep the electoral votes of all the Southern states," Mr. O'Donnell said.

Another "draft Goldwater" movement was mounted from Chicago late last winter, but apparently never got far. A group of some 50 Republican leaders, many of them from the South, met there in secrecy during November to raise a $250,000 campaign fund to solidify Goldwater support around tne country.

Its plans collapsed—apparently, at least— when the Senator announced in January that he wanted "all of 1963" to make up his mind about the Presidency.

"I'd rather stay in a fluid position for the rest of the year," he told an interviewer, "and then see how the situation looks. I hope they (the Chicago group) won't go ahead on this timetable."

Mr. O'Donnell acknowledged today that he had attended the Chicago meeting. He would not say, however, whether his present movement is directly related to that event.

When asked whether his organization would seek support from members of the John Birch Society, he replied:

"We will seek the support of anybody who believes in free enterprise, fiscal responsibility and in sound Republican principles," he said.

Today in National Affairs

Goldwater Ground Swell —A New Trend in Politics?

file Pres. Politics

By David Lawrence

WASHINGTON.

There's something rather sensational going on today in national politics—a ground swell for a Presidential candidate 16 months before the nominating convention.

This has happened at various times in past history as other aspirants—who had attracted headline attention and built up a substantial number of votes in the months before the convention—were swept aside by a widespread sentiment that emerged from the grass roots in favor of a "dark horse" candidate.

Sen Barry Goldwater of Arizona has been mentioned intermittently during the last two years as a possible Republican nominee for 1964, but until recently his name was never taken seriously by disinterested observers — nor by some of the veteran politicans.

Something has developed, however, in political discussions across the country during the last six months which indicates clearly that Barry Goldwater will enter the next convention with the support of what might be called the backbone of the Republican party's strength in the nation. He is going to be as important in the next convention as Wendell Willkie was in 1940, but for different reasons.

Willkie Was Ignored

This writer was among the first to mention Willkie as a possible candidate at least a year before the convention, but the New York business executive wasn't regarded then as even a potential candidate. It was taken for granted that a businessman could not be nominated. Yet, just about 90 days before the balloting for a nominee was at hand, the regular organization Republicans began to take him seriously. He had not made any big speech-making campaign. He had not gone into any primaries. It was simply a case of an "image" being presented to the Republicans that seemed to fit the situation at the time.

Sen. Goldwater says tactfully that he hasn't made up his mind to make an organized effort to win the nomination. He is right to avoid giving the impression of a self-seeking politician. In the meantime, he talks frankly, bluntly and unequivocally. If the Republican delegates like what he says, he knows they will consider him. If his views do not fit the current problems, they will disregard him.

Sen. Goldwater has said enough already, however, to win sizable support among the rank-and-file and the leaders of his party in the West and in many parts of the East. The South is for him because he has put the "civil rights" issues in perspective and yet has maintained a position that is in line with the Republican record in Congress. He might really break the attachment of the "solid South" to the Democratic party today and also win over many Northern Democrats who have a realistic understanding of the issues involved in the "civil rights" debate.

Cuba Issue Helps

What has lately aroused, on the other hand, a noticeable enthusiasm for Sen. Goldwater throughout the country is his forthright comments on the Cuban problem. He has managed to sense correctly the true state of public opinion—the mood of the average voter. His criticisms of the Administration's hesistancy and wavering policy, which he describes as timid, have won considerable applause.

But it isn't any one issue that makes a candidate seem a plausible choice. It is, first of all, the impression he conveys of fundamental honesty and common-sense judgment. Next in importance is his penetrating analyses of all the basic issues.

In the case of Sen. Goldwater, there is a feeling that he has the courage of his convictions and understands the Republican party's attitude toward "New Dealism," "New Frontierism" and those Administration policies which harass businessmen and impair their confidence in economic progress — something necessary for industry to have if the economy is to expand and jobs are to be created to relieve unemployment.

The strategy of the coming campaign itself may be a factor in selecting the candidate. Do the Republicans want a candidate who embraces so-called "liberal" policies, even as he alienate the regular Republicans?

Stimulation a Factor

Republican delegates usually are not enthusiastic about a possible nominee whose main strength might be assumed to be the winning of "liberal" Democrats. The Republican party is more inclined today to pick a candidate who can stimulate and enthuse the regular Republicans and woo a substantial number of Democrats in the South, as well as in other parts of the country, who believe i an enlightened conservatism and who are basically anti-radical.

Sen. Goldwater's growing strength means that the major factions in the Republican party will have to undergo an "agonizing reappraisal" of just how strongly they are ready to support the fundamental principles of the party today and how articulate and effective a versatile and forthright man like Barry Goldwater could be, as contrasted with the three Republican Governors whose names are often mentioned for the Presidential nomination—namely, Rockefeller of New York, Romney of Michigan and Scranton of Pennsylvania—each of whom has certain points of voter attraction. But, while the nominating convention is more than a year away, the potential delegates are at this time taking a good look at Barry Goldwater and talking a great deal about him among themselves.

4-11-63 Atla. Const. file Pres. Politics

WASHINGTON—Sen. Goldwater, who in January begged his followers to let him alone for a year presidentially speaking, has reacted tolerantly to the formation of a draft-Goldwater committee here. The committee, headed by GOP Texas State Chairman Peter O'Donnell, placed the Goldwater hat in the ring in a press conference at the Mayflower.

Immediately thereafter, the ordinarily approachable conservative idol went into seclusion in his office and had his press secretary pass out the word that the drafters had no sanction from him.

But by mid-afternoon, when he went to address the D.C. Republican State Committee at the National Savings and Trust Building, he had recovered himself sufficiently to comment fairly extensively on the situation.

His remarks indicated a certain permissiveness towards the three drafters — Mr. O'Donnell and his lieutenants, Mrs. Ione Harrington, national committeewoman from Indiana, and Judy Fernald, immediate past co-chairman of the Young Republican Federation.

"I got a little tired of trying to stop these people," said Goldwater, who has himself often said a man cannot be as right as he is and still be president. "So I have stopped trying. If they want to waste their time and money it's theirs, not mine."

In his speech, Goldwater curiously enough, hit on a theme which was the leitmotif of the Midwestern weekend orations of Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York—that is, party unity.

"We have lost election after election by being antagonistic towards candidates before they are even chosen. We shouldn't gut ourselves," he warned.

He would not say if he was the man to do the job, but he did leave with his hearers a strong impression that he would run stronger in the South than Rockefeller.

"Any Republican who runs on a states' rights platform and does not run as a racist can defeat Kennedy in the South," said the senator.

O'Donnell made it plain that his group is going to do all in its power to let the reluctant senator know that he is needed and wanted on the national ticket. For a starter, O'Donnell insisted that the senator could carry all the Southern states. For the future he promised a Fourth of July rally, which would show the senator, with money and men, that he can win both the nomination and the election.

The most significant bit of literature he distributed, however, was a sheet of election returns from Nebraska, one of the two ultra-Republican states visited by Rockefeller on his weekend raid on Goldwater territory. The returns showed former Interior Secretary Fred Seaton, "a liberal" Republican and candidate for governor, as the only loser on the Republican ticket last November.

Rockefeller in the opinion of some local observers "made hay" with the deeply conservative voters of Nebraska, who profoundly distrusted the New Yorker until they heard him discoursing on fiscal integrity.

The discovery that he was not a radical, coupled with their fear that "Goldwater can't win," gave the governor a measure of encouragement from the Cornbelt, which the Goldwater folks are anxious to reverse before it becomes a trend.

Craig Wants Klansmen As Registrars

The grand dragon of the Georgia Ku Klux Klan, Calvin Craig, has requested Fulton County Chief Registrar Leon Hay to swear in some klan members as deputy registrars to conduct a voter registration drive.

Mr. Craig made his request in a letter to Mr. Hay. He said he had read a news story which told of 181 Negroes being sworn in as deputy registrars to conduct a voter registration drive sponsored by the All-Citizens Registration Committee, an Atlanta Negro political education group.

When the ACRC group was approved Mr. Hay told a reporter that "this same service will be rendered to any other civic organization in Fulton County that requests it."

Wednesday, Mr. Hay declined to comment on the letter from the klan leader except to say that he would answer it.

Leaders of the ACRC have set a goal of 27,000 new Negro voters in the county by the September primary elections.

"Sir," Mr. Craig's letter states, "the united klans now request the same rights to have your office swear in some of our members to help the unregistered white voters who have been forgotten for so long."

Call Kennedy Support Weak —3-Day Parley Opens

By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES

Special to The New York Times

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz., April —Western Governors opened a three-day meeting today with a glowing report on the West's leadership in traffic safety and an appeal to grapple with Army National Guard problems.

But there is no mistaking that this Western Governors' Conference is meeting the year before a Presidential election.

Of the 13 Governors in the conference, seven of the 11 on hand at the Mountain Shadows Hotel were Republicans. All voiced confidence in another broad Republican victory in the West in 1964. In the 1960 Presidential elections Richard M. Nixon lost only Nevada, Alaska and Hawaii.

The influence of the ultra-right wing John Birch Society was generally belittled although some Governors saw conservating in the West. Governor Rockefeller and Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona were named by most of the Governors, both Republican and Democratic, as the leading Presidential aspirants.

Rockefeller Speculation

Some of the Republican Governors voluntarily raised questions about the Rockefeller Presidential drive.

One question concerned the possible influence of the New York State Liquor Authority controversy. Another related to Mr. Rockefeller's divorce last year and to the divorce decree granted at Fairfield, Idaho, on April 1 to Mrs. Margaretta Fitler Murphy. Governor Rockefeller has refused comment on a report he would marry Mrs. Murphy.

Gov. John A. Love, Republican of Colorado, said that he thought Senator Goldwater might be slightly ahead in the eyes of Colorado Republicans, but that Governor Rockefeller was "perfectly acceptable" to him.

Of Mr. Rockefeller's problems he said that he might have been hurt "to some extent," but added, "Time heals all wounds."

Gov. George Clyde, Utah Republican, said Governor Rockefeller and Senator Goldwater were "both great men," but that "Governor Rockefeller's marital situation will hurt him, especially in the West."

Gov. Clifford P. Hansen of Wyoming saw Governor Rockefeller ahead now, but said he "would not minimize the friends Senator Goldwater has." He thought Mr. Rockefeller could be hurt if he remarried.

Montana's Republican governor, Tim Babcock, declared President Kennedy would "do worse in the West than he did in 1960." He backed no candidate, but said he liked Senator Goldwater's philosophy.

"Governor Rockefeller is not hurt seriously if the intent of the man is honorable," he said.

Gov. Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon said Governor Rockefeller as of today "would carry Oregon in the primary and general elections."

Gov. Robert E. Smylie of Idaho asserted that President Kennedy "apparently doesn't care much about the West and the West knows it." He predicted a Republican victory.

Gov. Paul Fannin of Arizona was confident that Senator Goldwater would be the Republican Presidential nominee "if present trends continue." He minimized the number of John Birch Society members in Arizona and said some of the society's leadership "seems to be on the Democratic side."

Gov. Albert D. Rosellini of Washington, chairman of the National Governors' Conference, and other Democrats found Republicans over optimistic.

"I am confident," Mr. Rosellini said, "that President Kennedy will carry Washington which he lost in 1960."

At the opening business session today of the Western Governors, Gov. Grant Sawyer, Democrat of Nevada, reported that an automobile driver license compact had been adopted in eight states, seven of them in the West. He also said a vehicle equipment agreement had been accepted by 12 states, of which nine were in the West. The California Legislature passed both of these traffic safety measures and New York has enacted the equipment compact.

Governor Rosellini reviewed the Army National Guard situation and asked the Governors to push for legislation that would maintain the Guard at an average strength of 400,000 officers and men. He said an appropriations bill now before Congress could cut the guard strength to about 384,000.

DEMOCRATS TOLD OF RIGHTIST DRIVE

Specialist Says Extremists Will Spend Heavily in '64

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 22—Democratic politicians were warned today not to underestimate the influence of right-wing extremists in next year's election campaign.

A research specialist said a score of right-wing groups, most of them less well known than the John Birch Society, were prepared to spend more than the Democratic and Republican National Committees combined to elect candidates reflecting their views to state and national office.

The warning was sounded by Wesley McCune, director of Group Research, Inc., an organization specializing in intelligence on right-wing movements. He addressed a luncheon meeting of the Women's National Democratic Club. Mr. McCune formerly was a Washington newspaperman and an official of the National Farmers Union.

Mr. McCune said the right wing was almost as much of a threat to the Republicans as to the Democrats. Former President Dwight D. Eisenhower and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon have spoken against the movements. But many Republicans, he noted, "do not like to face it head-on."

Cites New York Role

"As a formal, partisan political force," Mr. McCune said, "the right wing is very small, although it made some substantial showings in the 1962 elections and is now a legal party in the crucial state of New York."

He noted that although two acknowledged members of the Birch Society, former Representatives John H. Rousselot and Edgar W. Hiestand, Republicans of California, failed to win re-election last year, each captured approximately 45 per cent of the vote in his district. Both districts had been heavily gerrymandered by a Democratic Legislature. And former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, he said, although he ran sixth in the Texas Democratic gubernatorial primary last year, received more than 100,000 votes.

"My studies lead me to believe," Mr. McCune continued, "that the right wing is still growing in number, size, financial support, technique and leadership. Several such groups are in the million-dollar-a-year bracket and several you might think are dead, like Gerald L. K. Smith [an evangelist-politician who first came to national prominence in the late years of the New Deal] are taking in several hundred thousand dollars a year."

"About a dozen of these groups are conducting effective radio and television programs which nearly blanket the country," he went on "The John Birch Society, far from rolling over and playing dead, has taken over the young Republicans in our biggest state and has come within a few disputed votes of taking over the adult group."

Mr. McCune cited the Americans for Constitutional Action as one of the most effective political groups on the ideological right. The organization is well-financed, he said, and carries a number of prominent names on its roster of officers. It publishes an index each two years that gives the voting records of all members of Congress according to the group's scale of political values.

The technique of Americans for Constitutional Action in helping a favored candidate, the speaker said, is not to provide him with campaign money, but to send experts on campaign organization and publicity into his district to take over those phases of the operation.

Part of the reason for the success of the radical right, Mr. McCune said, is its ability to appear before audiences not usually thought of as part of the "right-wing apparatus"—farm groups, service clubs and professional organizations.

Governor Signs Bill Extending Ban on Housing Discrimination

N.Y.T. 4-23-63 file Pres. Politics

By DOUGLAS DALES

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, April 22—Governor Rockefeller signed today the bipartisan Metcalf-Baker Bill. It bans discrimination in the sale or rental of all housing in the state except for rentals in owner-occupied one- and two-family dwellings.

The law, effective Sept. 1, will cover 95 per cent of the private housing in the state, according to housing authorities.

Governor Rockefeller said the statute was the most comprehensive statute dealing with discrimination in any state.

The measure is an amendment to a 1961 law that outlawed discrimination because of race, creed or nationality in some private housing but permitted exclusions broader than will hereafter be permitted.

Mr. Rockefeller signed the bill in New York City before coming here for the unveiling tomorrow of a model for a complex of public buildings planned for a 98-acre site between the capitol and the executive mansion.

The Governor also signed today administration bills allocating funds under the new $25,000,000 park bond issue, barring reprisals against complainants of discriminatory acts and givng the State Labor Department supervision over employment agencies outside of New York City.

The new housing law is expected to provide Governor Rockefeller with a strong talking point among minority groups if he is the Republican candidate for President next year. The Governor already has been critical of the pace with which President Kennedy has moved to carry out civil rights pledges made in the 1960 campaign.

The 1961 law banned discrimination in the sale and rental of accommodations in multiple dwellings and the initial sale of houses in developments of 10 or more homes. The law excluded individual one- and two-family houses and rentals in owner-occupied three-family dwellings.

Broker Rule Extended

Because of the exemptions, it has been estimated that the 1961 law applied to only 15 per cent of the housing outside of New York City.

The revised law extends a prohibition against discrimination by real estate brokers to apply to all housing.

Alleged infractions of the various antidiscrimination laws are adjudicated by the State Commission for Human Rights. If compliance is resisted, the commission may seek an order in Supreme Court. Resistance to a court order subjects a person to contempt proceedings.

Mr. Rockefeller said the bill making it unlawful to retaliate against a complainant or witness before the State Commission for Human Rights would strengthen the enforcement arm of the commission and "provide an additional measure of protection in the state's effort to secure equal opportunity under law for all its citizens."

$5 Million for City

Under the allocation of the $25,000,000 park bond issue approved by the voters last fall, New York City's share will be $5,000,000. Of the balance, $10,000,000 will be used for state parks, $5,000,000 for acquisition by the state of multiple use areas, and $5,000,000 for aid to counties, towns and villages.

A key feature of the new law is a reduction from 25 to two acres in the minimum size of a site eligible for state funds. This change will permit the development of urban neighborhood parks.

In signing the employment agency bill, Governor Rockefeller said a recent survey indicated wide variations in the effectiveness of local supervision, particularly with respect to the importation of young women from the South and Latin America for domestic jobs.

Dixie's GOPs Line Up for Goldwater

By REG MURPHY
Constitution Political Editor
(Copyright, 1963, by The Atlanta Constitution)

Sen. Barry Goldwater is an almost solid choice across the South for the Republican presidential nomination—and some 250 delegate votes are his more than a year ahead of convention time.

Those votes are close to half enough to give him the nomination. And the people who hold the votes say they could carry every Southern state for him if he is nominated.

These are among the major findings of a survey Tuesday by The Constitution which revealed that some Southern Republicans might split with their national party if the conservative Arizonan is denied the presidential banner.

Another strong argument advanced by the state chairmen is that Goldwater's heading the ticket would help them elect more congressmen in the region which has sent few Republicans to Washington.

Fund-raising in the South for the Republicans would be a relatively easy matter if Goldwater is the choice, the Republicans said.

The survey showed that of 305 delegate votes in the South, Rockefeller would get only a few and that Sen. Thruston Morton of Kentucky would get around 30 if the voting were held this week.

Georgia's delegation is one that would give a few votes to Morton, but would be predominantly for Goldwater.

MAN IN THE MIDDLE HAS COMMANDING LEAD

Chairman James Dorsey estimated that about 18 of the 24 Georgia delegate votes would go to Goldwater "as their first choice." Later ballots, if needed, might change the count, he added.

"Yes," he answered, "I think Sen. Goldwater could carry Georgia (in the presidential election). But I think there are others who could, too."

It was the first time Dorsey had spoken publicly about the inclinations of the Georgia Republicans and indicated that Rockefeller has little standing in the Georgia party.

The survey indicated that both Morton and Gov. George Romney of Michigan generally are regarded as being stronger candidates in the South than Rockefeller among Republicans.

Mississippi Chairman Wirt A. Yerger, who heads the Southern Association of Republican State Chairmen, mentioned the possibility of a split if Goldwater is denied the leadership.

Rockefeller's nomination "would probably throw the South—or a good portion of it—into some sort of a third party," Yerger said. "Or it might mean that some states would split and go for Kennedy. But that is not going to happen: Rockefeller won't get the nomination."

"I don't think Goldwater would lose a Southern state," insisted

Alabama Chairman John Grenier. "Goldwater would be way out front if the primary were held today," Florida Chairman Tom Fairfield Brown added. His is one of the states where primaries will be held next spring to pick delegates.

North Carolina is another where there will be district primaries next January and February, but Chairman Robert L. Gavin said, "At this time the sentiment seems to be with Goldwater."

Arkansas is an exception, partially because Gov. Rockefeller's brother Winthrop is chairman of the State Industrial Development Commission and would get a split with Goldwater forces.

Kentucky is somewhat undecided at the moment. It would like, if possible, to run favorite son Thruston Morton.

But for the others, it's almost monolithically Goldwater. State-by-state, here is the picture:

ALABAMA—Grenier said his delegation (20 votes) will be "100 per cent for Goldwater," and added "His pluralities in the South will shock even the most professional politicians. The important point is that with Goldwater on the ticket the Republicans will knock off liberal Democratic congressmen like ten pins. The South is the only hope for the Republican Party ever to regain control of the Congress."

ARKANSAS—Chairman William L. Spicer said the 12 votes might be split. "The people in Arkansas are very appreciative of the efforts of Winthrop Rockefeller. . . . The thinking Democrats, independents and Republicans are commenting more and more about Sen. Goldwater. . . . (On Rockefeller) "He can't be as liberal as we have heard because of his fiscal policies in New York."

Map Shows How Republicans Will Vote in 12 Southern States

FLORIDA—Brown said, "There is great enthusiasm for Goldwater among young people, and this is the most encouraging thing to me on the American political horizon. . . . Governors Romney and Rockefeller do have a following." Of the 32 votes, almost all would be for Goldwater now.

GEORGIA — Chairman Dorsey estimated 18 of the 24 votes would go to Goldwater. National Executive Committeeman Robert Snodgrass has said kind things about Morton at open meetings, and most of the delegation is working for the Goldwater camp now.

KENTUCKY—Mrs. W. C. Cruse, temporary chairman, said, "If our native son (Morton) figures anywhere in this—either as president or vice president—we would be wholeheartedly behind him." Speaking privately, she added, "There is more sentiment for Goldwater" than Rockefeller in dividing the 24 votes.

LOUISIANA—Chairman Thomas C. Hall said, "If it isn't unanimous, it almost is" for Goldwater. "The chances are practically nil" of carrying the state for Rockefeller, who is "too much of a liberal" and would make America "too much of a welfare state."

MISSISSIPPI — The 13 votes (could go to 19 if the Republicans were to win the governor's office this fall) "will be as solid as they possibly can be behind the only man we feel can beat Kennedy," Yerger said. Rockefeller is "too much of what we would call an accidental Republican." The Goldwater boom "is the fastest moving political development in the country at this time," Yerger added.

NORTH CAROLINA—Gavin said "there is a tremendous amount of sentiment" for Goldwater, who would "have a stronger appeal for the conservatives in the Democratic Party, too." He added, "It would help all of us" if Miami Beach or Dallas were the convention site.

SOUTH CAROLINA — "It was the South Carolina delegation to the 1960 Republican national convention that spearheaded Sen. Goldwater's nomination," said Chairman J. Drake Edens Jr. The 16 votes will all go to him and "Gov. Rockefeller is certainly not looked on with favor by any South Carolina Republicans that I know of . . . We don't look on (Goldwater) as a Southern candidate. This guy is a great national candidate from any conservative viewpoint."

TENNESSEE—Chairman Erby L. Jenkins said there could be some Rockefeller support, but the 28 votes would be primarily for Goldwater. "In view of the ultra-liberal government of the Kennedy administration, people are beginning to take a new look toward Goldwater's philosophy. In my opinion, he is much stronger today than he was six months ago."

TEXAS — Chairman Peter O'Donnell Jr. is organizer of the Draft Goldwater movement. Although he could not be reached for comment Tuesday he has said he believes all 54 votes would go to Goldwater and that the South also would be solid for the senator from a nearby state.

VIRGINIA — Chairman Horace E. Henderson said, "Without any question the majority of Virginia Republicans would appear to favor Sen. Goldwater." But the 30 votes also would consider "electing a Republican president, not with just carrying the South. . . . We here in Virginia believe any Republican is preferable to four more years of the Kennedy administration," he added.

'On the March in Dixie'

file Pres. Politics

"Republicans on the march in Dixie." So says the headline on a round-up of dispatches from five Southern states in "The Republican Southern Challenge," a publication of the party's National Committee. Texas reports that fifty Democratic precinct chairmen have walked out of the Democratic party and joined the G. O. P. In Florida the Republicans are celebrating a 12-seat victory in special elections for the State Legislature. Rosy reports come in from Georgia and Louisiana. Predicting additional gains in Texas and Virginia, the director of the National Committee's Southern division declares, "I think it's truthful to say that the Republican party is bursting at the seams in the Southern states."

Something, no doubt, is happening in Dixie. States' rights sentiment is traditionally strong throughout the South and there is widespread and unmistakable evidence of dissatisfaction over the course pursued by the Kennedy Administration at Ole Miss, at the voter registration booths, and elsewhere. Some of this dissatisfaction seems likely to redound to the local advantage of the G. O. P., but how much will this be worth on a national scale? When anything bursts at the seams, there is always some risk of a consequent embarrassment.

The Republican party, nationally, is pledged to try to do in the South precisely what the Kennedy Administration has tried to do. The Republican party is pledged by its national platform "to continue its vigorous support of school desegregation." It is pledged "to guarantee the right to vote of all citizens in all areas of the country." It is pledged to "continued vigorous enforcement of the civil rights laws" and "to prevent obstruction of court orders."

Two interesting questions arise: First, in the light of all these party declarations can the Southern states'-righters be convinced that the Republicans are any less desegregation-minded than the Kennedy Administration? Second, if the Republicans do succeed in that maneuver, how popular will they be in the large urban centers of the North?

NEW YORK'S NEW CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am pleased to call the Senate's attention to the signing on April 22 by the Governor of New York, Nelson A. Rockefeller, of two measures maintaining New York's place in the forefront of the States in the field of civil rights. One broadens the New York law against discrimination in housing, which previously covered the sale or rental of housing accommodations in multiple dwellings and in developments of 10 or more houses on contiguous land. It also barred discrimination by real estate brokers with respect to housing covered by the law. The new measure prohibits discrimination in the sale or rental of any housing accommodation, except rentals in an owner-occupied one- or two-family home, and it also extends to all housing the provision relating to real estate brokers.

A second bill signed by the Governor makes it an unlawful discriminatory practice to retaliate against any person because he has opposed any discriminatory practice or because he has filed a complaint, testified, or assisted in any proceeding before the State commission for human rights. The first law against discrimination in New York in 1945 made such retaliation unlawful in all cases involving discrimination in employment. This measure brings the rule against retaliation into step with the many other constructive advances made in the State since that time toward eliminating racial discrimination in issues cognizable under the State constitution. It should also be noted that the city of New York is this month celebrating the fifth anniversary of the enactment of its fair housing practices law.

These are indeed auspicious steps in the continual effort being made in New York State and in many other States to achieve the goals which we proclaim in the Constitution of the United States for all our citizens and hold out to the world in the hope of emulation of our way of life. What is needed is a comparable effort at the Federal level to obtain meaningful civil rights legislation in the Congress.

I am proud to say that New York State practices what it preaches through its two Senators, and that it remains in the forefront of those who wish to guarantee equal rights to every citizen in all areas in which civil rights are concerned, without regard to race, color, or creed.

the Governors of 23 States that had not yet ratified the amendment urging them to support ratification by their legislatures. "Because very few State legislatures will meet in 1964," the President said, "action by individual States now is essential if the proposed amendment is to be effective during the 1964 elections."

Although there has been no organized compaign in favor of the amendment, many Congressmen and Senators from both parties have urged their State legislatures to approve it and both national committees have announced their support. The rapid progress of the anti-poll-tax amendment through the State legislatures has surprised many observers who had earlier predicted that the ratification process would take a number of years if it was successful at all.

The amendment would have practical effect only in the five States that now levy a poll tax as a requirement for voting—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Virginia, and Texas. The Texas Senate has approved a proposed State constitutional amendment to end its own poll tax, but has also passed an annual voter registration bill to replace the poll tax as a voting prerequisite.

"THE ISSUES OF TODAY"—STATEMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, on April 26, the Vice President of the United States, LYNDON B. JOHNSON, addressed the Young Democratic National Committee luncheon on the subject, "The Issues of Today."

The remarks of the Vice President are worthy of note and I ask unanimous consent at this time to insert them in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ISSUES OF TODAY

I realize politics may be an ugly word to some. It may seem shallow and superficial and nonintellectual to others. But a Democrat is never really a Democrat unless he is practical about politics.

That is why—here before you who are the hears and hope of our party's future—I want to talk practical Democratic politics today.

In this year of 1963, our party holds the White House. We hold the Congress. We occupy a majority of the statehouses. We are the majority party among the millions of registered voters.

But these are not measures enough.

Too many Democrats too easily forget that the Democratic Party, as the majority party, is much more the historic exception than the historic rule.

Out of the last 30 years, since 1933, Democrats have held the White House all but 8 years—Congress all but 4 years. Yet, this represents three-fourths the time Democrats have been in power in this century and two-thirds of the years of Democratic rule since Lincoln.

Democrats can and proudly do invoke the names of Wilson and Roosevelt and Truman and Kennedy. But of these 20th-century Democratic Presidents, only F.D.R. was elected to office with a majority of the popular vote.

Starting with Jefferson, the victories of the Democratic Party have been hard-won victories. It is not coincidence that all the great Democratic Presidents have been—and had to be—eminently practical politicians because the political battles of the people are never casually won.

A LANDMARK REPORT

On January 19 of this year, the Democratic National Committee's Subcommittee on Party Organization—under the chairmanship of Congressman NEIL STAEBLER, of Michigan—made a landmark report. Every Democrat should read it and reread it—and take it to heart. In that report, NEIL STAEBLER'S group rendered this most urgent conclusion: "The United States is in the middle of a period of political change. The majority of the voters in the United States consider themselves to be Democrats. President Kennedy enjoys an almost unprecedented popularity. Despite this, the Democratc Party is not certain of a majority of the presidential or congressional vote. The Democratic Party clearly must adapt its party activities and its organization to mobilize its full political support in 1964.

That report goes on to say what far too many Democrats may not want to hear—that underlying social and political trends are changing the political responses of the American people.

There is no need to belabor the obvious. We are living in different times, changing times, new times. When Harry Truman surprised Tom Dewey in 1948, 79 percent of the families in the United States had less than $5,000 a year income. When John F. Kennedy outlined the Democratic Party program of the New Frontier to the Nation in 1961, 59 percent of the families had incomes over $5,000 a year.

When Woodrow Wilson brought his New Freedoms to the people, he delivered his entire first inaugural address without mentioning foreign affairs. In 1933, F.D.R. began his first term with a memorable inaugural in which foreign affairs was dealt with in three paragraphs—and deliberately assigned a role of secondary interest. In John F. Kennedy's Presidency, foreign affairs and foreign programs have dominated every month and week and virtually every day.

In these years, the Presidency has changed. The lives of the people have changed. The party of the people—the party which exists to serve the people's needs—must change, also, if it is to be responsive to the people—and if it is to receive the people's trust and confidence and support at the polls.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, W

Stephen Smith Is Likely to Direct Kennedy's Re-election Campaign

By TOM WICKER

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 30 — The White House is approaching the 1964 Presidential campaign with only one major change in prospect for the team that managed John F. Kennedy's narrow victory in 1960.

That change would put Stephen Smith, Mr. Kennedy's brother-in-law, in over-all direction of the President's re-election effort. Robert F. Kennedy, now the Attorney General, filled this role in 1960.

A well-placed White House source said Mr. Smith's substitution for the Attorney General had not been entirely decided upon but "the trend is in that direction."

John M. Bailey of Connecticut, the Democratic national chairman, will remain in that post throughout next year's campaign, it was reported.

O'Brien Organization Chief

Lawrence F. O'Brien, the President's special assistant for Congressional affairs, will supervise the Kennedy campaign organization. P. Kenneth O'Donnell, Mr. Kennedy's appointments secretary, will be in charge of itinerary and other matters. Both filled the same roles in 1960.

As in 1960, Mr. Kennedy, his family and his close associates will direct a campaign that will be independent in some ways of the Democratic National Committee and the regular party organization.

The National Committee is likely to concentrate less upon the Presidential campaign than upon coordinating the entire party effort in 1964. Twenty-four Democratic Senate seats will be at stake — an unusually large number, resulting from the Democratic landslide of 1958.

Although informed sources said no firm decision had been made, there is a distinct possibility that the Democrats may hold their national nominating convention as late as the middle or end of August, 1964.

Long Campaign Not Needed

Their candidate, Mr. Kennedy, is as well known as he is likely to be and hardly needs a long campaign. Nor can an incumbent President safely appear to be giving too much time to partisan campaigning.

No site has been picked for the convention, but Chicago, Atlantic City and Miami Beach are regarded as the likeliest possibilities.

The campaign is still more than a year away, but, in a loosely related step, the White House has moved to increase political coordination between Mr. Kennedy and his Democratic supporters on Capitol Hill.

Paul Southwick, 43 years old, a former newspaperman, has been moved into the White House from the Area Redevelopment Agency in the Commerce Department. Mr. Southwick will be technically a member of Pierre Salinger's White House press office staff.

One of his roles, informed sources said, will be to transmit useful news and information from the White House to members of Congress and to make suggestions to Democratic members of Congress, based on White House information, about publicity benefits they might gain from Presidential actions.

Some sources said Mr. Southwick, experienced in the politically important activities of the Area Redevelopment Agency, would have a wider role as the campaign developed. For one thing, he is expected to do preliminary research on possible issues and opponents for 1964.

Smith in '60 Campaign

The substitution of Mr. Smith for the Attorney General at the head of the Kennedy campaign team would occasion little surprise. As a Cabinet officer, Robert Kennedy would be unlikely to act openly as his brother's campaign manager.

As a trusted adviser to the President, however, he still would be an important figure in 1964. His actual influence on the campaign would be little, if any, less than in 1960.

Mr. Smith was active in President Kennedy's 1958 Senatorial campaign in Massachusetts. He helped organize Kennedy - for - President headquarters here in 1960, was an important fund-raiser for his brother-in-law and assisted in scheduling Mr. Kennedy's extensive campaign travels.

In 1962 he directed the successful Senatorial campaign of Edward M. Kennedy in Massachusetts. He is now serving the Democratic National Committee as a trouble shooter in the key states of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan—all of which elected Republican governors in 1962.

There had been some speculation when Mr. Bailey, a Roman Catholic, was appointed party chairman following Mr. Kennedy's victory in 1960 that he would serve only until the 1964 nominating convention was completed. It was believed that a Protestant chairman would be appointed for the 1964 campaign.

White House sources insist, however, that Mr. Bailey will remain as chairman. This reflects in part their confidence that the religious issue against Mr. Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, will not be raised in 1964.

Speaker to Tell Of Registration Drive for Negroes

Wiley A. Branton, director of the Voter Education Project, will describe the current drive to register Negro voters in Mississippi at a public forum Tuesday night.

Mr. Branton, an attorney formerly of Pine Bluff, Ark., is directing the Atlanta-based project by which various civil rights organizations coordinate their voter registration efforts in the South. He is expected to explain the frustrations which the drive has met in Mississippi and Georgia.

The forum, sponsored by the Public Issues Committee of the United Liberal Church of Atlanta, will be held at 8 p.m. at the Bank of Georgia Auditorium, Pershing Point.

Not in Running, Romney Insists

By CABELL PHILLIPS

(Copyright 1963 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—Gov. George Romney repeated his denial of presidential aspirations Wednesday but at the same time gave the clearest expositions to date of his position on a number of national issues.

In a luncheon speech at the National Press Club, Michigan's chief executive outlined his views on states rights, civil liberties, and medical care in terms that, too many in his audience, put him in the same camp of Republicanism with New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller.

On states rights, the governor said he opposed the concept wherever it was used "to keep things from happening."

On civil rights, he said this country can never realize its responsibilities, "without eliminating this widespread human injustice" such as is being demonstrated currently in Alabama.

He said he favored medical care, "for citizens 65 years of age and over, or younger," who lack the means to provide it for themselves.

As to whether he would "seek or accept" the Republican nomination, he said, "There are no circumstances under which I will seek it." But he did not say whether he would accept it if offered.

Romney came to Washington for his appearance before the National Press Club Wednsday. He was accompanied by a delegation of 52 business and civic leaders who are engaged in the national promotion of "Michigan Week."

As Romney spoke to an audience which included most of Michigan's congressional delegation, a political diversion was occurring in another part of the city. Former vice president Richard M. Nixon was the guest of a group of Republican leaders at a luncheon in the Capitol.

Following the luncheon, Nixon, who has renounced any political ambitions since moving recently to New York from California, told reporters he thought "Eisenhower-Nixon Republicans" should be able to support Sen. Barry Goldwater or "any other prominently mentioned Republican presidential prospect" over a Democrat in 1964.

Judge Grants Delay Motion

Motions were approved by Circuit Judge Arthur Clark, Jr., yesterday to continue until the November term of court, the cases of two white men accused of shooting a Negro vote registration worker.

Attorneys for Wesley Kersey and William H. Greenlee filed a motion asking that the trials be postponed because of tense racial conditions in Mississippi.

Kersey and Greenlee were charged with asault with intent to kill after James Travis, a Student Non-Violent Coordinating Comittee worker, was wounded.

The cases of five Negro students from Misisippi Vocational College, charged with assault, were also continued.

The students, indicted for attempting to run down a group of white boys on a 50-mile hike on February 27 were Murray Bacon, Lorenzo Pleasant, Swancy Brown, Otis Funches and Charles Tuggle.

Judge Clark suggested that a similar motion be filed on behalf of the Negroes after receiving the first motion.

The New York Times 5-23-63

A Job for the President

"I am obligated to carry out the court order." In those unequivocal words President Kennedy set forth yesterday his determination to enforce the admission of two Negroes to the University of Alabama, even if Governor Wallace persists in his threat to stand in the classroom door to bar their entrance.

All believers in legal process will share the President's hope that Mr. Wallace will think better of his defiance and thus avoid the tragic potentialities of another Oxford or another Birmingham. The Governor, for all his bluster, already has wisely substituted recourse to law for open conflict in his dispute with the White House over the propriety of assigning Federal troops to Alabama in connection with the segregationist bombings in Birmingham.

There seems to be no legal device through which Mr. Wallace can longer indulge his desire to keep Alabama the only state in the Union that bars Negroes from its university. It is as much his duty as it is the President's to see that the mandate of the courts is obeyed. The university's administration, trustees, faculty and alumni council long ago made clear their readiness to comply. Prior to Mr. Wallace's election last November, they had set in motion a program intended to guarantee that there would be no repetition of the mob action that marked the brief desegregation of the Alabama campus in 1956, when Miss Autherine Lucy was a student there for three days. It is the arrant racism of the Governor that causes the prospect of trouble now.

If he does not fulfill his legal obligation when the two Negroes present themselves for admission June 10, there seems to us one course of Federal action that will preclude the mass disorders the President so rightly fears. That is for Mr. Kennedy himself, as the man charged with supreme responsibility for the enforcement of Federal law, to accompany the Negro students to the campus and to see that they are enrolled. The force of his presence would be more than that of a division of Federal troops—and more calculated to speed the victory of civilized procedure throughout the South.

Robert Kennedy Consults Negroes Here About North

James Baldwin, Lorraine Hansberry and Lena Horne are Among Those Who Warn Him of 'Explosive Situation'

By LAYHMOND ROBINSON

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy held a secret meeting here yesterday with a group of prominent Negroes to obtain their views on methods of combating segregation and discrimination in the North.

The meeting was held at an undisclosed location in Manhattan. The group reportedly told him that an "explosive situation" had developed in race relations in the North that, potentially, was at least equal to the growing racial strife in the South.

About a dozen Negroes participated in the talk with the President's brother. The group did not include any leaders of civil rights organizations, such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. However, it did include several well-known writers and other professional persons who have served as unofficial spokesmen for their race.

Among those attending were James Baldwin, the novelist and essayist; Lena Horne, the entertainer, and Lorraine Hansberry, the playwright.

Administration Concerned

Several white persons also attended the meeting. One of them was June Shagaloff, N.A.A.C.P. official on school integration matters. However, it was understood she attended in an unofficial capacity at Mr. Baldwin's invitation.

The meeting was said to have been initiated by Mr. Baldwin. Mr. Kennedy's attendance was seen as evidence of the Administration's growing concern over criticism of the civil rights issue voiced by Negroes across the country.

Mr. Baldwin has been sharply critical of President Kennedy for not moving more forcefully in civil rights crises in the South. He has charged that the President has "not used the great prestige of his office as the moral forum it can be."

Fresh Ideas a Goal

Mr. Baldwin is reported to have pressed the Attorney General to use his influence to get the President to make a series of talks to the nation on the civil rights issue.

The novelist had discussed the necessity of such a meeting when he breakfasted Thursday morning with the Attorney General and Burke Marshall, chief of the civil rights division of the Justice Department, at Mr. Kennedy's home in McLean, Va.

Mr. Kennedy, it was said, attended yesterday's talks because he thought the group might present him with some fresh ideas on means of coping with civil rights problems, particularly in dealing with school segregation in the North.

Many observers of race relations in the North have said that the issue of de facto school segregation has reached a point of crisis. Negroes from New York to California have been picketing and boycotting schools that they charge are in fact, although not by law, racially segregated.

The Administration is understood to be trying to work out a blueprint for dealing with these and other racial problems.

Mr. Baldwin, Miss Hansberry and several other participants in yesterday's discussion with Mr. Kennedy are sometimes referred to as "angry young Negroes."

They are generally of the view that the masses of Negroes and whites in this country are headed toward a serious, and probably violent, collision unless segregation and discrimination are quickly eliminated.

Mr. Baldwin is author of a best-selling book on this theme entitled "The Fire Next Time." Miss Hansberry is the author of the play "A Raisin in the Sun," which deals with the efforts of a Negro family to escape life in the slums.

Mr. Marshall was reported to have attended the meeting between Mr. Kennedy and the Negro group.

Negro Voter Drive Set

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 24 — The Democratic National Committee is planning a nationwide drive to get Negro voters registered, particularly in the urban industrial centers.

The aim is to strengthen the party's chances in the 1964 elections by convincing Negroes that the use of the ballot is their most effective weapon in the civil rights struggle.

Officially, the planned registration drive is described as part of an intensive effort to get all eligible citizens, Negro and white, to register in time for the elections. However, the committee has been largely motivated by Negro critics of the Kennedy Administration who have charged it with moving too slowly and too cautiously on the desegregation issue.

The committee appears confident that a majority of the Negro voters will continue to follow the party at the polls, but what it desires is a maximum turnout of Negro voters.

Party Loyalty Expected

Louis Martin, deputy chairman of the committee, who is a Negro, said today that a majority of Negro voters would remain faithful to the party because the Republicans have not offered forward-looking leadership on the racial question.

Mr. Martin, who is in charge of the committee's activities among Negro voters, said that he has already been in touch with many Negro leaders and clergymen to enlist their cooperation in the drive. The clergymen, he said, are expected to play an important role because of their influence among Negroes.

One of the clergymen already approached is Dr. J. H. Jackson, head of the Negro Baptist Association, which says it has a membership of 5,000,000. Another is Dr. Gardner Taylor of Brooklyn, who has contributed $10,000.

Mr. Martin estimated there were 10,000,000 Negroes of voting age in the United States Only 3,500,000 of the 5,000,000 Negroes of voting age in the Northern states are registered, he said. Of the 5,000,000 adult Negroes in the South and Southwest, he said, only 1,500,000 are registered.

Mr. Martin said he would consider it an achievement if the number of registered Negro voters could be increased by 1,000,000 in the next 12 months. But the task, he continued, presents many difficulties because it involves a systematic door-to-door campaign to convince Negroes to enroll.

Mr. Martin said it was also the Administration's hopes to increase the number of Negro and white registrations for both parties because greater participation would contribute to the democratic process.

State's Negro Solon to Head Voting Drive

file Pol. Politics

By CHARLES POU
Atlanta Journal Political Editor

Sen. Leroy Johnson of Atlanta, the first Negro member of the Georgia Legislature in half a century, is going to head up a Democratic party drive to get 1,000,000 or more Negroes registered to vote in the South and Southwest.

He confirmed speculation he will have that job Saturday after it was disclosed the party has under way a nationwide drive to get Negroes eligible to vote in time for the 1964 presidential election.

Sen. Johnson set no timetable on his undertaking. He also said he will merely urge Negroes to register—and then let the two parties fight for their votes.

BUT HE ADDED he personally believes Negroes "will vote with the Democratic party in 1964" and he is confident "that Negroes believe basically in the Democratic party."

Sen. Johnson, an attorney who sprung to national prominence when he was elected last fall to the state's reapportioned Senate, declared that "the basic problem of desegregation can be solved at the ballot box.

RFK, Negroes Hold Heated Rights Talk

File Pro. Politics

LAYHMOND ROBINSON

(c) 1963 New York Times News Service

NEW YORK, May 25 — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy was reported Saturday to have had a "heated" discussion with a group of prominent Negroes Friday over their demands for "radical and forceful" action to eliminate segregation and discrimination in the North.

James Baldwin, Negro novelist and essayist, characterized the "caustic" exchange of views as "significant." But, he added, the Negro group left the meeting convinced that the attorney general did not "understand the full extend of the growing racial strife" in the North.

Some other participants, who asked that their names not be used, said they thought the meeting was a "flop." But Baldwin said it was important because it might serve as the beginning of a "national dialogue" between Negroes and whites on the "explosive civil rights situation in the North."

EFFORTS TO REACH Kennedy to obtain his assessment of the meeting were unsuccessful.

Baldwin, who arranged the secret meeting between the attorney general and the Negro at Kennedy's request, said the group sought to impress on Kennedy the "extremity of the racial situation" in the North.

However, he said, the President's brother seemed intent on defending the courses of action taken by the administration in the civil rights field.

"We told him," Baldwin said, "that though the Kenedy administration has done some things the Eisenhower administration never did, its actions have yet to affect the masses of the Negro people."

Because of this, he said, the group told Kennedy that the administration's approach was "totally inadequate" to avoid deeping racial conflict in the nation.

BALDWIN SAID he disagreed with those who said the meeting was a "failure" or a "flop." He viewed it as "significant and, I hope, beneficial."

Whether it was beneficial or not would depend on what the President and his brother do in the future about ending segregation and discrimination in such things as schools and jobs in the North, he said.

The secret meeting between Kennedy and the Negro group was held at the Kennedy family apartment in New York.

BALDWIN DECLARED the Negro group repeatedly sought to impress on the attorney general that race relations in the North had reached a crisis and that the masses of whites and Negroes were moving toward a serious, and perhaps violent, collision.

They called for "radical and forceful" action by the President and his brother to head off a collision by a sustained attack on school and housing segregation and job discrimination, among other things.

They also proposed that the President make an address or series of addresses to the nation on the issue of Negro rights as one means of stating his "moral commitment" to equal rights.

They also suggested that the President show evidence of personal leadership by escorting two Negroes onto the campus of the University of Alabama on June 10.

ASKED WHAT the attorney general's response was to these suggestions, Baldwin replied: "He didn't get the point."

Baldwin said that though he would not characterize the meeting as a "failure," he thought that a "wide gulf" existed between the attorney general and the Negro group in their respective views on the urgency of attacking segregation and discrimination in the North.

Baldwin's brother, David, an actor, interjected at this point to say, "Mr. Kennedy laughed when we suggested that his brother escort the Negro students to the University of Alabama."

James Baldwin then said: "Well, let's say he didn't get the point."

JAMES BALDWIN, who was interviewed at his West Side apartment, said one of the participants told Kennedy that Negroes would not be too enthusiastic about "fighting to free Cuba from a San Diego Padres baseball player, wearing full uniform, from the front office at Westgate Park.

Castro if their own government could not free them."

He said Kennedy seemed shocked by the statement.

The Negroes meeting with Kennedy did not include any of the well-known figures in the civil right movement, such as Roy Wilkins of the NAACP, Dr. Martin Luther King of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, or James Farmer of the Congress or Racial Equality.

The Negro group, besides Baldwin and his brother, included Lorraine Hansberry, the playwright; Harry Belafonte; Lena Horne; Dr. Kenneth Clark, professor of phychology at City College here; Clarence Jones, Baldwin's lawyer; and Jerome Smith of New Orleans, who has participated in numerous sit-ins and other demonstrations in that city.

State's Negro Solon to Head Voting Drive

Sen. Leroy Johnson of Atlanta, the first Negro member of the Georgia Legislature in half a century, is going to head up a Democratic party drive to get 1,000,000 or more Negroes registered to vote in the South and Southwest.

He confirmed speculation he will have that job Saturday after it was disclosed the party has under way a nationwide drive to get Negroes eligible to vote in time for the 1964 presidential election.

Sen. Johnson set no timetable on his undertaking. He also said he will merely urge Negroes to register—and then let the two parties fight for their votes.

More Kennedy Double Standards

OF

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 27, 1963

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I would like to include, without comment, the following editorial from today's issue of the Chicago Tribune:

WHERE CIVIL RIGHTS DON'T COUNT

Federal troops were recently alerted in the widely publicized battle for civil rights in Alabama, while far out in the Northwest the Kennedy administration has quietly sacrificed civil rights in order to further its own public power program.

Representative JOHN P. SAYLOR, of Pennsylvania, a Republican member of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, has accused the administration of violating the President's own civil rights order of March 6, 1961, in contracts signed last month for the construction of a $122 million generating plant at Hanford, Wash., to be powered by steam from the Atomic Energy Commission's nearby plutonium reactor.

The Hanford plant is to have a capacity of 800,000 kilowatts and will be the biggest atomic power plant in the world. More to the point, it is regarded as the keystone of a nationwide public power transmission system envisioned by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Udall, and the public power lobby.

Private power interests oppose this bureaucratic scheme and managed, through Congress, to prevent the use of public money for construction of the Hanford plant. But last fall Congress authorized its construction by a group of Washington State public utility districts organized as the Washington Public Power Supply System. The plant is to be financed by revenue bonds.

Congress gave its approval after studying the proposed contracts, which contained the usual clauses providing for cancellation of the contract if contractors did not comply with Mr. Kennedy's order against racial discrimination in employment.

Then, according to Mr. SAYLOR, bankers told the power supply system that it would have trouble selling its bonds if the contracts contained these clauses. So an added clause found it way mysteriously into the contracts before they were signed last month. This clause, now a matter of public record, says that in case of "noncompliance with the nondiscrimination clauses of this agreement or with any [Federal] rules, regulations, or orders, this agreement may not be canceled in whole or in part so long as such cancellation would impair the security of the revenue bonds issued by the supply system."

In short, the Government is more interested in getting the money for its powerplant, and getting it at favorable rates, than in carrying out its own civil rights program.

"There must have been a lot of soul searching and midnight oil burned," according to Mr. SAYLOR, before the administration decided to sacrifice civil rights "on the altar of a greedy centralized government."

Soul searching may not be the right word. It doesn't require either a soul or any searching to figure out that in the Northwest there are many opportunities for the Government to invade the field of electric power, and few Negro votes.

Theaters To Hear Robert Kennedy's Integration Appeal

By ANTHONY LEWIS

(Copyright 1963 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy is opening a series of meetings Monday to explore new ways of advancing equal rights for Negroes.

He will talk Monday with a group of theater owners. He will urge immediate steps to end discrimination at movie houses in the South that exclude or segregate Negroes.

A source close to Kennedy Sunday described a meeting the attorney general had in New York Friday with Negro intellectuals as unfortunate. But he said it was silly to dramatize this failure when Kennedy had held many unannounced meetings on the racial issue over the last two years.

SUGGESTED BY AUTHOR

The attorney general and his assistant for civil rights, Burke Marshall, went to the Friday meeting at the suggestion of James Baldwin, the Negro writer. Baldwin had expressed the urgent demand of Negroes—especially in the North—for equality.

There was a good deal of bitterness and finger-waving at the meeting. At one point the attorney general was told that President John F. Kennedy personally should lead Negro students onto the campus of the University of Alabama when it is desegrated next month.

The attorney general dismissed that idea as "an act" and said, "We're not interested in acts, we're interested in results." Some others at the meeting, not including Baldwin, reacted angrily.

CALCULATED RISK

The government source said that in retrospect it would have been better not to have had the meeting. But there is always the risk of failure, he said, and it should be seen in the perspective of many successful, unpublicized sessions with whites and Negroes.

"People won't talk if their names will come out, they don't want to be in the front lines," a spokesman said. He added that this was particularly true in the South.

The president of the theater owners of America, John H. Stembler, disclosed Saturday night that he and some of his associates had been invited to meet with the attorney general Monday.

The Justice department said it had no objection to others disclosing the meetings but that it would not comment on them. A spokesman said there would be more sessions later in the week but he would not identify them.

Intense activity on the racial issue is now taking place at many levels of the department. There is evidently a feeling of urgency about the need for action to head off both Negro and white extremists.

Legislation is being drafted, but that job is not proving an easy one. Congressional testimony by the attorney general has been postponed from this Wednesday until June 12 to allow more time for preparing the new bills.

The legislation will deal with segregation in schools and at lunch counters and other commercial facilities. It will be designed to let the federal government play a larger role as an initiator of legal action to end segregation, and as a conciliator of racial clashes.

Robert Kennedy Calls for Voluntary Desegregation by Southern Group

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 27 — The Administration tried today to persuade Southern theater owners to desegregate their theatres voluntarily.

After a 90-minute meeting with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, the theater group referred questions to him.

Mr. Kennedy's press officer, Edwin O. Guthman, said there had been a frank and "extremely useful" exchange of views.

The Attorney General also met for the first time James H. Meredith, the Negro student whose admission to the University of Mississippi last September was accompanied by rioting and two deaths. Mr. Meredith said that more effective desegregation laws were needed.

The theater men represented chains or associations of chains that account for about 80 per cent of the South's movie houses. Their spokesman was James H. Stembler, president of the Theater Owners of America.

Owners Appreciative

Mr. Guthman reported that the owners, including Mr. Stenbler, "expressed appreciation that there would be a cooperative attitude on the part of the Government" toward attempts by the owners to solve their own problems.

Mr. Kennedy and Burke Marshall, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Civil Rights Division, urged the owners to anticipate problems and work them out locally without the pressure of demonstrations. The Attorney General was reported to have said that the problem was not confined to the South, although the focus of the problem is there now.

Mr. Guthman said the meeting had been "very cordial" and the participants "quite candid."

The Attorney General has met with hotel groups and plans other meetings as part of an Administration policy to speed desegregation of public places.

Mr. Meredith had come to Washington for a television show, "Meet the Press," last night. He visited with the Attorney General for "five or 10 minutes" and then left for Mississippi.

The Mississippi student, answering questions, said he had no panaceas to offer as a solution of the integration problem. He said legislation with "teeth" was necessary and that there was "a great deal of work to be done."

N.A.A.C.P. Sues to Reduce Representation in House for States Denying Vote

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 28—The Kennedy Administration is considering legislation to prohibit racial discrimination in stores and restaurants selling products that have crossed state lines.

A draft of this proposal is under study in the Justice Department. President Kennedy's final decision whether to ask Congress for the legislation is expected within a few days, probably next week.

The legal basis for such a statute would be the Constitution's grant of power to the Federal Government to regulate commerce among the states. This invoking of the interstate power could cover virtually all significant commercial establishments in the country.

In the United States economy today, almost every product touches interstate commerce in some way.

Hotels would also be within the scope of such legislation on the ground that they provide rooms for persons traveling in interstate commerce.

Meanwhile, a suit was filed in the Federal District Court here today to reduce the representation in the House of Representatives of states that deny the vote to Negroes.

The suit by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sought to enforce a provision of the 14th Amendment that requires such a reduction in House membership. The provision has never been applied.

Important Decision Looms

The suit would have the Census Bureau tabulate the next Congressional apportionment, after the census of 1970, and then reduce the representation for states discriminating against Negro voters. One expert estimated that this procedure could cost the 11 states of the old Confederacy 25 of the 120 House seats they now hold.

Any civil rights bill proposed by the Administration under the commerce power would probably contain some limitations on its coverage. It might, for example, exempt businesses under a certain size. It would almost certainly exclude genuinely private clubs.

Whether he proposes such legislation, and how he does it, are among the most important political decisions the President has faced for a long time. A debate is already developing within the Administration.

Kennedy Delays Rights Bill A Week to Lay Groundwork

By E. W. KENWORTHY

(Copyright 1963 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—President John F. Kennedy decided Monday to delay for a week his civil rights message to Congress.

He had hoped to get his new legislative proposals to Congress Tuesday. He leaves on Wednesday for a Western trip that will keep him out of Washington the rest of the week.

Monday's decision was based on a number of factors. One was that last-minute tinkering with the draft bills and with the accompanying presidential message was still going on, and it was deemed wise not to rush so important a matter.

The President felt also that it would be helpful to the legislation's chances to go ahead first with a number of scheduled conferences. He will meet Tuesday's for example, with business executives with large holdings in the South. His brother, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, will continue his meetings with other groups involved in the civil rights picture.

Tuesday's guest list at the White House included Lucien E. Oliver, Atlanta, vice president of Sears Roebuck & Co.; J. H. Harrison, general manager, Wilby Kincey Circuit, Atlanta; E. D. Martin, president, Martin Theater Circuit, Columbus; C. L. Patrick, assistant to the president, Martin Theater Circuit, Columbus, and John Stembler, president, Georgia Theaters, Atlanta.

The week will also be used to try to build a favorable climate at the Capitol. Democratic congressional leaders, who were briefed on the civil rights by the President Monday, will discuss the legislation with others in both parties.

The decision to put off his message was especially difficult for the President because 24 House Republicans Monday introduced their own legislation to bar racial discrimination in public accommodations. They were plainly intent on beating the administration to the legislative hopper.

The administration's legislation is expected to include two main proposals.

One would deal with racial discrimination in theaters, hotels, lunch counters and stores—the issue that has sparked recent demonstrations by Negroes in Birmingham, Ala., Jackson, Miss., and other Southern cities.

The second will seek to speed the slow progress of school desegregation, possibly by authorizing the federal government to help formulate desegregation plans and conciliate disputes.

Shortly after Kennedy returned here Monday morning from a weekend at Camp David, Md., black limousines bearing Democratic leaders began drawing up to the west wing of the White House for an unscheduled meeting.

Afterward the leaders were extraordinarily tight-lipped. House speaker, John W. McCormack, D-Mass., would say only that civil rights legislation was discussed "in a general way."

Later, however, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., assistant Senate Democratic leader, who had been called back from Minnesota to attend the meeting, said there had been "detailed discussion" of civil rights proposals which would go to the Hill "later this week."

By implication McCormack acknowledged that a civil rights bill, which is almost certain to run into a Southern filibuster in the Senate if it passes the House, would protract the session.

"Of course, the session is going to be a long one, as you know," McCormack said.

After returning to the Captiol, Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson went into an immediate conference with Representatives Carl Albert of Oklahoma and Hale Boggs of Alabama, the Democratic leader and whip of the House.

KENNEDY SPEEDS CIVIL RIGHTS BILL; PLANS A MESSAGE

NYT 6-3-63

Hopes to Get Program Ready for Congress Tomorrow Before Going on Trip

Pres Politics

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 2 — President Kennedy hopes to send to Congress this Tuesday a special message proposing broad civil rights legislation.

White House aides said today that only final drafting of the bill and last-minute polishing of the accompanying message remained to be done. The pressure is on to clear the obstacles tomorrow.

Mr. Kennedy has decided to use the form of a written Presidential message to Congress for his new civil rights proposals, rather than any special device. Aides said he had given no serious consideration to a personal appearance at the Capitol.

Nevertheless, the new proposals will bear the stamp of urgency. They have been rushed to completion since the outbreak of racial turmoil in Birmingham, Ala., last month—and under the impetus of the growing impatience of Negroes there and elsewhere.

Starts Trip Wednesday

The President is scheduled to leave early Wednesday for a western tour that will take the rest of the week. His aim is to get the civil rights message to the Capitol before he takes off.

The principal new Administration proposal is expected to be a bill prohibiting racial discrimination against customers by stores, hotels, theaters, restaurants and other businesses dealing in a significant way with interstate commerce.

This measure is expected to exclude the smallest local enterprises. It may concentrate on interstate chains, businesses serving interstate highways and large department stores and other major enterprises.

In addition to prohibiting denials of service on account of race, the bill would carry its own enforcement device. This will probably be an authorization for the Justice Department to seek injunctions against noncomplying stores.

Fearful of Violence

The Administration's feeling is that segregation at lunch counters and in similar places of public accommodation is a major irritant causing rising racial tension.

Demonstrations are mounting. They have produced desegregation in some areas, but the Administration is convinced that the possibility of violence is real. It wants to provide a legal outlet.

In addition to the public accommodations provisions, the new legislative proposals are expected to include one designed to speed the lagging pace of school desegregation.

What form this will take has not been disclosed. One possibility is a measure to bring the Federal Government actively into the desegregation effort by letting it help prepare plans and help conciliate disputes.

The President sent a first civil rights message to Congress on Feb. 28. It called for these three steps:

¶Legislation to expedite voting suits in the Federal courts and to let temporary referees register Negroes while the suits were pending.

¶Authorization for the Federal Government to provide technical and financial aid to school districts that are desegregating.

¶Extension of the Civil Rights Commission, now scheduled to go out of business Sept. 30, for four years.

Voting has been the principal emphasis of the Kennedy Administration's civil rights efforts, as it was of the Eisenhower Administration's, the feeling was that the ballot would give Negroes in the South the leverage to get equal rights in other fields.

But recent events have persuaded the President and especially his brother, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, that broader legislation should be pushed now.

Congress Favorable

The mood in Congress is regarded as generally receptive, although Suthern opposition is not expected to be milder than usual. The demonstrations at Birmingham and other places have made civil rights a more urgent topic at the Capitol than for some years.

Four Republican members of the House Judiciary Committee accused the Administration today of "foot-dragging" on civil rights.

Representatives John V. Lindsay of Manhattan, William T. Cahill of New Jersey, Clark MacGregor of Minnesota and Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland announced that they would introduce civil rights legislation of their own tomorrow.

The Republican bill would prohibit discrimination by all businesses authorized by a state or locality to supply food, amusement, accommodations or services to the public. It would also authorize the Justice Department to sue on behalf of any individual constitutional rights.

Other business in Congress this week is expected to be of less than major importance.

Kefauver Holds Hearing Today on Anti-Kennedy Elector Plan

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP) —An investigation into a movement that seeks to deny President Kennedy Southern support in 1964 was ordered today by Senator Estes Kefauver.

The Tennessee Senator said in a statement that the Constitutional Amendments subcommittee would seek public testimony tomorrow on efforts in five states to free Presidential electors from even a moral obligation of voting for the candidate heading either party's national ticket.

The subcommittee will vote June 12 on a series of proposed constitutional amendments to change the electoral system.

Mr. Kefauver named Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia as states in which he said new election laws permit the choice of unpledged electors. He said that at least one house of the state legislatures in Florida and Louisiana has passed similar bills.

Kefauver Notes Impact

"This could result in the removal of these states, representing a total of 53 electoral votes, from the electoral equilibrium which has heretofore existed, with the possibility that the Presidential election could be thrown into an entirely different arena, the House of Representatives," he said.

Unless one candidate collects 270 electoral votes in 1964, the decision on the winner would be passed to the House, where each state delegation would have a single vote in choosing the President.

Mr. Kennedy won in 1960 with 303 electoral votes, including 27 from Alabama, Georgia and Louisiana. This was 41 more than the 262 total he needed then. Florida gave its 10 votes to former Vice President Richard M. Nixon. Mississippi, Alabama and Oklahoma contributed a total of 15 to Senator Harry F. Byrd, Democrat of Virginia.

The unpledged elector movement has been spearheaded by Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi. Governor Barnett advocates primaries to let the voters choose between unpledged Democratic Presidential electors and those pledged to support the national Democratic nominee. He said the campaign was directed toward electing "a conservative President who believes in constitutional government and the rights of the states to control and direct their own affairs."

Senator Kefauver said Prof. James McGregor Burns of Williams College, one of President Kennedy's biographers, would be the first witness. He listed Dr. Paul T. David of the University of Virginia and Dr. Robert G. Dixon Jr., of the George Washington School of Law as among others.

Mr. Kefauver noted that seven proposed constitutional amendments pending before the subcommittee fell into four categories.

These include retention of the method of unit voting by states on the Presidency but elimination of the elector's office, election of electors by Congressional districts, with two chosen at large in each state, division of each state's electoral vote on the basis of its popular vote for President, and abolition of the Electoral College in favor of direct election of Presidents by popular vote.

The subcommittee held extensive hearings on the proposals in 1961. Mr. Kefauver said he thought that only a day's testimony updating developments would be required to determine whether modifications were needed "to maintain a fair balance of political power."

Inspection Appeal Is Lost By Mississippi Registrars

General Records

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP) —Voting registrars of three Mississippi counties were denied today a Supreme Court review of an order requiring production of their records for inspection by Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

The order, by the Federal District Court in Mississippi, was issued under a section of the 1960 Civil Rights Act. Mr. Kennedy based his demand for the records on information "tending to show" discrimination against Negroes who wanted to register and vote.

The three registrars said the demand was for more than the law required. They charged that Mr. Kennedy was engaged "in a grand fishing expedition."

The appeal was filed by the registrars of Lauderdale, Madison and Hinds Counties. Attorney General Joe T. Patterson of Mississippi was a signer.

WASHINGTON, June 5 (UPI)—President Kennedy appeared Wednesday to be making progress in selling business executives on the need for voluntary desegregation of their establishments to avoid racial demonstrations.

The President met Tuesday with 100 executives of firms with outlets in the South to urge them to speed desegregation. He seemed to have convinced a number of them that this should be done promptly.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson joined the President in the 45-minute conference at the White House with the businessmen.

Milton L. Elsberg of Alexandria, Va., president of Drug Fair Stores, said the consensus of the executives was that the desegregation requested by Kennedy "must be done and done right now."

The tone of the meeting he said, was that "this is something which must be done in a matter of days" to counter the rising tide of Negro demands.

Sumner Redstone, president of Redstone Management, Boston, said the temper of the meeting was a "general endorsement" of the President's proposals and a great deal of approval of the objectives.

Joseph E. Chastain, president of the Lintz Department Stores based in Dallas, Tex., said he thought the overall sense of the meeting supported cooperation with the President in attempting to desegregate commercial facilities as rapidly as possible.

The President was reported to have said he realized this would be more difficult in some locales than in others. He said he was considering legislation to desegregate public accommodations because it might be necessary to have the force of law to guarantee equal facilities.

Chastain said the attorney general read a list of cities the administration regarded as "problem centers," and mentioned Dallas, Chicago, Philadelphia and New York.

WASHINGTON—President John F. Kennedy received from a delegation of about 100 businessmen Tuesday an encouraging report on voluntary desegregation of public accommodations.

He also heard the businessmen express doubts as to the need for his propsed bills to bar racial discrimination in restaurants, theaters, hotels and other such establishments.

There were no indications, however, that Kennedy had changed his mind about submitting such legislation to Congress, or about proposing another measure to speed school desegregation.

Instead, the White House announced that a civil rights message definitely would be sent to Congress "early next week."

White House sources would not term this a delay, although it had been generally expected that the message and accompanying legislation would go to Capitol Hill Tuesday.

Kennedy is leaving Washington Wednesday morning for speaking engagements, weapons demonstrations and naval maneuvers in Colorado, New Mexico and California. He will not return to the White House until early Sunday.

RUSSELL ON PLANE

Aboard Kennedy's plane on the flight west Wednesday will be Sen. Richard Russell, D.-Ga., leader of Southern senators. He is the chairman of the Armed Forces Committee and is accompanying Kennedy in that capacity; but the trip will provide an opportunity for the two to discuss civil rights legislation as well.

The businessmen who met in the East Room of the White House for about an hour late Tuesday were mostly owners or managers of chains of hotels, theaters, restaurants, variety stores and other enterprises with outlets in the South.

NO REPORT

There was no official White House report on the meeting, conducted by the President, Vice President Lyndon Johnson and Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

Most of those who attended agreed later that the general approach of the Kennedy brothers and Johnson had been to assert the importance of voluntary action on the part of business leaders to open their facilities and jobs in their establishment to all races.

It also was generally agreed that most of those in attendance had agreed with this course, and welcomed the President's iniative. About 10 or 15 men were reported to have expressed this view.

MISSISSIPPI VERSION

On the other hand, a number of Southerners emerging from the White House appeared reluctant to discuss the meeting or to give their views. Two who said only that they were from Charlotte, N.C., refused even to identify themselves.

But T. G. Solomon, of McComb, Miss., president of Gulf State Theaters, spoke up. His theaters, he said, could not be desegregated voluntarily "in the foreseeable future."

P.O. Negroes Jumped Over Ranking Whites in Dallas

DALLAS, Tex., June 5 (AP) — Three Negro postal employes have been promoted to supervisory jobs in the Dallas post office although at least 53 white employes ranked higher on a merit rating system, the Dallas News said in a copyrighted story Wednesday.

The News quoted postal officials at the regional level as saying the promotions were made under an "equal employment opportunities program" rather than the Post Office Department's merit promotion system.

Indications were, the News said, that the word to promote the three came from Washington and was not a regional or Dallas decision.

IN THE CASES of the three, the News said the top Negro in a supervisory merit list of about 400 was ranked No. 54 and the other two were ranked lower on the list. The first 53 men on the list were white.

The trio will be the first Negro supervisors in the Dallas post office in operating jobs. All will assume their new jobs Saturday. There are about 180 to 190 supervisor jobs in the office which has 3,000 employes, about 20 per cent of which are Negroes.

The United Federation of Post Clerks, which is affiliated with the AFL-CIO, has lodged a protest with the Civil Service Commission on the matter. However, the federation is questioning the bypassing of the 53 employes who headed the list and not the promotion of the Negroes.

Postmaster W. B. Hudson of Dallas listed the three and their new jobs as: Buford R. Tyler, route inspector; Andrew J. Calloway, foreman of mails at the terminal annex, and Herschel Gillins, supervisor at the Merchandise Mart station.

PRESIDENT CHIDED ON VOTE REFORMS

His Biographer Accuses Him of 'Detachment'

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 4 — A political scientist, who sees democracy caught between deadlock and drift, predicted today a serious constitutional crisis in this decade unless there was an effective reform of governmental machinery.

James MacGregor Burns also chided President Kennedy, about whom he wrote a biography, for taking "a rather detached view of Congressional and other forms of reforms" in the last two years.

"I believe," Professor Burns told a Senate subcommittee, "that few reforms, big or small, are possible until he throws himself into the battle with the energy and understanding that he displayed in the famous Senate battle over Electoral College reform in 1956."

Two Kennedys Urge Washington Youths To Remain in School

WASHINGTON, June 5 (UPI) —Two Kennedy brothers today led a group of prominent speakers into the Washington slum areas in an effort to persuade young people to stay in school.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, addressed students at two junior high schools as part of a massive Administration attack on juvenile delinquency and the related problem of dropouts from school.

The Kennedy brothers were joined by Senator Paul Douglas, Democrat of Illinois, Education Commissioner Francis Keppel, Senator George McGovern, Democrat of South Dakota, United States Information Chief Edward R. Murrow and Secretary of Interior Stewart Udall.

The talks were part of a plan by the Attorney General to get Administration officials into the field in tackling the delinquency problem. The Attorney General hoped the display of big names would show the students "someone is interested in their problems," a Justice Department spokesman said.

The Attorney General told students at Hart Junior High School in southeast Washington that young people who dropped out of school not only earned less than those who finished but often found it hard to get jobs.

Senator Kennedy spoke to students at Terrell Junior High School and Paul Junior High. Most of the schools visited by the Administration officials are Negro schools.

Civil Rights Program

The explosiveness of civil rights as a political issue explains President Kennedy's caution in submitting to Congress his proposals for stronger laws against racial discrimination. The President is understandably eager to line up maximum advance support—North and South, Democratic and Republican, public and private. The President has to guard against too greatly diluting his proposals in the effort to appease those who want no real extension of Federal authority to implement constitutional guarantees.

The principal goal of the President's bills is to ban racial exclusion in stores, hotels, restaurants, theaters and other businesses involved in interstate commerce. A program to speed the pace of school desegregation also is reported to be under consideration. Both approaches are desirable complements to the Supreme Court's recent decisions emphasizing the primacy of Federal rule in protecting civil rights in these fields.

Even if it is accepted in toto, it is improbable that the President's program will eliminate demonstrations or discontent. The danger of more violence will be vastly increased, however, if the Negroes become convinced that the program has been watered down and that the President is not wholeheartedly committed to its adoption as a matter of moral right, rather than of politics.

Under these circumstances, it is unfortunate that the President has decided to delay the submission of his bills until next week. It is doubly unfortunate that he will be away in Europe at a crucial stage in the mobilization of national opinion in support of a strong program. For reasons given above, the state of affairs overseas makes this an inopportune time for Mr. Kennedy to go. The fatefulness of the debate over civil rights makes it a critical time for him to stay.

Measure Sought To Ease Tension

By MARGARET SHANNON

Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 6—The Kennedy administration has made a command decision on civil rights legislation. It plans an all-out fight for new laws to meet Negro demands.

The present activity and build-up therefore are no feint. There are good and authoritative reasons to believe that this is the real thing.

The administration is known to believe that it must move to ease racial tensions and curb Negro demonstrations before tragic violence occurs.

The Kennedys are said to feel it is important for the South to recognize that changes must come. The question, then, is how.

The choice as the administration sees it, is between relatively peaceful transition or continued struggle, perhaps even bloody fighting.

PRESIDENT Kennedy and his right hand man in civil rights matters, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, expect a tough fight in Congress, especially in the Senate. They can cite Georgia—despite Albany—as an example of how a state can cope progressively with racial change. They regard the "moderate" as the comer in politics in Georgia and other areas in the South.

But after a conference last week with key senators, including Georgia's Richard B. Russell, the attorney general is said to have concluded that Sen. Russell has not been overwhelmed by the New Look in politics in Georgia.

PRESIDENT Kennedy will send legislation to Congress, probably next week, to:

(1) Give the Justice Department greater jurisdiction in speeding school desegregation.

(2) Prevent racial discrimination in public accommodations such as theaters, hotels and restaurants, through use of federal authority over interstate commerce.

The administration does not expect changes to come overnight in racial patterns in schools and public accommodations in the South. It hopes Negro leaders will exhibit more patience, however, if the legislation passes.

The Kennedy's are realists enough to know that the federal government cannot desegregate all the schools in the South unless it is ready to occupy the South with military forces — and of course there is no such thought.

There is calculated risk in the drive for legislation. Besides what the controversy may do for the rest of the administration's legislative program, failure to get new civil rights laws might inflame Negroes anew.

Mr. Kennedy was reported not to have noticed any weakening in Sen. Russell's long stand against civil rights legislation.

Sen. Russell is leader of the group of Southern senators who traditionally filibuster against such bills. The conference apparently produced no signs that the attorney general was able to bring the Georgian around to his way of thinking on anything.

THE KENNEDY decision to push for civil rights legislation is a change of pace—and an admission in itself that the approach of conciliation and negotiation is not a complete success.

The administration is in a bind, partly of its own making. It was so confident for so long that it could handle the racial crisis with talk that the failure of its methods is quite a jolt.

The Kennedy's now think they have no choice except to go through with the legislative efforts. The social and political consequences of doing nothing are regarded as worse than the consequences of trying to do something.

The administration has backed off from direct action in some areas of segregation—mainly in public accommodation—by saying it does not have authority to end discrimination. Now, after almost two and a half years in office, it is being taunted with the accusation it hasn't even asked for legislation to give it the authority it complains of not having.

THE PLAN is to continue present efforts, as well as to seek new legislation. President Kennedy may take to television to promote racial progress and peace.

RIGHTS

Behind-the-scenes efforts to get private business to lower racial barriers and provide new opportunities for Negro employment will continue and will be stepped up.

A new series of developments has given the Negro drive for rights a momentum that the administration thinks cannot be ignored.

The success of demonstrations in forcing action, competition between Negro organizations for leadership and recognition and the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision all have figured in the picture.

THE ADMINISTRATION is particularly fearful that Negro activities may break out all over the country—especially in the North, where the administration believes actually that the local people are less adequately prepared to deal with the situation than in many Southern communities.

The role of Martin Luther King Jr. of Atlanta is regarded by the Kennedys as a fortunate circumstance because of his non-violent approach.

CALIFORNIA EYED FOR GOLDWATER

Atla. Journal 6-6-63

Pres. Politics

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, June 6 (AP) — Former Sen. William F. Knowland's prediction that Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., could carry California may alter the odds in the 1964 GOP presidential nomination derby.

Goldwater, who insists he isn't competing for the nomination, expressed surprise at Knowland's designation of him as the "likely" choice to be the party's standard bearer next year.

"That's further than he has ever gone before," Goldwater told a reporter. The Arizona senator declined additional comment.

Knowland won enthusiastic applause when he told Los Angeles County Young Republicans Tuesday he believes Goldwater could carry California and win the presidency.

THERE HAS BEEN increasing speculation that Knowland, who surrendered his Senate seat and his post as minority leader for an unsuccessful try for the California governorship in 1958, may try to head up a party unity slate of convention delegate candidates in the state primary a year from now.

Goldwater said he knew nothing about that except that he personally had tried to get Knowland interested in running against Democratic Sen. Clair Engle in 1964 and hadn't succeeded.

Mrs. Knowland was said to be opposing the return of her husband, now an executive of the Oakland Tribune, to political life. However, a contest for election as a convention delegate might fall in a different category.

THE 86-VOTE California delegation could hold the key to the 1964 nomination. Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon predicted recently that the man who won the state's primary would be the nominee.

A slate committed to Knowland as a favorite son would give Goldwater's backers hope of gaining California's support.

The prize is particularly attractive to those who are booming Goldwater. As of now the Arizona senator has some solid support in the South, Midwest and West, but lacks any big state backing.

If Goldwater had California behind him, his rooters think he could match New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's convention strength and by such a showing pick up support from fence-sitting delegates waiting for the bandwagon to roll.

Kennedy 'Watchdog' Hits RFK's Sons' School

BATON ROUGE, La., June 5 (AP)—Rep. Wellborn Jack, a Caddo Parish segregationist, serves as a one-man legislative watchdog on the doings of the Kennedys.

They're a frequent target of his wrath.

He got up and told the Louisiana House that Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy has applied to a private, segregated school in Maryland for admission of his three eldest sons.

"I called the cook at the school to find out that there are not any Negro boys in the school," the legislator said.

Jack quoted from a news story that said Kennedy had applied for admission of his sons in the Landon School for Boys in Bethesda, Md., near Washington.

"The story says that there was no immediate information available on whether the Landon school had any Negro students," Jack explained. "I knew I couldn't get any information from the school master, so I placed a long-distance call to the cook."

'RFK's Sons Won't Go To Landon

WASHINGTON, June 6 (AP)—Atty. Gen. and Mrs. Robert F. Kennedy are hunting for a new school to send their three older boys to, but on second thought have decided against a private boarding school which has no Negro pupils.

The boys now attend Our Lady of Victory, a racially integrated Roman Catholic school in the District of Columbia.

An official of the Landon School for boys in suburban Bethesda, Md., disclosed Saturday that Kennedy had applied for admission for the three boys and that Robert Jr., 9, had gone so far as to take the school's entrance test. The examinations for Joseph, 10, and David, 7, were put off because of mumps, he said.

Landon's headmaster said the school has no Negro pupils but does have a policy against barring any boy because of race or religion. The boarding school, he said, has a long waiting list and bases admission on competitive examinations.

A spokesman for the attorney general said the Kennedys haven't made up their minds about where the boys will be enrolled but that Landon is no longer under consideration.

Red China Calls Kennedy Racist; Steps Up Attacks on Negro Issue

Pres. Debbie 4-4T 6-6-63

By JACQUES NEVARD

Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, June 5—Communist China stepped up its efforts today to use the United States racial crisis to spread anti-Americanism in underdeveloped nations.

To embellish its version of events in the American South in the last two months, Peking cast the Kennedy Administration as "an upholder of racial discrimination." It said the Administration was "chiefly responsible for the anti-Negro violence now afflicting the United States."

President Kennedy and his Administration were accused of racist policies against which, it was said, "awakening" Negroes were struggling. That accusation appeared in the Jenmin Jihpao (People's Daily), Communist China's principal propaganda paper.

Mocks 'Hollow Slogans'

"It is significant that the Kennedy Administration shows up for what it is on this domestic issue of racism, just when it is going all out to force its way into Africa under the hollow slogans of 'democracy and freedom,'" the paper said.

In an article signed "Commentator," the paper asserted:

"President Kennedy plays a despicable role in the racial discrimination and persecution in the United States. The high-sounding promises which he made to the Negroes before his accession to power turned out to be nothing but a cheap hoax. Since he was sworn in, he has done nothing to better the predicament in which American Negroes find themselves."

It charged that Mr. Kennedy "has persistency refused to take effective action against the atrocities committed by the local authorities and racist thugs."

Hypocrisy Charged

The battle for equal rights being waged by American Negroes, it said, "is a fresh reminder to the people of the whole world of the hypocrisy of the United States, and serves to expose the Kennedy Administration's reactionary character and its duplicity."

The People's Daily charged that America's "ruling class" has historically called for the subjugation of Negroes. Even today, it said, "cheap manpower provided by Negroes remains a principal source of profit for Wall Street."

The article went on:

"In addition, the monopolists can use discrimination against the Negroes to stir up racial conflicts, thereby driving a wedge between black and white working people, reducing their class strength in face of the ruling class.

"That is why, in the last analysis, the Kennedy Administration, like its predecessors, does all it can to maintain and encourage the system of racial discrimination."

U.S. Allots 2.5 Million to Tutor Negro Pupils in Virginia County

Pres. Politics

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 5—The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has opened an intensive, five-year "catch-up" program of basic education for about 1,500 Negro children in Prince Edward County, Va.

Local authorities in Prince Edward have abandoned public education rather than submit to integration orders of the Federal courts.

The National Institute of Mental Health, one of the department's research agencies, will approve a $2,500,000 grant this week to a private specialist in theories of rapid learning.

His job will be to teach illiterate Negro children, some of whom have reached the age of 10 without ever being in a classroom, to read and write at a sixth-grade level.

The specialist is Dr. Myron Woolman, director of the Institute of Educational Research, Inc., of Washington. He will have $600,000 at his disposal for the first year of an elaborate program that is expected to call for temporary classrooms in Prince Edward, either in prefabricated buildings or trailers.

Trained Missile Crews

Dr. Woolman said he would have classrooms facilities ready and teachers at work by Aug. 1.

He has used what he calls "conceptual" teaching methods to train Nike missile operators for the Air Force and employes of the Bell Telephone Laboratories.

Recently he also succeeded in teaching "untrainable" retarded children to read and write in Washington and Baltimore.

Dr. Woolman said the success of this experiment had been "rapturous." He expects similar results from "normal but educationally deprived children" in Virginia.

The $2,500,000 grant marks the first time the Government has acted to provide for the education of children deprived of schooling because of resistance to Federal court integration orders. Prince Edward is the only locality in the United States that has closed all public schools to prevent integration.

Reading Method Described

Both Dr. Woolman and Federal scientists who supported the grant stressed that it was "purely for scientific research."

Dr. Woolman's "progressive choice reading method," for example, is still carefully described as "experimental" despite its apparent success.

Fundamentally, the method is a highly complex departure from other "easy" or "high speed" reader training methods.

In an interview, Dr. Woolman stressed repeatedly that his wor would be "pure science," and that he would not engage in a "political or emotional tug-of-war."

However, a high Federal official conceded that there was "a delicate precedent" involved in introducing what amounts to a Federally sponsored school program into Virginia.

This spokesman said the Kennedy Administration had been "scratching around for ways to act on our very deep concern for these children." He went on:

This program is clearly within the framework of our authority. It is a scientific opportunity and we are playing it deadpan."

Termed Inevitable

At a news conference in Richmond today, Gov. Albertis S. Harrison said it was "inevitable that someone" would have to go into Prince Edward and "do some remedial work."

The Governor said he had hoped that this would be done "at the state or local level, but for reasons that everyone knows, it was not." He did not elaborate.

A spokesman for the National Association of Colored People in Richmond said he welcomed the move, adding: "It is what we have been asking for."

Other Federal programs may follow in Prince Edward. The United States Office of Education has already awarded a $75,000 grant to the University of Michigan for a survey of the country's educational needs.

Senators Debating Unpledged Electors

Atla. Const, 6-6-62

Pres. Politics

By REG MURPHY
Constitution Political Editor

National politicians fretted Wednesday over Georgia's unpledged electors law—a law which expired in 1962 and apparently won't be revived.

Political sources said Georgia will operate under a law which provides that the names of the candidates for each party "may" be placed on the ballot with the names of the electors.

In 1960, the names did not appear and for a while Gov. Ernest Vandiver leaned toward unpledged electors before pledging his loyalty and speaking for President John F. Kennedy at Warm Springs.

But in other Southern states, particularly Alabama and Mississippi, drives already are under way to keep their electors unpledged. Both gave some electoral votes to Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia in 1960.

The national concern cropped up again when Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee headed a Senate committee's investigation into possible constitutional amendments to stop Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi from denying Kennedy some of the South's electoral votes next year.

Kefauver said he thought the country ought to be concerned that Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi have adopted laws that have "taken away even any moral obligation for presidential electors to vote for party nominees."

SIMILAR MEASURES

He noted that similar measures have been approved by one house of the Florida and Louisiana legislatures.

Sen. Barry Goldwater then said that if Southern states want to choose unpledged electors in the 1964 presidential contest there is no reason why they shouldn't.

Goldwater, being pushed by conservatives as a potential candidate for next year's Republican nomination, said in Washington that he favors "modernization" of the electoral college but favors retention of state control over the choice of electors."

"If some of the states want to choose unpledged electors, that is their business," Goldwater said. He added he would oppose a constitutional amendment which would "permit the federal government to dictate how the states select their electors."

BASIC APPEAL

Ironically, it is this very fear of unpledged electors that Goldwater's supporters fear worst.

They reason that unpledged electors could take away his basic appeal and cause him to have a much harder time winning Southern states.

"What we don't need right now is splinter parties," said a Georgia Republican Wednesday.

At the Georgia Capitol, meanwhile, it was considered virtually certain that Gov. Carl Sanders would not move to get Georgia back into the unpledged electors business.

His relations with the Kennedy administration have been close, and State Democratic Party Chairman J. B. Fuqua has said Georgia will go strongly for Kennedy in 1964.

Rationing the Ban on Discrimination

By ARTHUR KROCK

WASHINGTON, June 5—If the published forecasts of the Administration's new equal-rights legislation are borne out by the text, it will differ more fundamentally from the Dodd-Cooper bill than in the smaller scope of its ban on service discrimination by privately owned facilities of public accommodation.

The other basic difference is that the Administration bill invokes a stated legal power, the Dodd-Cooper measure invokes a moral principle the Supreme Court has invested with the force of law.

The Senators' thesis enables them to found their legislation on the argument that if, as the Supreme Court has ruled, racial discrimination is unconstitutional where state power (which includes licensing and other official "authorization") is present, a ban on it must apply to every privately owned facility of public accommodation. And since the source of this Supreme Court ruling is the Fourteenth Amendment, the Senators' proposed legislation is offered as an enforcement of that Article.

The Administration bill, as forecast, is founded on another part of the Constitution that is limited as a grant of Congressional power—the Interstate Commerce Clause. To invoke it against commercial practices not forbidden by a state, or specifically protected by state law, these practices must be shown to have some significant effect, such as imposing some burden, on interstate commerce by size, etc. Because of founding the proposed private business, anti-discrimination, legislation on this clause of the Constitution, the Administration is enabled to exclude small private business units on the ground that their transactions have no effect on interstate of public accommodation.

The Senators' thesis enables them to found their legislation on the argument that if, as the Supreme Court has ruled, racial discrimination is unconstitutional where state power (which includes licensing and other official "authorization") is present, a ban on it must apply to every privately owned facility of public accommodation. And since the source of this Supreme Court ruling is the Fourteenth Amendment, the Senators' proposed legislation is offered as an enforcement of that Article.

The Supreme Court from time to time has both expanded and contracted the sweep of the commerce clause. In Justice Reed's 1940 decision in the so-called New River case, for instance, there is a passage which the Administration could rely on to assure the constitutionality of related legislation in any form Congress might choose, including the limited antidiscrimination ban forecast as the proposal of President Kennedy. "The Congressional authority under the commerce clause," wrote Justice Reed for a large Court majority, "is complete unless limited by the Fifth Amendment." And this Amendment, forbidding among other things the taking of private property for public use without just compensation, is not involved in any way in the Administration proposal.

Grounds for a Test

But there also is much material in Supreme Court decisions since 1949 for an attack on the over-all constitutionality of a limited ban on discrimination by private owners of public accommodation facilities. If Congress should so legislate under its powers over interstate commerce, a test in the courts conceivably might come from both sides of the issue over the rights of use of private property. Opponents of any restraint could assail the statute on a constitutional argument the Court has yet to resolve. Opponents of restraint which does not apply to everybody could base their attack on interpretations the Court already has made.

But two things are clear. The Administration bill is an adaptation of law to considerations of enforceability, hence of public policy. The measures proposed by Senators Cooper and Dodd, and in somewhat different form by many Republican legislators, are projections of a moral principle to which the Supreme Court has given increasing weight as the law of the land.

"The position, stated to me by private property owners of these facilities," said Senator Cooper today, "is that they want their antidiscrimination responsibilities made clear and applicable to all. The Administration bill does not go to the moral root of the issue."

It does, however, conform in concept to the gradualism with which the Supreme Court enlarged Federal controls over minimum wages and other labor standards in the states. Therefore, it is as "practical" in law as it very plainly is in 1964 Presidential politics.

Sixth. The fourth phase would be the selection of the ones who would make the trip. This could work as follows: NASA would select a group—say, six—any of whom would be acceptable. The panel would then make the final selection of the three that they felt would be the best scientific observers.

Their lunar observations could be the source of data to help guide a decision as to just what scientific specialty should make future trips. In addition their scientific contribution could well start the ball rolling on just what kind of science training interplanetary travel will require. Changes in our university science training and curriculum course content is a definite possibility.

Even if this exact procedure were not followed, at least the panel could have a significant voice in the selection of members of the moon expedition so that the relative scientific standing of the candidate would be one of the factors taken into consideration in the final selection.

Seventh. Finally, the panel could conduct followup studies of the quality of the actual observations in an effort to revise and improve an on-going training program for future astronauts.

The key feature of the proposal is, of course, that the scientists themselves would be given a definite responsibility in the selection of the lunar explorers without in any way diminishing NASA's responsibilities and authority to select astronauts on the basis of other important criteria.

Within the scientific community, there also is debate over manned versus unmanned probes, with some members suggesting that instruments are a cheaper and more reliable information system than man.

Other scientists have pointed out that the presence of man is essential for the detection of unexpected phenomena, and that the existence of anything that can be measured automatically is essentially already known before the instrument can be designed.

In fact, President Kennedy's recommendation that the United States undertake manned lunar exploration as a national goal within this decade was based in part on a 1961 report of the Space Science Board of the National Academy of Sciences which said:

> U.S. scientific exploration on the moon and the planets should be clearly stated as the ultimate objective of the U.S. space program. From a scientific standpoint, there seems little room for dissent that man's participation in the exploration of the moon and the planets will be essential.
> Man can contribute critical elements of scientific judgment and discrimination in conducting the scientific exploration of those bodies which can never be fully supplied by his instruments however complex and sophisticated they may become.

What appears to be happening in the scientific community is an understandable expression of parochial interest by some members. A researcher in one area of science may feel that his discipline is being neglected while another area is receiving too large a share of support. Any scientist who is worth his salt should be an advocate for his own discipline. This is a never ending conflict, but I believe it is resolved when a group can establish in the mind of the Government that the basic scientific content of the cause it espouses is sound and has met the test of peers and not only requires, but deserves, greater support. This has been the case in medical research, in atomic energy, and other fields, and I think I can say safely that it will one day be so in such areas as weather modification and oceanography. We should not operate on the possibility that the squeaky wheel will get the grease—we do not want to put science on the same kind of dole merely to meet the protests. We should support specific scientific programs when convinced of their contribution to society.

I believe the scientists who have views on the space program should be provided with a national forum. Since the Congress is charged with the responsibility of authorizing the space program and appropriating funds to sustain it, the Congress seems to me to be an appropriate setting for airing these views. Accordingly, Mr. President, the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee plans to invite eminent scientists from various disciplines and leaders of the academic community to appear for a 2-day hearing at the time the committee takes up the 1964 NASA authorization bill. Our intention is to have these scientists fully briefed by the NASA officials responsible for the programs in which the scientists have a special interest. In that way, the scientists will be brought current with NASA activities and they will then be in a position to speak with both the knowledge of their own disciplines as well as the NASA programs where their special interests lie.

PROPAGANDA

The document strongly implies that the moon program is little more than a headline-grabbing exercise. It quotes anonymous advocates of the program as justifying the massive effort as a preventative to the West's suffering "permanent and traumatic" shock if the Russians arrive first. Of course, Mr. President, there would be disappointment, dismay, and perhaps disillusionment in that event. Such is the human psychology.

But the report continues that those who champion the propaganda argument say that "the same thing would be true of the Communist bloc should the United States be first."

That conclusion does not necessarily follow. The Soviets are the avowed challenger for world superiority. I strongly suspect that the onus of being second best in the moon competition would fall far more heavily on American shoulders than on those of the Communists because they are recognizably starting from a more modest industrial and technological base.

Any slowdown in our Nation's space programs would certainly afford great comfort to our enemies and spread dismay among our friends overseas. To slacken the space effort after having accepted publicly on a national basis the Soviet challenge would open us to accusations of lack of firmness and resolution regarding national goals. We would have looked fine in the dash, but not in the long-distance run. The United States could be branded as another example of a great nation which had passed its prime and was too effete to endure even nominal belt tightening in order to remain the lead nation in the free world. A general impression of this kind overseas would be disastrous to prestige.

Mr. President, I do not believe in a government policy of bread and circuses. It is true that the attention of the world has been captured by the activities of men in space. This is not surprising. The courage of men and the mustering of vast armies of scientists and technicians is inherently dramatic. When men do what Astronaut Cooper and Cosmonaut Gagarin have done the eyes and ears of the world are tuned to their feats. We all remember Lindbergh and the tumultous reception he received on both sides of the Atlantic. More importantly, however, we should recognize that the headlines have come only because we have accomplished something. If this is called propaganda, our information policies only are accepted if those who are on the receiving end and believe that they represent the truth and a factual account of events.

American standing abroad based on the gains made by the space program is remarkably high. Some evidence of this is afforded in the United Nations where not only United States allies, but the neutrals as well, have consistently backed our policies on space in opposition to the Soviet Union. Indeed, the Soviet Union has become isolated in the United Nations in its insistence on secrecy of its space activities. In contrast, the U.S. space policy has emphasized the open and cooperative exploitation of space for peaceful purposes. In implementing its cooperative space program the United States is holding joint experiments with and training people from over 60 foreign countries. The U.S. space effort is providing this country with a foreign policy asset of major significance.

In 1958, President Eisenhower declared:

> There is the factor of national prestige. To be strong and bold in space technology will enhance the prestige of the United States among the peoples of the world and create added confidence in our scientific, technological, industrial, and military strength.

If prestige has no importance then why is the U.S. Information Agency asking for $146,550,000 for the coming fiscal year?

TECHNOLOGICAL FALLOUT

NASA is making an active and continuing effort to identify benefits to the economy resulting from the U.S. space program. As new industrial products, processes and techniques are discovered, NASA is trying to disseminate information about them to bureaus and industry as rapidly as it can.

The active effort to seek out such benefits is bound to produce results in view of the magnitude, range and duration of the U.S. space program. The requirements for space exploration run through the gamut of scientific and technological interests. They also impinge on an tend to stretch the state of the art in many fields. This combination of circumstances is bound to result in new manufacturers, new systems of organization, new products and services.

Let us look at just an example. By extending man's vision into new dimensions through satellites, weather forecasting will make major advances as a science, until reliable predictions can be made a season ahead. This goal, which is not being impaired because of Apollo, will have far-reaching economic benefits for all. The Tiros satellites have been giving us very good weather data for over a year. These are some estimates of cost savings based on accurate prediction of weather only 5 days in advance: $2½ billion a year in agriculture, $45 million in the lumber industry, $100 million in surface transportation, $75 million in retail marketing, $4 billion in water resources management.

These estimates are for the United States alone. Worldwide savings would be many times greater.

In touching on the strides in communications technology resulting from the space program, the report declares:

> The facts which we learn in this research will ultimately benefit the homeowner who wants to telephone the grocery store.

That may be so. We are developing new systems and I cannot say that the statement is in error.

But, I can say that it represents an exceedingly myopic view of the unlimited possibilities on the frontiers of communications.

We will possess extraordinary instruments for communicating not so much with the corner grocery but the far corners of the world. A means will be in our hands to provide basic education—and in stages, more advanced knowledge—to millions of people in the back waters of development. It is not difficult to imagine this taking place. The progress being made in educational television in the United States in only the last few years offers a measure of comparison.

The report says that most of the scientific data acquired from the Mariner II shot to Venus has not been disseminated.

Only NASA scientists had access to this information to date.

Mr. President, mountains of data were telemetered back from the Mariner II shot last December, and this data is being carefully examined. Since this was a NASA experiment, the NASA scientists are obligated to provide interested people outside the Agency with accurate information and so they must ascertain that the information is accurate. This is not an attempt at secrecy rather it illustrates a most critical problem throughout science. And that is, how to most rapidly disseminate accurate data resulting from an experiment before the information becomes obsolete and valueless. This problem grows with intensity and NASA is one of the Government agencies attempting to work out at least partial remedies.

Mr. President, I have taken a good deal of time to discuss the space program and the criticism directed at its various aspects in the hope that a little more light could be shed on the problem. The Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee certainly is aware of this criticism. The committee is concerned about manpower and it is taking a serious look into NASA's various programs in support of higher education. The question of whether there should or should not be another orbital flight in the Mercury program is under discussion within the administration will be subject to discussion by the committee as well. Reports of duplication of facilities have com to the attention of the committee and we have called on the most qualified persons we should to assist in the examination of this matter.

But, I do not believe that we should lose sight of the forest for the trees. Space is a place. It is through this Nation's scientific exploration we now know of such phenomena as solar winds and radiation belts. We have an idea of the cloud cover and the temperature of Venus. Those of us who only stand on the fringe of scientific knowledge still appreciate that this place called space is a new sea whose shores are not completely chartered, whose depth remains largely unmeasured, and whose significance wil best be understood by generations yet to come.

As surely as the ancient mariners ventured across unmapped seas, as certainly as explorers opened our own West, and men established bases at the barren and inhospitable poles, we are going to continue this bold journey through space with all of its direct and side benefits to this generation and those which come after.

WORLD REACTION TO BIRMINGHAM RIOTS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, two current surveys of world opinion have demonstrated the widespread reaction to the Birmingham riots. As might be expected, they show that the Communist-bloc countries, led by the Soviet Union, had a field day with the Birmingham situation and continued their attacks on the United States long after the situation had come under control. There can be no question that, even in friendly countries, the prestige of the United States suffered as a result of the conflict.

What is clearly evident is that we are on trial before the world. If we do something about the situation effectively, we shall not be materially damaged; but if we do not take action, we shall be irremediably hurt in our struggle for freedom.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the review of world opinion collected by the USIA on May 13 and 15, 1963, and the survey conducted by newspaper correspondents which was published in the Washington Post of May 27, 1963.

There being no objection, the review and survey were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY

Light to moderate coverage of Birmingham developments continues, with some slackening of the already scanty editorial comment. There has been no reportage on foreign press coverage of the bombings and resulting riots, but coverage will undoubtedly be paced by sensationalized headlines and pictorial treatment, staples in critical reaction to events so far. The possibility of Federal intervention to prevent further violence is likely to be met with approval.

Available reaction from south Asia, the Middle East and the Far East dropped sharply over the weekend, though it may pick up following the riots. These areas have shown a relatively balanced portrayal of the current racial tension, with many reports noting progress in race relations made over the years.

African media, however, have devoted a large volume of comment and reportage to Birmingham, with Ghanaian comment being especially critical and caustic. But potential critical comment in other countries of Africa has not materialized to any degree, with only some sensational headlines and photos marring what otherwise is surprisingly moderate and balanced reporting. Cumulatively, though, there is no doubt that pictures of police brutality, particularly the use of police dogs, has militated strongly against the U.S. image.

Wide coverage has been given events by the Latin American media, but only the leftist and Communist press have given sensational treatment to the news.

West European press treatment has also been surprisingly mild and understanding. There has been relatively little evidence of a desire to mock at the U.S. predicament. The West European press and a few leading papers elsewhere in the world have been among the first to note the new meanings in racial events in the United States—the stepped-up Negro expectations, the choice between violence and nonviolence, the swing of majority U.S. opinion behind integration.

Most comment throughout the world has shown a reluctance to understand or realize why the Federal Government has stayed out of Birmingham events, and has been critical of President Kennedy personally. A few papers have reported the behind-the-scenes activities for a peaceful settlement spearheaded by the administration, but there has been more frequent reference to alleged political reasons behind the President's failure to intervene. The President's good faith is certain to be applauded in reaction to weekend events, however.

Propaganda exploitation from Moscow, slow to develop, began to hit high C over the weekend, particularly in output to Africa. In addition to citing the Birmingham events as a blot on the U.S. image, Moscow propaganda depicted the administration's reluctance to protect Negro rights at home as evidence of colonial-mindedness.

SOVIET UNION

The moderate attention devoted to the Birmingham situation during the past week has turned into voluminous propaganda over the weekend. Soviet media heavily exploited Birmingham incidents, depicting them as a blot on the U.S. image. In prominent news coverage and commentary to world audiences, with emphasis on Africa, Soviet output made extensive use of the theme that the Birmingham racial "atrocities" belie U.S. democracy. It also used stereotyped propaganda depictions of the unequal, poor lot of American Negroes. Another propaganda tack consisted of attacks on alleged Federal inaction, as Moscow ignored the behind-the-scenes activity efforts at conciliation. The administration's "reluctance" to protect Negro rights at home, in Moscow's view, was evidence that U.S. foreign policy favors colonialism and domination over other peoples, and some commentators stated that the administration was concerned over the next election, and hence did not wish to spoil its chances for the southern vote. Related output also noted unfavorable world reaction to the events, including condemnations by Soviet citizens and U.S. popular indigation and concern. Commentaries, especially those designed for consumption in the underdeveloped areas, linked racism in the United States with the alleged U.S. policy of colonialism.

Early Soviet reaction to the weekend bombings referred to the President's concern, but noted that he still "did not condemn at all the resolute racist terror." One available comment seemed to be enamored of the possibility of further clashes, stating that "the American Negro population is determined to take the struggle for their rights to its victorious conclusion."

REACTION TO RACIAL TENSION IN BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Scattered reports from most regions indicate increased coverage of the bombings and the alerting of troops but comment, while light, generally supports the administration while attacking extremists of both sides for blocking a peaceful solution. Soviet and local Communist media continue their heavy exploitation of the issue.

In Western Europe, the issue is again front-page news and extensive comment (the United Kingdom, France, Germany) blames extremists on both sides while applauding administration efforts to achieve a peaceful solution.

The Far East reports increased coverage but light comment in support of the dispatch of troops. Meanwhile Peiping and local Communist media continue to sensationalize developments.

In the Near East and South Asia, moderate to light news coverage is being maintained but there is little available comment. Three Indian English-language papers, while tending to support the President's military alert, suggest that political considerations have prevented the decisive action which was taken in the Meredith case.

In Africa, there is declining coverage and only light comment as interest turns to the African summit meeting.

Latin America reports moderate coverage and light comment which contrast with sustained local Communist exploitation.

The U.S.S.R. continues heavy exploitation. One quarter of Moscow Radio's output on May 14 was devoted to U.S. racial discrimination.

GLOBAL NEWS RESTRAINT ON BIRMINGHAM SHOWN

Worldwide reaction to the Birmingham riots shows a new level of understanding abroad toward America's racial troubles and wide sympathy with President Kennedy's efforts to deal with them.

This trend, especially in race-sensitive Africa and India, became evident in a survey conducted by correspondents for the Washington Post and Newsweek magazine.

The racial violence in Birmingham was page-1 news around the world and although the tone of criticism was generally moderate, the Alabama situation obviously hurt U.S. prestige. If U.S. image makers had hoped that the Nation's latest space feat would eclipse the specter of bigotry in Birmingham, they were rudely disappointed.

Pictures of police dogs lunging at Negroes vied with photos of Astronaut Gordon Cooper's space capsule on front pages throughout the world.

AFRICAN PRAISE

Nevertheless, in Addis Ababa, for example, leaders of 30 African states adopted a declaration Sunday condemning racism but praising the Kennedy administration for its efforts to "put an end to these intolerable malpractices" in the United States.

This mirrors the increasing tendency in Europe, India, and the Middle East to look at America's racial problems in their full complexity rather than in strictly monolithic terms.

Here is an area-by-area breakdown of reaction to the Birmingham crisis and the Cooper flight:

Egypt and the Middle East: Egyptian press reaction to Birmingham was surprisingly moderate, in sharp contrast to the day-in-day-out denunciations of the United States in recent times. Because Egypt's press is nationalized, the newspapers are presumed to reflect Government opinion.

The sharpest criticisms in the area were registered in the anti-American Al Baath, organ of the Baath Socialist Party which governs Syria and Iraq. It said Birmingham is reminiscent of policies followed by "some of the Fascist states against the Negroes in Africa."

One explanation for the restraint in Egyptian press commentary is the improvement of relations with the United States, of which Egyptian officials themselves speak. This is attributed to American economic aid, a more sympathetic attitude toward Arab unity and the personal diplomacy of Ambassador John Badeau.

Western diplomats believe the reaction to Alabama reflects a deliberate effort by President Gamal Abdel Nasser to minimize criticism of the United States at this time.

India: Indian reaction was symbolized by a front-page cartoon in the Hindustan Times which depicted the Statue of Liberty with a Ku Klux Klansman perched on her shoulder. The klansman was trying to snuff out the torch but it was kept ablaze, safely beyond his reach.

Public opinion in India has identified itself with President Kennedy as the embattled friend of the Negro. One Indian correspondent spoke with praise of the role of moderates in the racial crisis.

As a whole, Birmingham was given restrained news play, in sharp contrast to the angry criticism aroused by American race troubles a decade ago. Privately, however, Indian political leaders expressed a wish for a more militant policy by the White House in confronting the Birmingham crisis.

In both India and Pakistan there has been a remarkable lack of interest and controversy over Birmingham. The Pakistani newspaper, Dawn, reported President Kennedy's dispatching of troops to Alabama on page 8. In headline and tone, the treatment had been deadpan.

Africa: The declaration of praise at the Addis Ababa summit conference for President Kennedy's policies in Birmingham was the most recent official reaction to the U.S. racial crisis.

At a news conference in Addis Ababa yesterday, Sekou Toure, Premier of Guinea, told a news conference:

"We cannot say that the American people are racists—racism exists everywhere, even in Guinea.

"We know that in the United States a fight is being organized by the Government of President Kennedy. We approve without reserve of this policy of President Kennedy."

Toure's remarks take on added significance since Guinea was once described as the first Soviet satellite in Africa.

In sharp contrast was the gleeful account of Alabama's racial troubles in the press of white-ruled South Africa. Man-in-the-street interviews echoed the theme: "Why is the United States sticking he nose in South African apartheid (segregation) policy when she can't control her own Negroes?"

Jeeringly, South African newspapers referred to the United States as "the land of the free—except for the Negroes."

Europe: In the British press, the Birmingham disorders received fair to heavy play, with the southern city characterized as "the city of hate" and "riot city." Britons, who have their own growing agenda of racial problems, viewed the riots as a local rather than national failing. Editorialized the Daily Telegraph: "We (in England) have not yet reached a consistent national attitude to the color bar."

In Italy, the news from Birmingham was subordinate to domestic politics and the unsolved murder of a Bavarian playgirl in Rome's "dolce vita" area. The bulk of press opinion condemned "white extremists" in Alabama but endorsed the efforts of the Kennedy administration, as one newspaper put it, to promote the fulfillment of the justified aspirations of the Negro population." Only the Communist Daily Unita criticized President Kennedy for his "fainthearted" conduct in Alabama.

In Bonn, the Birmingham story received subdued news treatment, taking the backseat to the Cooper space flight. Editorially, the German newspaper reserved their criticisms for Birmingham's segregationist leaders and praised both moderates and the administration for their role in the crisis. But a 19-year-old secretary had this reaction: "Look who's talking about the way we treated the Jews. The way Americans suppress the Negroes, why we were no worse than they are now."

France, too, took a restrained view of the Birmingham racial conflict—far more so than in the case of Little Rock which precipitated a flood of protest letters to the American Embassy in Paris. This time France reacted with cool impartiality—no mass protests, anti-American newspaper crusades or heated attacks on radio. Pictures of police dogs mauling Negroes were widely published in France and evoked the strongest reaction to Birmingham's troubles. Generally, however, the French expressed the feeling that the Kennedy administration was doing its best to cope with a difficult situation.

NUCLEAR TESTING AND FALLOUT

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon the distinguished senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] submitted a resolution cosponsored by 30 Members of the Senate, of whom I am privileged to be one.

The resolution states:

It is the sense of the Senate that the United States should again offer the Soviet Union an immediate agreement banning all tests that contaminate the atmosphere or the oceans, bearing in mind that such tests can already be monitored by the United States without onsite inspections on Soviet territory.

That if the Soviet Union refuses to accede to such a first-step agreement, we commit ourselves before the world to conduct no nuclear tests in the atmosphere or underwater so long as the Soviet Union abstains from them.

That, in committing ourselves to such a moratorium, either unilaterally or by agreement, we keep the Soviet record of deceit and bad faith in mind, and maintain our testing facilities in a state of constant readiness so that the United States will never be caught unprepared should the Soviet Union suddenly resume nuclear testing in the atmosphere or underwater.

In making his presentation, the Senator from Connecticut said:

I consider it a great tragedy that we failed to make a ban on all tests that contaminate the atmosphere and the oceans our prime objective at Geneva. * * * Because of its very simplicity this proposal could and should have been made a test of Soviet good faith in the test-ban negotiations.

President Blamed by Rockefeller

(Copyright 1963 by the New York Times Co.)

NEW YORK — Gov. Nelson Rockefeller charged Thursday night that President John F. Kennedy's "vacillation and uncertainty" on Cuba and civil rights had "created two of the great crises of our time."

Rockefeller's attack on the President—made before nearly 3,000 cheering Republican leaders—was taken as further proof the governor regarded himself as a prime contender for the 1964 Republican presidential nomination.

NOTHING ALTERED

On Tuesday the governor declared that his recent marriage to the former Mrs. Margaretta Fitler Murphy had not in any way altered his position with respect to next year's presidential race.

The governor made his attack on the President at the annual fund-raising dinner of the Republican State Committee. Earlier, he presented his new bride to the 300 members of the committee at a reception and luncheon.

Thursday night's $100-a-plate GOP dinner served as a springboard for Sen. Kenneth B. Keating's campaign for re-election.

MAIN SPEAKER

The senator, a Rochester resident, was principal speaker. He attacked the Kennedy administration's policies but called on Republicans to provide alternative programs.

Rockefeller's charges against Kennedy were part of a passage in which he praised Keating. Referring to Keating as "the Paul Revere of the U.S. Senate," the governor declared:

"His timely warnings of the danger in Cuba alerted the nation—and the national administration. His years of work in the cause of human equality have won him the gratitude of Americans throughout the land."

GOVERNOR'S CHARGE

The governor said Keating's insistence that Soviet missiles were based in Cuba last year had forced the Kennedy administration to concede the presence of this nuclear striking force.

Rockefeller then charged that the President's "vacillation and uncertainty" on how to handle Cuba and the nation's growing civil rights problems had caused these two problems "to mushroom into two of the great crises of our times."

Will Fight Hard for Rights Bills

By RAYMOND J. CROWLEY

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Kennedy administration hopes for a vast grass roots movement of racial conciliation to head off a possible wave of riots in the North and South this summer.

This word came Thursday from a source in close touch with administration planning.

President John F. Kennedy, this informant said, intends to fight hard for new civil rights legislation.

"It will be a tough fight," he said. "But we feel more people are aroused now and we have a greater chance of getting legislation than we had last year. At any rate, we can't just sit here and be impotent. We have to demonstrate we are acting."

UP TO LEADERS

But the federal government cannot do the job alone, he said. It is up to governors, mayors, clergymen, educators, newspaper publishers and other civic leaders to sit down with Negroes, demonstrate interest in their condition, and show them definite signs of progress.

Otherwise, the official said, things may get grim this summer. Students released from colleges and schools, and aroused by what they consider victories won in Birmingham and elsewhere by street demonstrations, may try the same tactic on a larger scale.

TINDER IN THE NORTH

In the South, he said, "White Only" signs will be a continual source of exacerbation to Negroes, a continual insult unless removed. But there is tinder also in the Negro ghettos of the North, he said.

For example, he mentioned that 17.8 per cent of the Negro population of Chicago is unemployed

"and there obviously is going to be dissatisfaction there."

The dissatisfaction of the Negro North and South is deep and genuine," he said. "He wants the rights of full citizenship—and he wants them by yesterday."

And newspapers can play a great role, the official said. He said that, among others, newspapers in Atlanta, Nashville, Chattanooga and Anniston, Ala., had done fine work toward helping solve racial problems.

The administration source expressed the view that for southern political leaders, "the wave of the future" lies in being conciliatory, rather than extremist.

When asked whether Sen. Richard Russell, D-Ga., a leading Senate foe of civil rights legislation, is "responsive to this wave of the future," the administration man said:

"I don't think he is overwhelmed by it. He is a man of strong convictions and I haven't noticed any weakening.

"On the other hand, I don't think he is impressed too much by the way things have been handled by certain extremists in the South."

A New Course On Race Issues

Pres. Politics

WASHINGTON—At long last, a President has recognized that the law of the land as defined by the courts must be enforced by executive action under a legislative mandate from the Congress. The Eisenhower policy, which was taken over by Kennedy, has been to leave the whole business to the courts.

The policy has worked badly, and now it has ended in a national crisis of law defiance. The legislation which the President will ask from Congress recognizes the principle of legislative and executive responsibility.

I wish one could say that now we are on the right track and all will be well. But we have to remember that the administration has been driven to take the right track by violence and the fear of more violence. It is the unhappy truth that the right national policy is being adopted not because it is right, not because it is wise to do justice, not because those in authority and the responsible leaders of opinion understood the growing desperation of the younger Negroes, but because the Negroes have gone into the streets to face the fire hoses and the dogs and the clubs.

It is a bad precedent in this dangerous age. There is only one way to erase the precedent so that we do not come to believe that the only way to change policy is not by reason and by law, but by violence. One way to prevent this is to make it quite clear that the President, on behalf of the nation, is resolutely in command of the enforcement of equal legal rights.

The evil precedent of violence as a way of progress will establish itself if now, when the legislation comes before Congress, there is any sign of a lack of resolution.

There is reason to think that American opinion has ripened to a point where the legislative battle in Congress might be won without a bruising and brutal sectional conflict. In the South, there is under the surface and breaking through it at many points a profound and beneficent upheaval of opinion. For in the South as elsewhere, there is arising a new and far-better-educated generation. They need and are entitled to have the protection and the support of unambiguous, unweaseled national leadership.

With the help of the new generation in the South and those of the old generation who have learned wisdom, it may be possible to resolve the legislative issues not by cloture and compulsion, but by the formation of a new national consensus.

THE NEW YORK TIME

Transcript of Kennedy Address

Following is the text of President Kennedy's commencement address yesterday at San Diego State College, San Diego, Calif., as recorded by The New York Times, through the facilities of the American Broadcasting Company radio network:

I want to express a very strong sense of appreciation for the honor that you have given to me today. To be an instant graduate of this distinguished college is greatly appreciated, and I am delighted to participate in what is a most important ceremony in the lives of us all.

One of the most impressive, if not the most impressive accomplishments of this great Golden State has been the recognition by the citizens of this state of the importance of education as the basis for the maintenance of an effective free society.

This fact was recognized in our earliest beginnings at the Massachusetts Bay Colony. But I do not believe that any state in the Union has given more attention in recent years to educating its citizens—the highest level of the doctoral level, graduate level in the colleges, state colleges, the junior colleges, the high schools, the grade schools.

You recognize that a free society places special burdens upon any free citizen. To govern is to choose, and the ability to make those choices wise, and responsible, and prudent, requires the best of all of us.

No country can possibly move ahead, no free society can possibily be sustained, unless it has an educated citizenry whose qualities of mind and heart permit it to take part in the complicated and increasingly sophisticated decisions to pour not only upon the President and upon the Congress, but upon all the citizens who exercise the ultimate power.

Effort Is Cited

I'm sure that the graduates of this college recognize that the effort that the people of California, the Governor, the Legislature, the local communities, the faculties that this concentrated effort of mind and scholarship to educate the young citizens of this state has not been done merely to give this school's graduates an economic advantage in the life struggle.

Quite obviously, there is a higher purpose. And that is the hope that you will turn to the service of the state, the scholarship, the education, the qualities which societies have developed in you, that you render on the community level, or on the state level, or on the national level, or the international level, a contribution to the maintenance of freedom and peace, and the security of our country and those associated with it in a most critical time.

In so doing, you will follow a great and honorable tradition which combines American scholarship and American leadership in political affairs. It is an extraordinary fact of history, I think unmatched since the days of early Greece, that this country should have produced during its founding days in a population of a handful of millions such an extraordinary range of scholars and creative thinkers who helped build this country —Jefferson, Franklin, Morris, Wilson and all the rest.

'Great Tradition'

This is a great tradition which we must maintain in our times with increasing strength and increasing vigor.

The average salary for classroom teachers in California is $7,000, while in Mississippi it is $3,600.

Nearly three-quarters of the young white population of the United States have graduated from high school, but only about two-fifths of our non-white population has done the same.

In some states almost 40 per cent of the non-white population has completed less than five years of school, contrasted with 7 per cent of the white population.

In one American state over 36 per cent of the public school buildings are over 40 years of age. In another, only 4 per cent are that old.

Such facts as that one could prolong the recital indefinitely, make it clear that American children today do not yet enjoy equal educational opportunities for two primary reasons: One is economic, and the other is racial.

If our nation is to meet the goal of giving every American child a fair chance, because an uneducated American child makes an uneducated parent who produces, in many cases, another uneducated American child, we must move ahead swiftly in both areas.

And we must recognize that segregation in education — and I mean de facto segregation in the North as well as the proclaimed segregation in the South, brings with it serious handicaps to a large proportion of the population.

It does no good, as you in California know better than any, to say: "That is the business of another state."

It is the business of our country and in addition, these young uneducated boys and girls know no state boundaries as they come West as well as North and East. And they are your citizens as well as citizens of this country.

The second question relates to the quality of our education. Today one out of every three students in the fifth grades will drop out of high schools. And only two out of 10 will graduate from college.

In the meantime, we need more educated men and women and we need less and less unskilled labor. There are millions of jobs that will be available in the next seven years for educated young men and women. The demand will be overwhelming and there will be millions of people out of work who are unskilled because with new machines and technology there is less need for them.

This combination of a tremendously increasing population among our young people, of less need for unskilled labor, of increasingly unskilled labor available combines to form one of the most serious domestic problems that this country will face in the next ten years.

Of Americans 18 years of age or older, more than 23,000,000 have less than eight years of schooling and over 8,000,000 have less than five years. What kind of a citizen can we—what kind of judgment, what kind of response can we expect of a citizen who has been to school less than five years. And we've got in this country 8,000,000 who've been less than five years.

As a result, they can't read or write, or do simple arithmetic. They are illiterates in this rich country of ours and they constitute the hard core of our unemployed. They can't write a just 100 years ago.

Our educational system is not expanding fast enough. By 1970 the number of students in our public elementary and secondary schools will have increased 25 per cent over 1960. Nearly three-quarters of a million new classrooms will be needed and we're not building them at that rate. By 1970 we will have 7,000,000 students in our colleges and universities —3,000,000 more than we do today. We are going to double the population of our colleges and universities in 10 years. We're going to have to build as many schools, college classrooms and buildings in 10 years as we did in 150 years.

By 1970, we will need 7,500 Ph.D.'s in the physical sciences, mathematics and engineering. In 1960 we graduated 3,000.

Such facts make it clear that we have a major responsibility and a major opportunity, one that we should welcome, because there is no greater asset in this country than an educated man or woman.

Education is the responsibility — education, quite rightly, is the responsibility —of the state and the local community. But from the beginning of our country's history, from the time of the Northwest Ordinance, as John Adams and Thomas Jefferson recognized, from the time of the Morrill Act at the height of the Civil War, when the land-grant college system was set up under the administration of President Lincoln, from the beginning it has been recognized that there must be a national commitment and that the national government must play its role in stimulating a system of excellence which can serve the great national purpose of a free society.

It is for that reason that we have sent to the Congress of the United States legislation to help meet the needs of higher education by assisting in the construction of college academic facilities and junior colleges and graduate centers and technical institutes, by stepping up existing programs for student loans and graduate fellow ships and other student assistance programs.

We've got to improve—and we have so recommended—the quality of our teachers by expanding teacher training institutes, by improving teacher preparation programs, by broadening educational research and by authorizing—and this is one of our greatest needs—increased training for teachers for the handicapped, for the deaf, for those who can't speak and those who are otherwise handicapped. And it's designed to strengthen public elementary and secondary education through grants to the states for better teacher salaries, to relieve critical classroom shortages, to meet the special educational problems of depressed areas and to continue and expand vocational education and counselling.

And finally, we must make a massive attack upon illiteracy in the year 1963 in the United States by an expansion of university extension courses and by a major effort to improve our libraries in every community of our country.

'Difficult Assignment'

I recognize that this represents a difficult assignment for us all but I don't think

One of the most impressive, if not the most impressive accomplishments of this great Golden State has been the recognition by the citizens of this state of the importance of education as the basis for the maintenance of an effective free society.

This fact was recognized in our earliest beginnings at the Massachusetts Bay Colony. But I do not believe that any state in the Union has given more attention in recent years to educating its citizens—the highest level of the doctoral level, graduate level in the colleges, state colleges, the junior colleges, the high schools, the grade schools.

You recognize that a free society places special burdens upon any free citizen. To govern is to choose, and the ability to make those choices wise, and responsible, and prudent, requires the best of all of us.

No country can possibly move ahead, no free society can possibily be sustained, unless it has an educated citizenry whose qualities of mind and heart permit it to take part in the complicated and increasingly sophisticated decisions to pour not only upon the President and upon the Congress, but upon all the citizens who exercise the ultimate power.

Effort Is Cited

I'm sure that the graduates of this college recognize that the effort that the people of California, the Governor, the Legislature, the local communities, the faculties that this concentrated effort of mind and scholarship to educate the young citizens of this state has not been done merely to give this school's graduates an economic advantage in the life struggle.

Quite obviously, there is a higher purpose. And that is the hope that you will turn to the service of the state, the scholarship, the education, the qualities which societies have developed in you, that you render on the community level, or on the state level, or on the national level, or the international level, a contribution to the maintenance of freedom and peace, and the security of our country and those associated with it in a most critical time.

In so doing, you will follow a great and honorable tradition which combines American scholarship and American leadership in political affairs. It is an extraordinary fact of history, I think unmatched since the days of early Greece, that this country should have produced during its founding days in a population of a handful of millions such an extraordinary range of scholars and creative thinkers who helped build this country —Jefferson, Franklin, Morris, Wilson and all the rest.

'Great Tradition'

This is a great tradition which we must maintain in our times with increasing strength and increasing vigor.

Those of you who are educated, those of us who recognize the responsibilities of an educated citizen, should now concern ourselves with whether we are providing an adequate education for all Americans, whether all Americans have an equal chance to develop their intellectual qualities and whether we are preparing ourselves today for the educational challenges which are going to come before this decade is out.

The first question, and the most important, is that every American boy and girl have an opportunity to develop whatever talents they have. All of us do not have equal talents but all of us should have an equal opportunity to develop those talents.

Let me cite a few facts to show that they do not. In this fortunate state of California the average current expenditure for a boy and girl in the public schools is $515, but in the State of Mississippi it is $230.

Salary Difference Noted

36 per cent of the public school buildings are over 40 years of age. In another, only 4 per cent are that old.

Such facts as that one could prolong the recital indefinitely, make it clear that American children today do not yet enjoy equal educational opportunities for two primary reasons: One is economic, and the other is racial.

If our nation is to meet the goal of giving every American child a fair chance, because an uneducated American child makes an uneducated parent who produces, in many cases, another uneducated American child, we must move ahead swiftly in both areas.

And we must recognize that segregation in education — and I mean de facto segregation in the North as well as the proclaimed segregation in the South, brings with it serious handicaps to a large proportion of the population.

It does no good, as you in California know better than any, to say: "That is the business of another state."

It is the business of our country and in addition, these young uneducated boys and girls know no state boundaries as they come West as well as North and East. And they are your citizens as well as citizens of this country.

The second question relates to the quality of our education. Today one out of every three students in the fifth grades will drop out of high schools. And only two out of 10 will graduate from college.

In the meantime, we need more educated men and women and we need less and less unskilled labor. There are millions of jobs that will be available in the next seven years for educated young men and women. The demand will be overwhelming and there will be millions of people out of work who are unskilled because with new machines and technology there is less need for them.

This combination of a tremendously increasing population among our young people, of less need for unskilled labor, of increasingly unskilled labor available combines to form one of the most serious domestic problems that this country will face in the next ten years.

Of Americans 18 years of age or older, more than 23,000,000 have less than eight years of schooling and over 8,000,000 have less than five years. What kind of a citizen can we—what kind of judgment, what kind of response can we expect of a citizen who has been to school less than five years. And we've got in this country 8,000,000 who've been less than five years.

As a result, they can't read or write, or do simple arithmetic. They are illiterates in this rich country of ours and they constitute the hard core of our unemployed. They can't write a letter to get a job and they can't read, in many cases, a help-wanted sign.

Jobless Rate High

One out of every 10 workers who failed to finish elementary school are unemployed as compared to one out of 50. In short, our current educational programs, much as they represent a burden upon the taxpayers in this country, do not meet the responsibilities. The fact of the matter is that this is a problem which faces us all, no matter where we live, no matter what our political views must be.

Knowledge is power as Francis Bacon said 500 years ago, and today it is truer than it ever was.

What are we going to do by the end of this decade? There are 4,000,000 boys and girls born each year in the United States. Our population is growing each decade by a figure equal to the total population of this country at the time of Abraham Lincoln, years. We're going to have to build as many schools, college classrooms and buildings in 10 years as we did in 150 years.

By 1970, we will need 7,500 Ph.D.'s in the physical sciences, mathematics and engineering. In 1960 we graduated 3,000.

Such facts make it clear that we have a major responsibility and a major opportunity, one that we should welcome, because there is no greater asset in this country than an educated man or woman.

'Difficult Assignment'

I recognize that this represents a difficult assignment for us all but I don't think it's an assignment from which we should shrink.

I believe that education comes at the top of the responsibility of any government at whatever level. It is essential to our survival as a nation in a dangerous and hazardous world and it is essential to the maintenance of freedom at a time when freedom is under attack.

I have traveled in the last 24 hours from Washington to Colorado to Texas to here and on every street I see mothers standing with two or three or four children. They are going to pour into our schools and our colleges in the next 10 or 20 years and I want this generation of Americans to be prepared to meet this challenge as our forefathers did in making it possible for all of us to be here today.

We are the privileged. We are the privileged. And it should be the ambition of every free citizen to express and expand that privilege so that all of our countrymen and women share it.

The Nation and the Parties on the Racial Issue

By JAMES RESTON

WASHINGTON, June 7—The critical battleground in the racial conflict is now moving from the courts and the streets into the Congress. And the only hope there is that the leadership of both parties, led on to higher ground by thoughtful Republicans and Democrats alike, will produce an effective bipartisan coalition that will give relief to the militant Negro demands for equality.

The temptation to play politics with the racial crisis between now and the Presidential election of 1964 is very great, but the danger to the nation of a partisan wrangle on this issue is greater still. For if the effort to legislate equality between the races fails this time, the issue will be thrown back into the streets under much more dangerous circumstances.

Leaders of both parties now favor new civil rights legislation, particularly to open the facilities of all hotels, restaurants and stores to all citizens. A minority of both parties is opposed to new legislation for a variety of reasons. But a coalition of the majority of Republicans and Democrats who favor legislation is probably large enough even to vote down a filibuster in the Senate, if only national interests can be put above party interests.

President Kennedy has postponed presenting his civil rights program to the Congress with this in mind. Unless he can get the cooperation of the Republican leaders and a number of Republicans in both houses, he is in trouble, and trouble for Kennedy helps the Republicans politically. But on the race issue at this particular moment, trouble for Kennedy is also trouble for the country, and the tactics of the legislative battle are therefore extremely important.

The Administration's Pessimism

In its present mood, the Administration needs help. It is extremely pessimistic. To hear top officials at the Justice Department tell the story, the outlook on the race issue is bleak indeed. They say the crisis between the races is going to get worse instead of better. They are gloomy about getting civil rights legislation from this Congress. They feel that not only the militant white segregationists but the militant Negro integrationists are against them and they complain that the press both North and South does not understand what they are trying to do.

Two events have contributed to this view at the Justice Department. The first was the crisis in Birmingham, Ala., and the second was a meeting held in New York recently between Attorney General Robert Kennedy and a group of Negro leaders.

The Negro leaders in the New York meeting gave the Attorney General and Burke Marshall, one of his aides, a hard time. The meeting started with a savage comment by one of the Negroes against "the Kennedys." Thereafter, the Administration was blamed for not doing enough to settle the Birmingham problem, for hesitating to move Federal troops into Alabama until a white man was hurt, and for leaving the crisis in Alabama to be settled by Negro demonstrations in the streets.

As a matter of fact, the Attorney General and Burke Marshall had been deeply involved behind the

They say the crisis between the races is going to get worse instead of better. They are gloomy about getting civil rights legislation from this Congress. The Negro leaders in the New York meeting gave the Attorney General and Burke Marshall, one of his aides, a hard time. The meeting started with a savage comment by one of the Negroes against "the Kennedys." Thereafter, the Administration was blamed for not doing enough to settle the Birmingham problem, for hesitating to move Federal troops into Alabama until a white man was hurt, and for leaving the crisis in Alabama to be settled by Negro demonstrations in the streets.

As a matter of fact, the Attorney General and Burke Marshall had been deeply involved behind the scenes in trying to settle the Birmingham crisis. Marshall opened the New York meeting by explaining what the Justice Department had done to arrange a settlement there, but when he finished after 40 minutes, some of the the Negroes laughed at him.

After the meeting, an attorney for the Negro leader, Dr. Martin Luther King, came up and thanked Attorney General Kennedy for his efforts to settle the Birmingham case, but he did not speak up for the Justice Department in the meeting itself.

Robert Kennedy asked the attorney why he had remained silent, and noted that other Negro leaders who had written to thank him for his help on the civil rights question had also sat silent while militant Negroes in the meeting condemned the Administration.

The reply given to these questions was that militants in the movement for Negro leadership were now in the ascendancy, that "moderation" or "gradualism" or "token integration" were now offensive words to the Negro, and that sympathy by a Negro leader for the Administration's moderate approach was regarded as the work of "collaborationists."

Meanwhile, quite a few Republican Senators are determined not to vote for new civil rights legislation under the pressure of Negro demonstrations in the streets. These demonstrations have obviously forced the Administration to reverse its position and offer civil rights legislation, but if they continue, the demonstrations may very well defeat the legislation the Negro militants want.

All this provides ammunition for those in both parties who want to play politics with the issue, but the the issue is clearly too serious to be left to the politicians who want to gather votes on the battlefield. Bipartisan cooperation is the main hope of a compromise, and this is not likely to come about unless there is strong pressure from both parties for an accommodation.

Army Plans to Hire Additional Negroes And Puerto Ricans

Pres. Pal.

By WILL LISSNER

The Department of the Army moved here yesterday to hire more Negroes and Puerto Ricans in this area.

Eighteen personnel officers responsible for the hiring, upgrading and promotion of civilian employes met with leaders of minority-group organizations at the Office of Civilian Personnel, 346 Broadway.

They sought to discover additional steps by which Army agencies can assure Negroes, Puerto Ricans and other persons of nondiscriminatory hiring and promotion. The meeting was arranged under the authority of President Kennedy's Executive order of 1961 that directed the agencies to take all possible steps to assure equality of opportunity in Federal jobs.

The personnel officers said that the 10,000 civilian jobs at Army installations in this area ranged from common labor at Army warehouses through the various skilled categories to posts requiring technical skills and extended professional training. They also include the entire range of clerical occupations.

Joseph S. Carnegie represented the New York labor and industry committee of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at the meeting. He said that past discrimination had conditioned even whites of goodwill to discriminate unconsciously. Past discrimination, he said, also led Negroes, Puerto Ricans and other persons to refuse to compete for jobs even though they might now have an equal chance of getting them.

Mr. Carnegie asked the personnel officer to take affirmative steps, such as the active recruitment of minority-group candidates. In this he was supported by Ralph S. Rosas and Louis A. Cardona of the Puerto Rican Labor Department.

resulted in an agreement that the planning and carrying out of such recruiting drives were a mutual responsibility of hiring oficers and minority-group leaders. Several arranged a later meeting to plan joint action.

Representing the Urban League was Adolph Holmes, assistant national director of job development and employment. The attitude of the commanding officer at any installation is decisive, Mr. Holmes said.

Mr. Holmes joined with Mr. Rosas, an educator, in urging that the officers re-examine the "price tags" on jobs, such as high school diplomas. Frequently, they said, such qualifications were no real help in the task of identifying the best skilled person for the particular job but were adopted to provide some means of choosing between applicants.

Mr. Holmes and the others also proposed that members of minority groups be persuaded to take whatever Army jobs they could qualify for.

The session was arranged in connection with the annual meeting of the Army Civilian Personnel Officers Association of the New York area, of which Kenneth C. Medearis is chairman. It was led by Miss Moleen Pust, personnel officer of the Army Chemical Procurement District, Watervliet Arsenal. Installations represented are at Forts Jay, Totten, Niagara, Hamilton and Dix and Camp Kilmer.

STEVENSON BIDS U.S. BE TRUE TO IDEALS

MEMPHIS, June 7 (UPI)—Adlai E. Stevenson, United States representative at the United Nations, said today that "free America has little impact if what we do in our land is not what we tell others to do in theirs."

a"the few who resort to violence, who defy law and order, are not representative of a people who know that freedom and bigotry are incompatible," Mr. Stevenson said at the dedication of the Memphis Metropolitan Airport.

"Unhappily, the picture of America that others have is not always the same as ours," he said. "Too often our picture is of wealth and ease and surpluses and self-righteousness—in a hungry world. Too often our public dialogue is of weapons, missiles and war—in a world that yearns for peace." He continued:

"We know that there is no more compassionate, peaceful and responsible society anywhere on earth than ours, and to keep precisely that impression before the world is the job of every American.

"Not only our present security but our future influence depends on how we succeed in keeping alive our great propositions of freedom and equality, propositions that the United States nearly two centuries ago launched into the inner space that is the heart of man.

Nation 'Dedicated to Policy' of Faster Gains, Freeman Tells U.N. Food Parley

By WILLIAM M. BLAIR

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 7—The Kennedy Administration told representatives of 100 countries today that the United States was "dedicated to a policy" of accelerating the rate of progress on civil rights.

Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman took the opportunity to give the Administration's position at the World Food Congress, which is being held under the auspices of the United Nation Food and Agriculture Organization.

The conference has drawn more than 1,000 delegates. Many of them come from newly developing countries of Africa and Asia that are facing great problems of hunger and malnutrition.

Mr. Freeman made his statement in introducing K. Gunnar Myrdal, Swedish economist. Mr. Myrdal is the author of "The American Dilemma," regarded as a most comprehensive investigation of the position of the Negro in the United States.

Negroes Getting Angry

Later, Professor Myrdal told newsmen that race relations in the United States were in a "crisis", but "you shouldn't have been surprised."

"It was to be expected that sooner or later he [the Negro] would just get angry and stand up for his rights," he said.

It is natural, he went on, that with so much discrimination still in effect that Negroes should demand faster progress.

"The are seeing a vision, an opening, and they want full quality," Mr. Myrdal said. "Negroes want only to be accepted as other American."

He said the status of the American Negro has improved greatly in the last twenty years and that the broad effects of the present unrest were healthy because "this is when you have acceleration of progress."

In his address to the congress' plenary session, Mr. Myrdal said that unless the rich and poor countries alike awoke to the serious economic situation of a world half underfed, "the world is headed for an economic and political cataclysm."

Secretary Freeman recalled that Mr. Myrdal, professor of international economics at Stockholm University, had challenged the United States in 1944 by writing that "the Negro problem is not only America's greatest failure but also America's great opportunity for the future."

Since then, Mr. Freeman went on, "we have made great substantial progress toward the ideal" of equal opportunity.

"We have not made as much progress as we should," Mr. Freeman said. "We are conscious of our shortcomings—and I believe I can honestly say that no nation on earth publishes its shortcomings for all the world to see as much as we do."

He referred briefly to the "violence and conflict" that have taken place in recent weeks in the South and remarked that: "We are striving mightily to hasten that progress, and to overcome our shortcomings."

Seeks To Meet Challenge

"We seek today in the United States," Mr. Freeman said, "to apply the highest level of social engineering that we can muster to meet the challenge of human relations, as well as to the chal lenge of material well-being.

"Here, at this World Food Congress, where people of all colors and creeds have joined to find a way to conquer hunger and to achieve abundance for all people everywhere, I want to affirm our clear recognition that 'man does not live by bread alone,' and our faith in the principle of the brotherhood of man that is a fundamental part of the world's great religions."

Professor Myrdal said in his address that he had found "'a serious lag in the will and ability of those in power" in underdeveloped countries to adjust their systems of land ownership and tenancy to the necessity for raising agricultural productivity.

These needs, he said, are clearly conceived by rich countries now pressing for land reform in underdeveloped countries.

The underdeveloped countries, he said, are eager to support resolutions on land reform and sometimes they pass legislation. But new laws often are "full of loopholes and the enforcement of them is generally lax," he concluded.

Questions Land Reform

Dr. Myrdal said his studies in Southeast Asia had led him to doubt that land reform, along traditional patterns, would be the right policy in all countries.

He suggested that in some countries it would be best, or "a politically more realistic goal," to have a more capitalistic structure of landholdings. Such a system, e suggested, could have provisions protecting the agricultural worker's interests and "perhaps even assuring him of a patch of land."

"Next to the eradication of corruption in government," he continued, "administration and business in underdeveloped countries, I consider a rational solution of the landholding pro lem the most important condition for progress in agriculture.'

Indeed, he remarked, it is the "primary condition for a peaceful and steady political development that does not veer toward revolution of one sort or another."

Appeal.

The civil rights approach of the Kennedy Administration as compared with that of the Eisenhower Administration has merely substituted "an inadequate approach for a miserable one," the Rev. Dr. Matrin Luther King Jr. declared yesterday.

He said that President Kennedy "may have done a little more" than President Dwight D. Eisenhower, "but the plight of the vast majority of Negroes remains the same."

In his broadest attack to date on President Kennedy's civil rights record, the Southern Negro integrationist leader charged the President with a failure of leadership and with not having lived up to his campaign promises.

Dr. King suggested that Mr. Kennedy might have a chance to recoup if his civil rights proposals scheduled to go to Congress this week were strong ones.

But he called on the President to "do more than issue a call."

He also said that Mr. Kennedy should not make his planned trip to Europe later this month, but should stay in Washington to push the program.

"If he leaves, he would be doing a grave disservice to the nation and to the civil rights movement," Dr. King asserted.

He expressed these views in a two-hour taped interview with David Susskind on the "Open End" television program on Station WPIX.

He said that "this bill cannot get through without the total weight of the President and his prestige behind it on a day to day basis."

"And he can't do it in another country," Dr. King added.

Among other things, Mr. Kennedy could revive "fireside chats" to explain civil rights to the nation, Dr. King suggested.

But he said that above all the President must start talking of integration in moral terms—in which "we seldom if ever hear the President of the United States speaking"—rather than in purely political terms.

Critizes Eisenhower

President Eisenhower failed "to take a forthright moral stand" after the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling in 1954, and "this set us back," Dr. King said.

"I think," he said, "that the new Administration will have to see the necessity of making up."

Dr. King indicated that integrationist groups, to help the President, might stage "a march on Washington, even sit-ins in Congress."

In another broadcast yesterday, Malcolm X., the Black Muslim leader, expressed what appeared to be mild criticism of Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr., Manhattan Democrat, who appeared on the platform at a Muslim rally this spring.

Asked on the WCBS radio program "Let's Find Out" if Mr. Powell was "moving in your direction," Malcolm X. said:

"It's hard to tell. He moves in one direction one minute and another direction another minute. He's flexible."

Wlkins Differs With King

On another televisions program the head of the nation's largest civil rights organization said yesterday that President Kennedy would serve no useful purpose by escorting two Negro students scheduled to enroll at the University of Alabama tomorrow.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said here that "i personally don't feel that it is a function of the President" to escort the students.

He thus disagreed with Dr. King and other Negro leaders who have urged the President to take this action to demonstrate his "personal and moral commitment" to equal rights for Negroes.

Mr. Wilkins, on the WCBS-T program "Newsmakers," said that the Federal Government was "big enough" to insure the enrollment of the two Negroes without the President's personal appearance. Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama has announced that he will attempt to block the Negroess' admittance.

Mr. Walkins, in contrast to some other Negro spokesmen, commended the actions of the Kennedy Administration in the civil rights field.

But he said he believed that the President should send Congress civil rights legislation covering all phases of discriminatinand segregation rather than a measure, prohibiting only discrimination in public accommodations.

Says Time For Talk Is Past

HONOLULU — President John F. Kennedy said Sunday that in "a moment of moral and constitutional crisis" in American race relations "the time for token moves and idle talk is over."

Kennedy, in a speech before the national conference of mayors, called for increased local responsibility in meeting the racial disturbances that could be expected in Northern cities as well as in the South.

He suggested to the mayors a five-point program of action, briefly described his own legislative plans, and offered this personal credo:

"I do not say that all men are equal in their ability, character and motivation. I do say that every American should be given a fair chance to develop in full whatever talents he has and to share equally in the American dream."

FLYING BACK

After his speech, Kennedy boarded his Air Force jet for a non-stop, nine-hour flight to Washington.

Monday morning he will receive an honorary degree from American University and deliver an address that White House sources said would be "of the highest importance."

Kennedy arrived here Saturday night after a flight from Los Angeles. He spent the night in quarters at the Pearl Harbor naval base and attended a trinity Sunday mass there.

The President told an enthusiastic crowd of about 8,000 at Honolulu International Airport that he had come here "to speak to the mayors of the United States on a matter which concerns us all, and that is, how the American people can live more happily and more securely together."

There was no place the message could be "more appropriately said and understood" than Hawaii, Kennedy said, apparently referring to the state's racial amalgam. For "reaching into the Pacific, yet part of the United States, this island represents all that we are and all that we hope to be."

In his remarks to the mayors Sunday Kennedy gave them a broad outline of legislation he plans to submit to Congress, but warned that "the final responsibility, both now and after such legislation is enacted, will still rest with you at the local level."

"The problem is growing. The challenge is there. The cause is just," the President said. And he recommended the following five courses of action to the mayors:

1. Establishment in every city of a "biracial human relations committee," to identify developing tensions and to improve cooperation and communication between the races.

RULES OUT ORDINANCES

2. Elimination of any trace of local law requiring racial segregation in any form; "the Supreme Court," Kennedy said, "has made it clear beyond dispute that no local ordinance requiring segregation is constitutional."

3. Non-discriminatory practices in the hiring and promotion of municipal workers, "supervisory as well as custodial."

4. Equal opportunity ordinances in housing, public accommodations and employment opportunities.

5. Special campaigns to "lessen unemployment among the unskilled on both races" by reducing school drop-outs.

The President said his federal legislative proposals, which will be sent to Congress this week, would "seek, through legislative and executive action, to provide peaceful remedies for the grievances" that cause Negro demonstrations, and would seek "to give all Americans a fair chance to a full life."

He gave the following description of what the legislation would accomplish:

"Move (racial demonstrations) from the streets to the courts; erase all doubts as to the validity of conflicting legal arguments; require all merchants in all cities to take similar action at the same time, so that none can hang back for fear of being penalized for moving first; and, finally, meet the rising tide of discontent with appropriate nationwide action, without waiting for city-by-city, case-by-case solutions."

Kennedy Rights Plea Endorsed by Massell

From Wire Dispatches

HONOLULU—Atlanta's vice mayor Sunday described President John F. Kennedy's civil rights requests in a speech before the National Conference of Mayors as "very reasonable."

Vice Mayor Sam Massell said:

"The President's address will be well received in the part of the United States I come from.

"There are still some people who are disturbed by continuous demands for equal rights but many are realizing that minority groups will quit demonstrations only when we stop discriminating.

"Kennedy is right — we must continue to plead with people to grant rights, but if this fails we must turn to legislation."

As for a five-point program the President recommended to the mayors, Massell said of the nation as a whole that "we're long overdue with these various reforms."

Massell said he was sitting in the first row and Kennedy stopped to congratulate him on the progress in Atlanta.

KENNEDY APPEALS FOR LOCAL ACTION ON RACE PROBLEM

Time Over for Token Moves, He Warns Conference of Mayors in Honolulu

5-POINT PLAN IS OFFERED

He Asks More Responsibility by Community Leaders—Speaks in Capital Today

By TOM WICKER
Special to The New York Times

HONOLULU, June 9—President Kennedy told the National Conference of Mayors today that in "a moment of moral and constitutional crisis" in American race relations, "the time for token moves and idle talk is over."

He called for increased local responsibility in meeting disturbances that he said could be expected in Northern cities and in the South.

He suggested to the Mayors a five-point program of action, briefly described his legislative plans and offered this personal credo:

"I do not say that all men are equal in their ability, character and motivation. I do say that every American should be given a fair chance to develop in full whatever talents he has and to share equally in the American dream."

Will Get Degree

The President's remarks were prepared for delivery at a special session of the conference. Immediately after his speech he boarded his Air Force jet for a nine-hour, nonstop flight back to Washington.

Tomorrow morning he will receive an honorary degree there and deliver an address that White House sources said would be "of the highest importance."

HONOLULU, June 9—President Kennedy told the National Conference of Mayors today that in "a moment of moral and constitutional crisis" in American race relations, "the time for token moves and idle talk is over."

He called for increased local responsibility in meeting disturbances that he said could be expected in Northern cities and in the South.

He suggested to the Mayors a five-point program of action, briefly described his legislative plans and offered this personal credo:

"I do not say that all men are equal in their ability, character and motivation. I do say that every American should be given a fair chance to develop in full whatever talents he has and to share equally in the American dream."

Will Get Degree

The President's remarks were prepared for delivery at a special session of the conference. Immediately after his speech he boarded his Air Force jet for a nine-hour, nonstop flight back to Washington.

Tomorrow morning he will receive an honorary degree there and deliver an address that White House sources said would be "of the highest importance."

Mr. Kennedy arrived last night after a flight from Los Angeles. He spent the night in quarters at the Pearl Harbor naval base, and attended a Trinity Sunday mass there this morning.

He told an enthusiastic crowd of about 8,000 at Honolulu International Airport that he had come here "to speak to the Mayors of the United States on a matter which concerns us all, and that is how the American people can live more happily and more securely together."

There is no place that his message could be "more appropriately said and understood than in Hawaii," Mr. Kennedy said, apparently referring to the state's racial amalgam.

"Reaching into the Pacific, yet part of the United States, this island represents all that we are and all that we hope to be," he declared.

Says Cause Is Just

In his remarks to the Mayors Mr. Kennedy gave them a broad outline of legislation he planned to submit to Congress. But he warned that "the final responsibility, both now and after such legislation is enacted, will still rest with you at the local level."

"The problem is growing," he said. The challenge is there. The cause is just."

He recommended the following five courses to the Mayors:

¶Establishment in every city of a "biracial human relations committee" to identify developing tensions and improve cooperation and communication between the races.

¶Elimination of local laws requiring racial segregation in any form. "The Supreme Court," Mr. Kennedy said, "has made it clear beyond dispute that no local ordinance requiring segregation is constitutional."

¶Establishment of equal-opportunity ordinances in housing public accommodations and employment.

¶Organization of special campaigns to "lessen unemployment among the unskilled of both races" by reducing school dropouts.

Remedies to be Sought

In his proposals to be sent to Congress this week, the President said, he will "seek, through legislative and Executive action, to provide peaceful remedies for the grievances" that cause Negro demonstrations, and "to give all Ameri- life."

He described as follows what the legislation would accomplish:

"Move [racial demonstrations] from the streets to the courts; erase all doubts as to the validity of conflicting legal arguments; require all merchants in all cities to take similar action at the same time, so that none can hang back for fear of being penalized for moving first, and finally, meet the rising tide of discontent with appropriate nationwide action, without waiting for city-by-city, case-by-case solutions."

The President gave no further details, but this appeared to be a general description of the Administration's public accommodations bill, which was expected to be based on the power of the Government to regulate interstate commerce.

Senator Mike Mansfield of Montana, the Democratic leader, came here with Mr. Kennedy and conferred with him during the 2,635-mile flight from Los Angeles. He said he expected th legislation and a civil rights message to be sent to Congress in the middle of the week.

The President probably will confer separately with Republican Congressional leaders, seeking their support, Mr. Mansfield said.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Mayors to return to their communities and set an example "to which the timid can rally and which those clinging to the past cannot ignore."

Plans Meetings

He said he would meet with labor, religious, Government and business leaders, but warned:

"Justice cannot await too many meetings. It cannot await the action of the Congress or even the courts. We face a moment of moral and constitutional crisis, and men of generosity and vision must make themselves heard in every part of the land.

"It is clear to me that the time for token moves and idle talk is over, that these rights are going to be won, and that our responsibility, yours and mine, is to see that they are won in a peaceful and constructive manner."

He told the Mayors he was seeking them to be "alert, not alarmed." Demonstrations like those in Birmingham, Boston, Jackson, Greensboro, Nashville, Philadelphia and other cities, he said, "can be expected in many other cities in the nex few months, North and South."

Students will be out of school, many Negroes will be seasonally unemployed and the Birmingham crisis will have "stepped up the tempo of the nationwide drive for full equality," the President noted.

"Rising summer temperatures are often accompanied by rising human temperatures on all sides," he added.

The chief question for the Mayors, he said is "whether you will do nothing, thereby inviting pressure and tension and possible violence, or whether you anticipate these problems and move to fulfill the rights of your Negro citizens in a peaceful and constructive manner."

He appealed to them not only on the grounds of peace and idealism, but also on the ground of self-interest.

"The financial history of those communities which have been beset with racial disturbances shows that they attract less capital and do less business," he said.

He referred to Birmingham where he said investment in plant expansion had declined by 80 per cent in recent years.

Impressed With Gains

On the other hand, Mr. Kennedy told the Mayors, he has been impressed in the last two years, and particularly in the last few weeks, by how much can be done by those determined "to get it done."

He drew a parallel between the Mayors' responsibilities and his own for the District of Columbia about whose problems he said the Federal Government was "doing something."

He pointed to open public accommodations in Washington, equal employment policies in the Federal and District governments; desegregated public schools; plans for a fair-housing ordinance, private action to open private employment to more Negroes and recommendations for District home rule which would give Negroes greater voice in Washington affairs.

His Administration, he said, Mayors on similar Federal-local programs—to improve public welfare; root out juvenile delinquency; eradicate urban blight, increase youth employment, assist urban mass transit, promote mental health, provide more recreational and health facilities, and war on organized crime.

All these proposals, the President said, could be moved to a higher level of consideration by the creation of a new Cabinet post.

Last year, when Mr. Kennedy proposed a Cabinet-level Department of Urban Affairs, he said he would name Robert C. Weaver, Negro Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, as Secretary.

Mr. Weaver's invovement generally is believed to have been a major reason why the proposal was defeated in Congress.

Mr. Kennedy ended his address with this appeal:

"I ask you to join with me, here and now, in recognizing the rights of all Americans, in guiding along constructive channels the attainment of a peceful revolution, a peaceful revolution which will not only avoid disaster, but fulfill our highest obligations."

The President's only other public activity today was to lay a wreath on the memorial to the battleship Arizona, which was sunk during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

file Presidential Politics

The President has spoken in a most timely and forceful fashion. I commend the speech to every American.

Mr. President, on Thursday, June 6, President Kennedy also spoke at the commencement exercises of San Diego State College. It was a most noteworthy statement concerning the responsibility of the leaders of this country, present and future, to provide the best education possible for all Americans.

Three basic questions were posed by the President. First, does every American child have an equal chance for a good education? Second, is the quality of American education adequate to our current needs? Third, can our existing educational system meet the demands of tomorrow?

These are questions most worthy of the attention of a college graduating class. They are, moreover, questions to which all members of the 88th Congress should attempt to find meaningful answers through comprehensive legislation in behalf of our educational system. The time has come to stop giving primary attention to areas of disagreement and to direct our energies toward solutions of the basic challenges of education.

Within the past few days, then, the President of the United States has spoken out courageously and wisely upon three of the most important subjects of our time—indeed, of all times. First, he has spoken out on the need of education for everyone, for every American in particular. Second, he has spoken out as to the importance of the protection of those basic constitional and human rights for which this country stands and to which this Nation has been dedicated since its founding.

Finally, he has spoken out in the cause of genuine world peace. He has not talked in terms of platitudes or of panaceas, but rather in terms of the process of peace itself and the meaning of a just and enduring peace.

I ask unanimous consent that the President's addresses on the subjects that I have mentioned be printed at this point in the RECORD. They are entitled to a part of the great history of this Nation, and all Americans should have access to them through the pages of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington (D.C.) Post, June 10, 1963]

TEXT OF PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S SPEECH TO MAYORS

I am here to discuss with you a problem which is both national and local—where Federal and municipal governments must act in concert—the problem of race relations.

This is not a southern problem—it is a national problem. And I would ask any mayor who believes there is no problem in his city to talk to those who once believed the same, and then look at his own unemployment, delinquency, housing, and other indicators.

Federal action—including additional Federal legislation—can help to meet this problem. State action can help. But, in the last analysis, what happens in Birmingham or Chicago or Atlanta or Los Angeles depends in large measure on the leadership in those communities. We will back you up—we will work with you in every way we can—but the mayor of every major metropolitan city in every section of America must be aware of the difficult challenge he faces.

I am asking you to be alert, not alarmed. The demonstrations of unrest in Birmingham, Boston, Jackson, Greensboro, Nashville, Philadelphia, and elsewhere can be expected in many other cities in the next few months, North and South. Students will then be out of college and high school. Large numbers of Negroes will still be out of work. The events in Birmingham have stepped up the tempo of the nationwide drive for full equality—and rising summer temperatures are often accompanied by rising human temperatures on all sides.

PEACEFUL REMEDIES

The Federal Government does not control these demonstrations. It neither starts them, directs them, nor stops them. What we can do is to seek, through legislative and Executive action, to provide peaceful remedies for the grievances which set them off—to give all Americans a fair chance to a full life.

I would hope that every mayor here would recognize the assistance they would be provided by those legislative proposals which would help move these disputes from the streets to the courts, erase all doubts as to the validity of conflicting legal arguments, require all merchants in all cities to take similar action at the same time, so that none can hang back for fear of being penalized for moving first, and, finally, meet the rising tide of discontent with appropriate nationwide action, without waiting for city-by-city, case-by-case solutions.

Such legislation is, therefore, in your interst—and I hope it will have your support.

But the final responsibility, both now and after such legislation is enacted, will still rest with you at the local level. The problem is growing. The challenge is there. The cause is just.

The question is whether you will do nothing, thereby inviting pressure and tension and possible violence—or whether you will anticipate these problems and move to fulfill the rights of your Negro citizens in a peaceful and constructive manner.

WISDOM AND FORESIGHT

I ask that you act with wisdom and foresight in these matters—not merely for the peace of the country, but for the good of your own community. The financial history of those communities which have been beset with racial disturbances shows that they attract less capital and do less business. As a Birmingham businessman said, after investment in new plant and expansion had declined 80 percent in the last few years: "We've become known as a city of reaction, rebellion and riot—and because of that we're not gaining industry as fast as we should."

It is not enough to say that these are difficult problems in many parts of the country. The Vice President and I have been impressed in the last 2 years—and particularly in the last few weeks—by how much can be done by those determined to get it done. We have met with employers who were pleasantly surprised by how peacefully their hiring practices could be integrated.

We met last week with merchants from all sections of the country who had, without delay or difficulty, desegregated their public accommodations, including lunch counters, hotels, and theaters. We shall be having more meetings—with labor and religious leaders, with Government and business leaders.

It is clear to me that the time for token moves and idle talk is over—that these rights are going to be won—and that our responsibility, yours and mine, is to see that they are won in a peaceful and constructive manner.

ACTION IN FIVE AREAS

I would suggest at least five areas where you can take important action:

First: Every city can and should establish, preferably through official action by the mayor over governing body, a biracial human relations committee—to identify community tensions before they reach the crisis state, to improve cooperation and communication between the races, and to advise local officials, merchants and organizations as to what steps can be taken to insure prompt progress.

Second: Every local government can and should make certain that its own ordinances and practices are in accordance with constitutional law. The Supreme Court has made it clear beyond dispute that no local ordinance requiring segregation is constitutional—whether it applies to schools, zoning, restaurants, or places of amusement, either privately or publicly owned. Nor can segregation be required without ordinance at a municipal golf course, playground, swimming pool, or other city-owned facilities. In short, every instance or institution of segregation sanctioned by local legislation or public action is clearly invalid—and you should move to abolish it.

There will be a difficult period of transition for some. But "the basic guarantees of our Constitution," the Supreme Court said less than 2 weeks ago, "are warrants for the here and now * * * not merely hopes to some future enjoyment."

Third: Every local government can and should follow nondiscriminatory practices in the employment and promotion of its municipal workers. No group of taxpayers or voters should be excluded from the payrolls of your police, fire, school, and other departments. No city government can expect to understand the views of its Negro citizens—and no community can be expected to look favorably on its city government—unless men and women of all races are employed at all levels, supervisory as well as custodial, in all parts of that government.

Fourth: Every local government can and should enact equal opportunity ordinances to spell out the civil rights of all who live in that community; ordinances on equal employment opportunities, equal housing opportunities, and equal access to public accommodations. Such measures are not the exclusive concern of the Federal Government. On the contrary, where local leaders have assumed this responsibility, there has been remarkably little difficulty with racial problems. Where local government has abdicated this responsibility and left it to the Federal Government, there has been too much difficulty.

Fifth: I urge each of you personally to undertake a special campaign this summer in your own community to lessen unemployment among the unskilled of both races by reducing school dropouts. Tell your young people to stay in school. Tell them their chances for steady, gainful employment will be far better for every year of schooling. Tell them that unemployment among 16- and 21-year-olds is already at the million mark, with more on the way for, as the number of young jobseekers grows, the proportion of unskilled jobs has dropped to 1 out of 20.

STEPS ON FEDERAL LEVEL

I have not proposed to you any step that the Federal Government is unwilling to take in its own area of jurisdiction. We have undertaken to eliminate segregation and discrimination in Federal employment, in federally financed housing and construction, in Federal recreation areas, in our cafeterias, and other facilities. The proportion of Negroes holding Federal jobs in many areas is still distressingly low, particularly in the higher grade jobs. But we aim to change this as quickly as possible and, nationwide, have increased the number of Negroes in the higher grades by more than a third.

We have supported equal rights in the courts and the Congress, and will shortly prepare further steps.

Your responsibilities, of course, are more localized—but we are responsible for a city: The District of Columbia. Much has been written about crime and race relations in Washington—much of it untrue—but we are concerned about the District's problems, though they are less than those of some other cities and, more importantly, we are doing something about them.

All places of public accommodation in the Nation's Capital have been opened, with little difficulty, to customers of all races. Equal employment is the policy of the District government as well as the Federal Government. There is no racial bar to any public school in Washington. The District Commissioners have announced their intention to enact a fair housing ordinance unless the Congress itself does so promptly.

We are actively intervening to open up more employment opportunities in the building trades union. And we have urged the Congress to provide home rule for the District in order that all the citizens of Washington may participate more actively and effectively in accomplishing needed improvements.

PROGRESS IN WASHINGTON

Moreover, by striving to improve the quality of life for the residents of the District, Negro and white alike, we are helping to ease the economic and other pressures which would otherwise increase tensions. We are prepared to work with you on similar Federal-local programs—to improve public welfare, to root out juvenile delinquency, to eradicate urban blight, to increase youth employment, to assist urban mass transit, to promote mental health, to provide more recreational and health facilities and to war on organized crime.

These measures—some of which are barely underway—have been effective in the District of Columbia, and I know that, on a nationwide basis, they have, for the most part, been supported by this conference in the Congress. The elevation of all these urban development problems to a higher level of consideration by the creation of a new Cabinet post is already long overdue.

In conclusion, my fellow chief executives, may I say this: Improvement of race relations and the fulfillment of human rights is a continuing problem and challenge. I do not propose to limit our mutual concern to this one brief address. I hope to meet with many of you in the White House in the near future.

But justice cannot wait for too many meetings. It cannot wait the action of the Congress or even the courts. We face a moment of moral and constitutional crisis—and men of generosity and vision must make themselves heard in every part of the land. I do not say that all men are equal in their ability, character, and motivation. I do say that every American should be given a fair chance to develop in full whatever talents he has and to share equally in the American dream.

On your return from this conference, you can set an example in your communities to which the timid can rally and which those clinging in the past cannot ignore. I ask you to join with me, here and now, in recognizing the rights of all Americans—in guiding along constructive channels the attainment of a peaceful revolution, a peaceful revolution which will not only avoid disaster but fulfill our highest obligations.

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AT SAN DIEGO STATE COLLEGE

This is a proud moment—proud for me as a recipient of this honorary degree, proud for those of you who have earned your degrees with hard labor, proud for your families and communities who also labored hard for this achievement. Only a small portion of the world's population can share and understand that pride. In fact, only a small portion of our own population have completed four years of college.

You are the fortunate ones. You will be the leaders, the doers, the contributors to our society and progress. You will, on the average, earn nearly twice as much in your lifetime as high school graduates and over three times as much as grade school graduates.

Yes, you are the fortunate ones, the educated, the elite, the only aristocracy our system permits. But I am not here merely to congratulate you, to remind you of your future riches. I am here to remind you of your responsibilities—and particularly your responsibility toward education, toward those who should follow in your footsteps.

THREE BASIC QUESTIONS

However proud we may be, and have a right to be, over the past achievements of our education system, it is time the whole Nation faced up more frankly to the answers to three basic questions: First, whether every American child has an equal chance for a good education; second, whether the quality of American education is adequate to our current needs; and third, whether the educational system we have today can meet the demands of tomorrow.

First, does every American child today have a fair educational opportunity? Let me cite a few facts:

1. In this fortunate State of California, the average current expenditure for a boy or girl in the public schools is $515. But in the State of Mississippi it is $230. The average salary for classroom teachers in California is $7,050, while it is only $3,610 in Mississippi.

2. Nearly three-quarters of the young white population of our Nation have graduated from high school, but only about two-fifths of our nonwhite population have finished. In some States, almost 40 percent of the nonwhite population has completed less than 5 years of school contrasted with 7 percent of the white population.

3. In one American State, over 36 percent of the public school buildings are over 40 years old. In another, only 4 percent are that old.

TWO REASONS CITED

Such facts—and one could prolong this recital indefinitely—make it clear that American children today do not yet enjoy equal educational opportunities, for two primary reasons: one is economic, and the other is racial.

If our Nation is to meet the goal of giving every American child a fair educational break, we must move swiftly ahead in both areas. We must put more resources into the undernourished sectors of our education system. And we must recognize that segregation in education—and I mean the de facto segregation of the North as well as the proclaimed segregation of the South—brings with it serious handicaps to a large percentage of our Nation's population.

Our goal must be an educational system in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence—a system in which all are created equal, a system in which every child, whether born a banker's son in a Long Island mansion or a Negro sharecropper's son in an Alabama cotton field, has every opportunity for an education that his abilities and character deserve.

SECOND QUESTION

The second question relates to the quality of our education. Does our system effectively educate our boys and girls to meet the needs and problems of our contemporary society?

Again let us look at some facts:

1. One out of every three students in the fifth grade will drop out before high school graduation. And only 2 out of every 10 will graduate from college—unless we do something about it. In the meantime, the occupations and professions which require increased education and training continue to grow, while employment in unskilled jobs continues to decline.

2. Of Americans 18 years of age or older, more than 23 million have had less than 8 years of schooling, and over 8 million less than 5 years. As a result, many of these fellow citizens lack the ability to read or write with ease or to do simple arithmetic. They are termed "functional illiterates," and it is no accident that they constitute the hardest "hard core" of our unemployed and those on welfare.

One out of every ten workers who fail to finish elementary school is unemployed today as compared to 1 out of 50 college graduates.

3. Even students who finish elementary school or high school often lack a solid grounding in the humane and classical disciplines which are the heart of our civilization.

NEEDS ARE CITED

In short, our current educational programs do not meet our current needs. We need a major effort to eradicate adult illiteracy, for the man who cannot read a "help wanted" ad or write a letter is beaten before he starts. We need to improve our programs of technical and vocational education, both in school and after school. We need to combat the dropout problem.

Finally, we need to strengthen the freedom of research, inquiry and judgment which is the glory of our civilization. Our schools must present our children with all the facts about their world and their heritage, not just those which support a single viewpoint or party line. For education is the instrument of freedom, and indoctrination the weapon of tyranny—and the difference between education and indoctrination best sums up the difference between ourselves and our adversaries abroad.

The third and final question we must ask is: What of the future? Four million boys and girls are born each year in the United States. Our population is growing each decade by a figure equal to the total population of the country at the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln. Is our educational system adequate to meet the needs of an expanding population, and expanding technology and an expanding culture?

Here are some facts:

1. By 1970, the number of students in our public elementary and secondary schools will have increased by 25 percent over that of 1960. Nearly three-quarters of a million new classrooms are needed during this decade, but our present construction rate will not provide them.

2. By 1970, we will have 7 million students in our colleges and universities, nearly 3 million more than we have today. This will require over $2 billion a year for facilities—a billion dollars more than we are devoting today.

3. By 1970, we will need 7,500 Ph. D's. each year in the physical sciences, mathematics and enginering if we are to continue our economic growth and preserve our military security—but in 1960 we graduated only 3,000.

Such facts make it clear how far out present effort falls below our future need. We must take rapid measures to enlarge our educational facilities, to extend our program of fellowships, to improve our teacher training and our libraries and our laboratories, and to work in every way to keep our education abreast of our population growth.

TASK FOR ENTIRE NATION

Education, historically and necessarily, is the responsibility of the State and the local community. Those who are willing to make the necessary investment—in approving bond issues, in building modern facilities, in paying salaries sufficient to attract and retain talented teachers, in encouraging freedom of discussion and dissent—will receive rich dividends on that investment. Their communities will prosper, their horizons will expand.

But this is a task for the entire Nation, for every citizen, and for government at every level. Your own State has shown what a difference forward-looking leadership can make, under Governor Brown, your legislation, and the master plan for education.

But education is also a national responsibility. Not every State can do what California has done. But California has a stake in what every State does—or fails to do. People move freely from one State to another; these are not 50 separate States.

The role of the Federal Government is not to take over the responsibility of the States; it is to give the States the means to fulfill that responsibility, which they owe to themselves and the Nation.

PROGRAM RECOMMENDED

For this reason, I have recommended to the Congress a comprehensive education improvement program. It is designed to help meet the needs of higher education by assisting the construction of college academic facilities, junior colleges, graduate centers, and technical institutes, and by stepping up existing programs for student loans, graduate fellowships and other student assistance programs.

It is designed to improve educational research and to authorize increased training of teachers of the gifted, the handicapped, and the culturally deprived. It is designed to strengthen public elementary and secondary education through grants to the States for better teacher salaries, to relieve critical classroom shortages, to meet the special educational problems of depressed areas and to continue and expand existing programs for vocational education, guidance, and counseling.

Finally, this program is designed to meet the continuing education needs of our communities by a massive attack on illiteracy, by an expansion of university extension courses and a major effort to improve library services in each community as well as in our schools and colleges.

AWARE OF OBJECTIONS

I am well aware of all the objections which have been raised for more than 50 years to any kind of Federal effort in education—objections involving States rights and civil rights, objections involving race and religion, objections to including this item or not including some other item.

But the time has come for the American people of every party and section to realize the immensity and the necessity of this challenge, to realize that no solution will please everyone, and to mobilize their aroused support behind a program such as the one I have sent to the Congress. And I hope that those of you who have received the blessings of education will be in the forefront of that fight.

This is no novel or subversive idea. "By far the most important bill in our whole code," wrote Jefferson, "is that for the diffusion of knowledge among the people. No other sure foundation can be devised for preservation of freedom and happiness."

Jefferson truly spoke the American faith. As a nation, we have no deeper concern, no older commitment and no higher interest than a strong, sound, and free system of education for all. In fulfilling this obligation to ourselves and our children, we provide for the future of our Nation—and for the future of freedom.

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT AT AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, WASHINGTON, D.C., JUNE 10, 1963

"There are few earthly things more beautiful than a university," wrote John Masefield, in his tribute to the English universities—and his words are equally true here. He did not refer to spires and towers, to campus greens, and ivied walls. He admired the splendid beauty of the university, he said, because it was "a place where those who hate ignorance may strive to know, where those who perceive truth may strive to make others see."

I have, therefore, chosen this time and this place to discuss a topic on which ignorance too often abounds and the truth is too rarely perceived—yet it is the most important topic on earth: world peace.

What kind of peace do I mean? What kind of peace do we seek? Not a pax Americana enforced on the world by American weapons of war. Not the peace of the grave or the security of the slave. I am talking about genuine peace—the kind of peace that makes life on earth worth living—the kind that enables men and nations to grow and to hope and to build a better life for their children—not merely peace for Americans but peace for all men—not merely peace in our time but peace for all time.

I speak of peace because of the new face of war. Total war makes no sense in an age when great powers can maintain large and reltaively invulnerable nuclear forces and refuse to surrender without resort to those forces. It makes no sense in an age when a single nuclear weapon contains almost 10 times the explosive force delivered by all of the Allied air forces in the Second World War. It makes no sense in an age when the deadly poisons produced by a nuclear exchange would be carried by wind and water and soil and seed to the far corners of the globe and to generations unborn.

Today the expenditure of billions of dollars every year on weapons acquired for the purpose of making sure we never need to use them is essential to keeping the peace. But surely the acquisition of such idle stockpiles—which can only destroy and can never create—is not the only, much less the most efficient, means of assuring peace.

I speak of peace, therefore, as the necessary rational end of rational men. I realize that the pursuit of peace is not as dramatic as the pursuit of war—and frequently the words of the pursuer fall on weary ears. But we have not more urgent task.

Some say that it is useless to speak of world peace or world law or world disarmament—and that it will be useless until the leaders of the Soviet Union adopt a more enlightened attitude. I hope they do. I believe we can help them to do it. But I also believe that we must reexamine our own attitude—as individuals and as a Nation—for our attitude is as essential as theirs. And every graduate of this school, every thoughtful citizen who despairs of war and wishes to help bring peace, should begin by looking inward—by examining his own attitude toward the possibilities of peace, toward the Soviet Union, toward the course of the cold war and toward freedom and peace here at home.

First, let us reexamine our attitude toward peace itself. Too many of us think it impossible. Too many think it unreal. But that is a dangerous, defeatist belief. It leads to the conclusion that war is inevitable—that mankind is doomed—that we are gripped by forces we cannot control.

We need not accept that view. Our problems are man-made—therefore, they can be solved by man. And man can be as big as he wants. No problem of human destiny is beyond the reach of human beings. Man's reason and spirit have often solved the seemingly unsolvable—and we believe they can do it again.

I am not referring to the absolute, infinite concept of universal peace and good will of which some fantasies and fanactics still dream. I do not deny the values of hopes and dreams but we would merely invite discouragement and incredulity by making that our only and immediate goal.

Let us focus instead on a more practical, more attainable peace—based not on a sudden revolution in human nature but on a gradual evolution in human institutions—on a series of concrete actions and effective agreements which are in the interest of all concerned. There is no single, simple key to this peace—no grand or magic formula to be adopted by one or two powers. Genuine peace must be the product of many nations, the sum of many acts. It must be dynamic, not static, changing to meet the challenge of each generation. For peace is a process—a way of solving problems.

With such a peace, there will still be quarrels and conflicting interests, as there are within families and nations. World peace, like community peace, does not require that each man love his neighbor—it requires only that they live together with mutual tolerance, submitting their disputes to a just and peaceful settlement. And history teaches us that enmities between nations, as between individuals, do not last forever. However fixed our likes and dislikes may seem, the tide of time and events will often bring surprising shifts in the relations between nations and neighbors.

So let us persevere. Peace need not be impracticable—and war need not be inevitable. By defining our goal more clearly—by making it seem more manageable and less remote—we can help all people to see it, to draw hope from it, and to move irresistibly toward it.

Second, let us reexamine our attitude toward the Soviet Union. It is discouraging to think that their leaders may actually believe what their propagandists continually write. It is discouraging to read a recent authoritative Soviet text on military strategy and find, on page after page, wholly baseless and incredible claims—such as the allegation that "American imperialist circles are preparing to unleash different types of wars * * * that there is a very real threat of a preventive war being unleashed by American imperialists against the Soviet Union * * * (and that) the political aims of the American imperialists are to enslave economically and politically the European and other capitalist countries * * * (and) to achieve world domination * * * by means of aggressive wars."

Truly, as it was written long ago: "The wicked flee when no man pursueth." Yet it is sad to read these Soviet statements—to realize the extent of the gulf between us. But it is also a warning—a warning to the American people not to fall into the same trap as the Soviets, not to see only a distorted and desperate view of the other side, not to see conflict as inevitable, accommodation as impossible and communication as nothing more than an exchange of epithets and threats.

No government or social system is so evil that its people must be considered to be lacking in virtue. As Americans, we find communism profoundly repugnant as a negation of personal freedom and dignity. But we can still hail the Russian people for their many achievements—in science and space, in economic and industrial growth, in culture and in acts of courage.

Among the many traits the peoples of our two countries have in common, none is stronger than our mutual abhorrence of war. Almost unique among the major world powers, we have never been at war with each other. And no nation in the history of battle ever suffered more than the Russians suffered in the course of the Second World War. At least 20 million lost their lives. Countless millions of homes and farms were burned or sacked. A third of the nation's territory, including nearly two-thirds of its industrial base, was turned into a wasteland—a loss equivalent to the devastation of all this country east of Chicago.

Today, should total war ever break out again—no matter how—our two countries would become primary targets. It is an ironical but accurate fact that the two strongest powers are the two in most danger of devastation. All we have built up, all we have worked for, would be destroyed. And even in the cold war—which brings burdens and dangers to so many countries, including this nation's closest allies—our two countries bear the heaviest burdens. For we are both devoting cast sums to massive weapons that could better be used to combat ignorance, poverty, and disease. We are both caught up in a vicious and dangerous cycle in which suspicion on one side breeds suspicion on the other, and new weapons beget counter-weapons.

In short, both the United States and its allies, and the Soviet Union and its allies, have a mutually deep interest in a just and genuine peace and in halting the arms race. Agreements to this end are in the Soviets' interest as well as ours—and even the most hostile nations can be relied upon to accept and keep those treaty obligations, and only those treaty obligations, which are in their own interest.

So, let us not be blind to our differences—but let us also direct attention to our common interests and to the means by which those differences can be resolved. And if we cannot now end our differences, at least we can help make the world safe for diversity. For, in the final analysis, our most basic common link is the fact that we all inhabit this planet. We all breathe the same air. We all cherish our children's future. And we are all mortal.

Third, let us reexamine our attitude toward the cold war. Let us remember that we are not engaged in a debate, seeking to pile up debating points. We are not here distributing blame or pointing the finger of judgment. We must deal with the world as it is, and not as it might have been had the history of the last 18 years been different.

We must, therefore, persevere in the search for peace in the hope that constructive changes within the Communist bloc might bring within reach solutions which now seem beyond us. We must conduct our affairs in such a way that it becomes in the Communists' interest to agree on a genuine peace. Above all, while always defending our own vital interests, nuclear powers must avert those confrontations which present an adversary with a choice of either a humiliating retreat or a nuclear war. To adopt that kind of course in the nuclear age would be evidence only of the bankruptcy of our policy—or of a collective death-wish for the world.

To secure these ends, America's weapons are nonprovocative, carefully controlled, designed to deter and capable of selective use. Our military forces are committed to peace and disciplined in self-restraint. Our diplomats are instructed to avoid unnecessary irritants and purely rhetorical hostility.

For we can seek a relaxation of tension without relaxing our guard. And, for our part, we do not need to use threats to prove that we are resolute. We do not need to jam foreign broadcasts out of fear our faith will be eroded. We are unwilling to impose our system on any unwilling people—but we are willing and able to engage in peaceful competition with any people on earth.

Meanwhile, we seek to strengthen the United Nations, to help solve its financial problems, to make it a more effective instrument of peace, to develop it into a genuine world security system—a system capable of resolving disputes on the basis of law, of insuring the security of the large and the small, and of creating conditions under which arms can be finally abolished.

At the same time we seek to keep peace inside the non-Communist world, where many nations, all of them our friends, are divided over issues which weaken Western unity, which invite Communist intervention or which threaten to erupt into war. Our efforts in west New Guinea, in the Congo, in the Middle East and in the Indian subcontinent, have been persistent and patient despite criticism from both sides. We have also tried to set an example for others—by seeking to adjust small but significant differences with our own closest neighbors in Mexico and in Canada.

Speaking of other nations, I wish to make one point clear. We are bound to many nations by alliances. Those alliances exist because their concerns and ours substantially overlap. Our commitment to defend Western Europe and West Berlin, for example, stands undiminished because of the identity of our vital interests. The United States will make no deal with the Soviet Union at the expense of other nations and other peoples, not merely because they are our partners, but because their interests and our converge.

Our interests converge, however, not only in defending the frontiers of freedom, but in pursuing the paths of peace. It is our hope—and the purpose of Allied policies—to convince the Soviet Union that she, too, should let each nation choose its own future, so long as that choice does not interfere with the choices of others. The Communist drive to impose their political and economic system on others is the primary cause of world tension today. For there can be no doubt that, if all nations, could refrain from interfering in the self-determination of others, the peace would be much more assured.

This will require a new effort to achieve world law—a new context for world discussions. It will require increased understanding between the Soviets and ourselves. And increased understanding will require increased contact and communication. One step in this direction is the proposed arrangement for a direct line between Moscow and Washington, to avoid on each side the dangerous delays, misunderstandings, and misreadings of the other's actions which might occur in a time of crisis.

We have also been talking in Geneva about other first-step measures of arms control, designed to limit the intensity of the arms race and to reduce the risks of accidental war. Our primary long-range interest in Geneva, however, is general and complete disarmament—designed to take place by stages, permitting parallel political developments to build the new institutions of peace which would take the place of arms. The pursuit of disarmament has been an effort of this Government since the 1920's. It has been urgently sought by the last three administrations. And however dim the prospects may be today, we intend to continue this effort—to continue it in order that all countries, including our own, can better grasp what the problems and possibilities of disarmament really are.

The one major area of these negotiations where the end is in sight—yet where a fresh start is badly needed—is a treaty to outlaw nuclear tests. The conclusion of such a treaty—so near and yet so far—would check the spiraling arms race in one of its most dangerous areas. It would place the nuclear powers in a position to deal more effectively with one of the greatest hazards which man faces—the further spread of nuclear arms. It would increase our security—it would decrease the prospects of war. Surely this goal is sufficiently important to require our steady pursuit, yielding neither to the temptation to give up the whole effort nor the temptation to give up our insistence on vital safeguards.

I am taking this opportunity, therefore, to announce two important decisions in this regard:

First, Chairman Khrushchev, Prime Minister Macmillan and I have agreed that high-level discussions will shortly begin in Moscow looking toward early agreement on a comprehensive test ban treaty. Our hopes must be tempered with the caution of history—but with our hopes go the hopes of all mankind.

Second, to make clear our good faith and solemn convictions on this matter, I now declare that the United States does not propose to conduct nuclear tests in the atmosphere so long as other States do not do so. We will not be the first to resume. Such a declaration is no substitute for a formal binding treaty—but I hope it will help us achieve one. Nor would such a treaty be a substitute for disarmament—but I hope it will help us achieve it.

Finally, my fellow Americans, let us reexamine our attitude toward peace and freedom here at home. The quality and spirit of our own society must justify and support our efforts abroad. We must show it in the dedication of our own lives—as many of you who are graduating today will have a unique opportunity to do, by serving without pay in the Peace Corps abroad or in the proposed National Service Corps here at home.

But wherever we are, we must all, in our daily lives, live up to the age-old faith that peace and freedom walk together. In too many of our cities today, the peace is not secure because freedom is incomplete.

It is the responsibility of the executive branch at all levels of government—local, State, and National—to provide and protect that freedom for all citizens by all means within their authority. It is the responsibility of the legislative branch at all levels, wherever that authority is not now adequate, to make it adequate. And it is the responsibility of all citizens in all sections to respect the rights of all others and to respect the law of the land.

All this is not unrelated to world peace. "When a man's ways please the Lord," the Scriptures tell us, "he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." And is not peace, in the last analysis, basically a matter of human rights—the right to live out our lives without fear of devastation—the right to breathe air as nature provided it—the right of future generations to a healthy existence?

While we proceed to safeguard our national interests, let us also safeguard human interests. And the elimination of war and arms is clearly in the interest of both. No treaty, however much it may be to the advantage of all, however tightly it may be worded, can provide absolute security against the risks of deception and evasion. But it can—if it is sufficiently effective in its enforcement and if it is sufficiently in the interests of its signers—offer far more security and far fewer risks than an unabated, uncontrolled, unpredictable arms race.

The United States, as the world knows, will never start a war. We do not want a war. We do not now expect a war. This generation of Americans has already had enough—more than enough—of war and hate and oppression. We shall be prepared for war, if others wish it. We shall be alert to try to stop it. But we shall also do our part

AIRCRAFT USED BY SENATOR GOLDWATER TO FLY TO CLEVELAND IS PERSONAL PROPERTY OF H. H. TIMKEN, JR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAGEN of California). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOW] is recognized for 10 minutes.

(Mr. BOW asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANIK] made some remarks relating to people in my own congressional district and I do not believe the day should go by without some reply to those remarks. I advised the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANIK] that I intended to make these remarks on the floor this afternoon.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANIK] should have checked his facts before he issued his bitter attack today upon the Timken Co., of Canton, Ohio, for allegedly using a company aircraft to take Senator GOLDWATER to Cleveland for a political engagement.

The aircraft used by Senator GOLDWATER to fly to Cleveland is a four-place jet that is the personal property of H. H. Timken, Jr., and not the property of the Timken Co.

This information was given to the individual, presumably Mr. VANIK's agent, who checked at the airport yesterday.

We have gone a long way from the fundamental precepts of individual liberty in this country if a man can be criticized for using his own personal property, be it an old Ford or a new jet aircraft, to carry his friends and associates wherever he wants to go at any time.

No tax writeoff is involved, the corporation is not involved, and Mr. VANIK could have learned this easily if he had wished to do so before he launched his unreasoned attack upon the Timken family.

Let me say at this point that no man in any community in this country is more civic minded than H. H. Timken, Jr. I have just returned from Canton where we dedicated last week the new Stark County Historical Society, the National Professional Football Hall of Fame and the new Canton City Plaza, in all of which Mr. Timken has had a leading role. That he should be subjected to unreasonable attack in the House today is a scandalous thing.

Let me add that when the gentleman from Ohio who spoke earlier today rises to criticize transportation, he might do well to begin in his own political party where, as the senior Senator from Virginia pointed out last week, the most extravagant President in the history of the United States has at his disposal and in almost constant use by himself, his brothers, sisters and other, 10 helicopters, a private $8 million fan-jet Boeing 707-320 airplane, three other Boeing 707's luxuriously appointed, one Air Force Douglas DC-6B for airports where jets cannot land, a 20-foot Lincoln Continental automobile in addition to three other family cars and the regular White House fleet, a special railroad car, two yachts, a third yacht available from the Navy, and a racing yawl supplied by the Coast Guard.

The Senator was kind enough to omit mention of the other Army and Air Force aircraft that are dispatched to Hyannis Port, Palm Beach or wherever the Presidential family may be vacationing to carry the morning newspapers, the afternoon mail and whatever else may be required for the comfort and convenience of the first family, all at the taxpayers' expense.

The matter I rise in objection to, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that in the case of the Timken Co., Mr. Timken spent his own money and bought the aircraft with his own money which he had earned, whereas these other things are being paid for by the taxpayers. We have heard people speaking about here today and saying they are going to do so much for them. One other good way to cut down taxes and expenses is to cut down on some of these luxuries.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I will be glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. AYRES. I have known the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANIK], for a long, long time. In fact, he is a little older than I am, having been born on April 7, 1913, but he is a gentleman who has learned through the years. He has a very sweet wife, Betty, and two children, a daughter and a son, and his son John I know. Mr. VANIK was a city councilman in 1938 in the great city of Cleveland and came to this body in November 1954. I would say to my colleague who adjoins my district, that I do not think Mr. VANIK, who was my college classmate at Adelbert College of Western Reserve University, meant anything derogatory in his statement, but I am surprised that Mr. VANIK would accept the word of someone else, because ordinarily Mr. VANIK is not the type to criticize someone without knowing the facts, and in this case apparently he did not.

Mr. BOW. There is no question but what the facts were not known, or else I am sure Mr. VANIK would not have made this statement. The point I make is it is unfortunate that the name of a great American such as this representative of the Timken Co., or any other person as far as that is concerned, should be bandied around on the floor of this House to the point where they are going to ask the Internal Revenue Service to make an investigation. It puts a cloud upon these people unnecessarily, without any facts back of it.

This is something that has been going on, I am afraid, in this country for too long, where statements of this kind are made which affect these people. It just seems to me most unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that this could happen in this great House of Representatives. We have too many important things to do here. This Congress has been going along, and if you look the record over it

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Kennedy Rights Program Upset

By DREW PEARSON

Washington.

THE INSIDE story of the talks which have gone into President Kennedy's message to Congress on civil rights dates back to more than two months ago when he was trying to work out a compromise bill which would please both sides.

Kennedy, who served in the Senate with Southern senators, was anxious not to alienate them. His planning has always been to give priority to certain bills, and at this Congress, he wanted a tax bill passed first and needed Southern senators to pass it. So he began a painstaking study of civil rights legislation which would not antagonize them.

But Bull Connor's police dogs in Birmingham changed all this. They also changed the plans of Negro leaders.

Roy Wilkins, head of the NAACP, and Rev. Martin Luther King had planned to make 1963, the centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation, a year to dramatize the fact that Negroes had not been fully emancipated from economic and social slavery 100 years after Lincoln freed them. But Wilkins and King had planned peaceful demonstrations.

FLAMES FANNED

However, the photos of the police dogs, trained by the bull-voiced police commissioner of Birmingham, snapping and snarling at Negro demonstrators, fanned the flames which neither the Negro leaders themselves nor President Kennedy can stop. Connor's police dogs have become a symbol to Negroes something like the bombing of Pearl Harbor to the American public.

Negroes have now become emotional, no longer willing to listen to pedestrian, slow solutions, such as Bobby Kennedy's proposal to register and vote.

As a result, the President has been working, almost desperately, behind the scenes, to head off racial eruption that could lead to violence all over the country.

It was his brother, the attorney general, who first warned the President that he would have to make a stronger commitment to Negroes. The attorney general confessed that his previous plan of persuading them to register and vote was too slow to work. The attorney general had urged this instead of freedom marches and sit-in demonstrations.

But he did not figure either on the competition between the more radical Negro organization CORE and the more conservative NAACP. CORE's demonstrations began to take both the money and the leadership away from the NAACP, so NAACP adopted a more vigorous policy.

The Kennedys continued to urge the more moderate approach until a few weeks ago. Then came Bull Connor's police dogs, after which they got reports on how tense and flammable the situation has become. At this point the President began to seek stronger civil rights legislation and also got on the phone to white leaders in the problem areas, urging economics concessions to Negroes. At the same time the two brothers have been on the phone to Negro leaders, urging calm.

Two serious problems have been highlighted in these talks. One is the fact that it makes no difference that Negroes have made more progress in the last two years than at any other time in history; that racial barriers are going down, and that such important Southern cities as Atlanta are becoming desegregated. This recent progress, fast as it has been, is too slow.

Second, a million or so Negroes have migrated to Northern cities expecting to find the millenium, and instead have found unemployment, slums, and poverty. For the most part this is not a matter of discrimination, but of automation and lack of jobs. White labor is suffering too.

CONTINUING

As industry automates, more and more unskilled workers are being thrown out, and Negroes, being less skilled, suffer most. This trend is going to continue.

The Northern Negro who has long lived in the big cities is secure. But the recent arrival from the South is not. This is why the crime rate in Northern cities is high; and why Bull Connor's police dogs in Birmingham have created a dangerous undercurrent in cities as far away as Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles. There, race relations have been fairly good, and a situation resulting from a depressed economy is now being blamed on discrimination.

These are some of the factors behind the President's civil rights message to Congress.—(c1963.)

On The Local Level

THE PRESIDENT reported over the weekend that he realizes the final answer to the problem of racial strains lies at the local level.

Good. This has been so all along and will continue to be so. These problems must be analyzed in the light of local conditions and solutions sought within that framework.

This is a good formula when it works. That is to say, when the leaders of each race face up to the problem, meet in good faith and through collective bargaining rid their communities of one artificial barrier after another.

But this situation assumes forthrightness and good will and patience. It also assumes control by the moderates.

The President's remarks preface his going to Congress for a new civil rights bill. He thinks that what he asks for will put an end to street demonstrations and other provocative measures of the immoderates. These dramatic idiocies have made things considerably more difficult for the men of good will of the middle road.

Whether the President gets what he wants or not will not make too much difference except as a platform plank in the 1964 campaign.

The final answer today and tomorrow, as it was yesterday, rests at the local level.

And this answer is based on mutual tolerance, common sense, a respect for law and order and a realization that we're all in this together.

We have been forthright about our troubles and the way we go about solving them here in Atlanta. We have made admirable progress within the law, and if we can keep our troubles off the streets and in the courts and meeting rooms, nothing can stop us.

ARMY PLANS TO COPE WITH RACE VIOLENCE

WASHINGTON, June 8 (AP) —Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara has designated the Army to carry out Government orders in connection with new racial violence.

Secretary of the Army Cyrus R. Vance is using the existing chain of command to prepare for any additional deployment of troops and to maintain liaison with the field and other Government agencies.

From Mr. Vance, the chain of command runs down through Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, the Army Chief of Staff, to regional commanders, including divisions. From Mr. Vance, it extends up through the Justice Department to the White House, with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy an important figure in shaping Administration policy.

The Army's War Room, focal point for plans and data in day-to-day operations, is used as the clearing point for contact between Army headquarters here and the field. It is also used when the Justice Department or White House need to communicate quickly with Mr. Vance.

RACE GRADUALISM SCORED AS 'FOLLY'

Jewish Congress Offers Plan —Asks Kennedy's Backing

By IRVING SPIEGEL

The American Jewish Congress charged yesterday that the policy of gradualism in achieving racial equality was a "folly and a failure."

The organization's national governing council, its policy-making body, also urged President Kennedy to move "boldly" in coping with what it described as the "crucial domestic issue of our time—closing the civil rights gap between what the Constitution promises and the way millions of Americans live."

In a statement adopted by the council at a special meeting in the Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East Eighty-fourth Street, the organization said that "gradualism means sacrificing the constitutional rights and the potential for human development of a whole generation of American Negroes."

The statement contained an eight-point "basic legislative program" that it urged President Kennedy to include in submitting his civil rights message to Congress this week. The Jewish group called for enactment of measures that would:

¶Give the Department of Justice power to institute court actions to enjoin any denial of equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the 14th Amendment.

¶Require all public school districts still maintaining racial segregation — including those that have achieved only token desegregation — to prepare and promptly carry out plans for full integration at the beginning of the next school year.

¶Provide Federal financial assistance, technical aid and advice to school districts that need help in integrating their schools.

¶Prohibit discrimination based on race, religion or national origin in all places of public accommodation that affect interstate commerce or are licensed by state or local officials.

¶Protect effectively the right to vote, including a provision making a sixth grade education conclusive proof of literacy.

¶Require all present and future legislation providing for Federal benefits to include effective provisions prohibiting discrimination in the distribution of such benefits.

¶Make the Civil Rights Commission a permanent body and give it authority to investigate not only denial of voting rights but also every aspect of racial or religious discrimination.

Shad Polier, chairman of the governing council, submitted the eight-point program. The meeting was attended by leaders of the American Jewish Congress from various sections of the country.

LONDON, June 8 (Reuters) —Mohammad Zafrulla Khan, president of the United Nations General Assembly, arrived in Leningrad Saturday to begin an eight-day tour of the Soviet Union, the Russian press agency Tass reported.

Kennedy Bad as Ike, Says King

NEW YORK—The civil rights approach of the Kennedy Administration—as opposed to that of the Eisenhower Administration—has been merely to substitute "an inadequate approach for a miserable one," the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. asserted Sunday.

He said President Kennedy "may have done a little more" than former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, "But the plight of the vast majority of Negroes remains the same."

In his broadest attack to date on President Kennedy's civil rights record, the Southern Negro integrationist leader charged the President with a failure of leadership and with not having lived up to his campaign promises.

CHANCE TO RECOUP

King indicated that Kennedy might have a chance to recoup if the civil rights proposals that are expected to be given Congress this week are strong ones.

But he called on the President to "do more than issue a call," and said he should not make his planned trip to Europe later this month, but stay in Washington to push the program.

"If he leaves, he would be doing a grave disservice to the nation and to the civil rights movement," King asserted. He spoke in a two-hour taped interview with David Susskind on the "Open End" television program on Station WPIX in New York.

Among other things, Kennedy could revive "fireside chats" to explain civil rights to the nation, Dr. King suggested. But he said that above all the President must start talking of integration in moral terms—in which "We seldom if ever hear the President of the United States speaking—rather than purely political terms."

IKE IS ATTACKED

President Eisenhower failed "to take a forthright moral stand" after the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling in 1954, and "this set us back." Dr. King indicated that integrationist groups, to aid the President, may stage "a march on Washington, even sit-ins in Congress."

In another broadcast Sunday, Malcolm X, the Black Muslim leader, expressed what appeared to be mild criticism of Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr., D-N.Y., who appeared on the platform at a Muslim rally this spring.

Asked on the WCBS radio program "Let's find out" if the Harlem congressman was "moving in your direction," Malcolm said:

"It's hard to tell. He moves in one direction one minute and another direction another minute. He's flexible."

Reuther Prods Democrats On Civil Rights Platform

Pres. Pol. — Huff 6-10-63

DETROIT, June 8 (UPI)—Walter P. Reuther, president of the United Automobile Workers, called Saturday for immediate implementation of the civil rights planks in the Democratic national platform of 1960.

Mr. Reuther made the plea in a telegram to President Kennedy and Congressional leaders.

"There is no half-way house to human freedom," Mr. Reuther said. "We must determine now, once and for all, whether we believe in the United States Constitution, which guarantees the rights of all citizens; whether we are willing to act in the knowledge that all men are free and have the right to exercise all the privileges of freedom."

Jackie Selects Colors For Ranch-Style Home

6-10-63 cont. Pres. Pol.

Caroline is getting "pink frost" for her new bedroom and John Jr.'s will be done in a good, cowboy color, dessert Zinia, a lively yellow.

A tasteful yet conservative group of appropriate colors are being used in the new ranch-style summer home of President and Mrs. Kennedy located on Rattlesnake Mountain near the village of Marshall, Va.

Mrs. Kennedy made this selection of tones for both interior and exterior finishes. The walls of the reception hall and the corridors are done in off white and the woodwork matches the walls in a satin finish.

PRESIDENT'S ROOM

Both ceiling and walls in the President's bedroom are finished in pure white. Mrs. Kennedy's bedroom has the ceiling in off white with floral pattern wallpaper.

Off white was used in the nurse's room. Both ceiling and walls of the guest room is papered with a large multi-colored block pattern and the woodwork is finished in a satin white.

DUSTY PINK

The walls of the large living room are in a dusty pink, and the dining room in a warm yellow. The kitchen and counter space areas are finished in a pure white semi-gloss.

The exterior surfaces are in a dusty gold shade with the wood trim painted in gleaming white. Colorwise, both interior and exterior colors of the summer home definitely make for cheerful, leisurely living.

'Peak' Sweet

Try powdered sugar instead of granulated in whipped cream. It will be in "peak" condition when ready to serve.

Fire Hoses Halt Negroes In Danville

DANVILLE, Va., (AP) — Hose-wielding firemen and police armed with nightsticks broke up a Negro demonstration around the City Jail Monday night and a Negro leader warned that soon "blood may flow in the streets."

The melee broke out near the jail where 37 Negroes had been imprisoned earlier in the day during a noisy protest march through downtown Danville.

Three additional persons, including a white man, John Robert Zellner, 24, of Atlanta, were arrested in the 10 minutes or so it took authorities to disperse the crowd of about 50 at the jail.

A Negro leader, the Rev. A. I. Dunlap, charged that some of the demonstrators were "beaten unmercifully" with police clubs and said:

"I am mighty afraid violence will erupt."

Dixie, Negroes To Aid GOP, Miller Hopes

Republican National Chairman William E. Miller indicated here Tuesday the party hopes to carry the South and get the Negro vote, too, in next year's presidential election.

William E. Miller

It was failure to get not all of the one and not enough of the other that cost candidate Richard Nixon the election in 1960. Mr. Miller a New York congressman, told the Georgia Association of Broadcasters Monday night the GOP now concedes no area in the South.

In an interview Tuesday he also let it be known the party does not intend to be maneuvered out of the Negro vote this time. Many observers credit Kennedy telephone calls to Georgia in behalf of Martin Luther King Jr. with the tilting of the Negro vote to the Democratic side.

"The history of the party indicates we ought to get them," Rep. Miller said about the vote of Negroes.

HE STEERED clear of any too direct comments on current racial troubles except to say the party has had no unusual number of overtures from citizens of Alabama and Mississippi. There, racial troubles are greatest and dislike of the Kennedys is keenest.

"I don't think this trouble is localized," he said about racial tension. "We have heard quite a bit lately from Philadelphia."

As national chairman until one day after the 1964 Republican convention—he says he is getting out of politics then—Mr. Miller would express no personal preference for any of the mentioned contenders.

BUT HE DID LIST the ones he says he hears the most about—Nelson Rockefeller, Barry Goldwater and George Romney—and commented that he thinks "no one has a commanding lead right now."

In answer to a question, he said he had the same opinion six weeks ago, before the re-marriage of his homestate governor.

Several months ago there were reports one group of Republicans, including some Mississippi-based one, were out to get rid of Mr. Miller. However, he more than weathered that storm, and his slashing attacks on the Kennedys have been highly praised in some quarters, especially Republican ones.

HE DID ANNOUNCE recently, however, he intends to quit Congress and the party after the convention, to spend more time with his family and private affairs.

RFK Fails To Sway Dixie On Rights Try

Atlanta Journal Bureau
1426 G Street, NW

WASHINGTON, June 11 — A warning by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy of possible racial disorder has failed to soften opposition of Southern senators, including Georgia's, to new civil rights legislation.

Mr. Kennedy met privately Monday at the Capitol with Sen. Richard B. Russell and Sen. Herman E. Talmadge of Georgia and at least nine other Dixie solons.

Sen. Russell said afterwards: "We had a complete meeting of the mind—we agreed to disagree."

The Georgia senior senator said the conference was friendly, but the Southerners made it clear they would not support proposals which "aim another blow at property rights in this country."

The Kennedy administration reportedly will offer legislation to lower racial barriers in privately owned public accommodations such as restaurants, hotels and theaters.

SENATE Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., who arranged the session, said the matter of a filibuster by the Southerners was not discussed.

It is generally accepted that the Southern group, headed by Sen. Russell, will resist new legislation with a filibuster.

Sen. Russell is expected to call the Southern caucus together soon to plan strategy.

One source described the session as "completely abortive." The attorney general made no dent whatever in the Southerners' resistance, the source said.

Eleven of the 17 senators who comprise the Southern caucus were reported present at the meeting.

U.S. Mayors of South and North Back Kennedy Integration Aims

Civil Rights Is Uppermost at Parley of the 650 Executives in Hawaii

By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES
Special to The New York Times

HONOLULU, June 10—Mayors from South and North informally and individually today accepted major points of a race relations challenge left with the United States Conference of Mayors here yesterday by President Kennedy.

Some from both sections asserted they already had met most of the salient recommendations made by the President for solving the critical domestic racial problems.

And Chief of Police Herbert Jenkins of Atlanta, in an outspoken criticism of the actions of some Southern mayors and governors, told the opening session of the mayors, confrence that he had never ceased to be amazed to hear them "even express a sincere belief that the status quo will be maintained notwithstanding what the United States Supreme Court might rule."

Race Relations in Forefront

The conference opened at the Hilton Hawaiian Village, with race relations the uppermost topic among the 650 delegates and aides, even though civil rights appeared nowhere in the official agenda. A floor fight over a prospective civil rights resolution remained a possibility for later in the week.

Mayor Richard C. Lee of New Haven, Conn., in his opening address as conference president, interpolated the following comment in his prepared text after welcoming speeches by Mayor Neal S. Blaisdell of Honolulu and Lieut Gov. William Richardson of Hawaii:

"The President used plain and blunt language in race relations and the role that each of us can have in the most difficult elective position in America. The answers are in our hands, hearts and minds."

Mayor Wagner of New York, outside the meeting hall, linked race and unemployment as "the great domestic problems" and said, "Everybody has to realize he cannot close his eyes and hope they go away."

Appraising President Kennedy's speech as "a timely one to mayors all over the country," Mr. Wagner said New York had covered the five areas advocated by the President — establishing a biracial human relations committee, seeing that local ordinances and practices were in accord with constitutional law, following non-discriminatory practices in employment and promotion of municipal workers, adopting equal opportunity ordinances, and campaigning for reduced school dropouts and lessened unemployment among the unskilled.

Mayor Richard C. Lee, who addressed the conference.

"Dogs and hoses, in my opinion, are never going to solve the problems," Mr. Wagner asserted, "but in the North, before we criticize, we've got to see that our house is in order, and there remains a lot to be done in some areas. In New York City we have been working not only just now, as matters come to a head in the world, but we have been working on a day-to-day basis for a long time."

Houston Integration Cited

Mayor Lewis Cutrer of Houston, Texas, said he "agreed heartily with some of the things President Kennedy mentioned," but on others the mayor had his "own independent views."

"I feel that private enterprise, which risks its money and foots the bills," he said, "should have the sole right to decide whom to serve. But in Houston we have recognized the right of all parties and we have handled our public facilities in accordance with court rulings. Our golf courses, restaurants in public buildings, libraries—and, since a few days ago, our swimming pools—all have been integrated. Hotels and lunch counters integrated voluntarily and our theater owners plan to integrate."

A fellow Texan, Mayor Jack M. Moore of Beaumont, acclaimed President Kennedy for a "fine speech" and said his city used this approach:

"The Negroes have legal rights and we have no right to deny them. We work with them, and they with us, to avoid incidents. ur interracial council with our Negroes have been very fair."

Although there would be "some conflicts," Mayor Moore said, he predicted the South would work its way out of the present situation.

President Kennedy's Yea and Nay

By ARTHUR KROCK

WASHINGTON, June 10—Some citizens who are in full sympathy with President Kennedy's stated objective of ending every form of racial discrimination — private and public—which exists in the American society, but who also approve of his insistence that as "a people of laws" we should abide by constitutional lawmaking process, may see inconsistency in his counsels to the National Association of Mayors in Hawaii. At one point he expressed his purpose as that of moving racial demonstrations for relief of grievances "from the streets to the courts." But at another he said that "justice cannot await action of Congress or even of the courts."

The key to the variance between these two statements is probably Mr. Kennedy's urging that the municipalities of the United States, which are neither "Congress" nor "the courts," move at once to eliminate local ordinances and practices which stand in the way of what he conceives to be interracial "justice." But the Supreme Court has already forbidden local or state enforcement of the ancient common law against trespass on privately owned places of public accommodation where compulsory segregation is a statute or official policy. Hence by "justice" which "cannot await" its legislative and judicial assertion the President's comment can be read to apply only to such pervasive local practices as racial discrimination in municipal hiring, in housing and in opportunity for education and employment.

However, the sentence was so broadly phrased that it could encourage the spread of the method of seeking redress in the streets instead of in the courts that Mr. Kennedy in the same speech was deploring. The method was sanctioned ex post facto in the Southern sit-in cases. The Supreme Court ruled that the laws against trespass in these instances were not enforceable because they sought to protect an unconstitutional condition, although this enforceability was constitutional at the time because the court had not yet ruled otherwise. But the important judicial distinction between communities where trespass on private property is illegal and where it still is not has since been disregarded by street demonstrators in non-Southern cities.

This development imposes on the

This development imposes on the President, the Department of Justice and the Federal judiciary an obligation constantly to stress this difference that was absent from the Supreme Court's language in dismissing the sit-in trespass convictions; also from Mr. Kennedy's sweeping sentence about "justice" in his Hawaii speech. It also imposes a heavy obligation on Negro leaders who were discharging it with complete responsibility until their leadership was threatened by inciters of their people to take the law into their own hands.

"It is clear to me," said Mr. Kennedy at Honolulu, "that the time for token moves and idle talk is over—that these [Negro] rights are going to be won—and that our responsibility, yours and mine, is to see that they are won in a peaceful and constructive manner." But, as The Washington Star noted editorially today, although "this is also the responsibility of the Negroes, and especially the Negro leaders . . ., the President didn't go into that side of the story."

The Attorney General's Attitude

The fact is that the Administration is highly apprehensive of racial violence throughout the nation. This was made clear today by Attorney General Kennedy in a meeting with members of the Senate. Said one, "He painted a terrible picture of a situation which could become uncontrollable" in his effort to persuade the Southerners to support the forthcoming Administration bill. This, according to the same Senator, "would prohibit free customer choice by every private business establishment—the larger by law, the rest by officially stimulated pressure—through an obviously unenforceable expansion of the interstate commerce clause."

But the enforceability of this measure, in whatever form it may get through Congress—and the indications are that a Senate filibuster against it will fail—will be much less difficult if Administration spokesmen, and the President especially, are always careful to emphasize two particular determinations. One, that the rule of law will prevail. The other, that the Government cannot be scared into accepting a rule of law in which wrongs redressed are at the expense of the rights of others.

Kennedy Rights Bills Greeted By a Big 'No' from South

Pres. Politics

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Kennedy administration gave Southern senators a preview of some of its civil rights proposals Monday and Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., reported: "We had a complete meeting of the minds—we agreed to disagree."

That was just about what Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy expected when he outlined the legislation President John F. Kennedy is expected to propose in a message to Congress later this week.

"No commitments were asked, and none were given," said Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana, who arranged the conference.

At the White House, press secretary Pierre Salinger said Republican leaders of Congress will be consulted, possibly at a joint session with Democratic leaders, before the message is delivered.

The administration is counting on Republicans to help break the Southern filibuster that Sen. Harry F. Byrd, D-Va., told a National Press Club audience will greet the President's civil rights proposals.

Byrd predicted the filibuster would delay both the President's tax-cut bill and the adjournment of Congress. Byrd later attended the meeting with the other Southerners.

Speaking on his 76th birthday, Byrd said the country is on the verge of serious racial trouble, in the North as well as South, and expressed hope it will not result in violence.

Salinger announced 150 labor union leaders will meet with the President at the White House late Thursday to discuss race relations, and he said a group of religious leaders will be in to see Kennedy next Monday.

Mansfield told newsmen that at the meeting with Southern senators the attorney general did not spell out details of the proposed civil rights legislation, since he said no final conclusion has been reached yet.

Russell, leader of the Southern forces, told reporters he got the impression the administration is "pretty well decided on what they are going to do," and "we agreed to disagree."

Russell added that the meeting was amicable, but said his group made it clear it would not go along with proposals which "aim another blow at property rights in this country."

This was a reference to a proposal to require owners of restaurants and other public accomodations to serve members of all races.

Other Southerners attending the meeting were Sens. Allen J. Ellender D-La.; George Smathers, D-Fla.; Russell B. Long, D-La.; Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga.; John L. McClellan, D-Ark.; Lister Hill, D-Ala.; Olin Johnston, D-S.C.; Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C.; and James O. Eastland, D-Miss., chairman of the Judiciary Committee which handles civil rights legislation.

While the contents of the proposals outlined to the Southern senators were not made public, Rep. Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., told reporters in New York that the administration plan covers six main points.

Also priority on all court calendars for civil right petitions; continuing the Federal Civil Rights Commission for four more years; replacing local voting registrars with federal registrars in any area where 15 per cent or more of the vote-age population is deprived of its vote.

Politicians Wary Of Racial Crisis

Pres. Politics

WASHINGTON — Both political parties are walking on tiptoe on the racial issue, aware that old political certainties may be certainties no longer and aware most of all that this can no longer be seen as only a Southern problem. Because all recognize both the national and political dangers inherent in the situation, there is a curious tendency to treat it with far less overt partisanship than used to be the case.

Indeed, the coming struggle in the Senate over President Kennedy's new civil rights proposals may have some of the bipartisan overtones usually reserved for grave foreign policy issues.

At the center of the crisis, of course, is the Kennedy administration; and it, too, is proceeding with the greatest of caution. Generally, the racial issue has been approached politically by this administration as essentially a problem of keeping in touch with minority group demands but never quite meeting those demands in any of their more extreme forms.

The question now, however, has become far more complicated by the sudden introduction of a great new factor. This is the sharp emergence of racial feeling as a wholly national fact of life—a fact of life which some informed officials now believe may become even harsher and more difficult to handle in the North than in the South.

The administration's most active figure in this issue, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, is in a most ironical position. Though a symbol to many in the South of what is felt to be a deeply unfriendly federal attitude toward that region, he is at the same time under heavy attack from Negro extremists in the North.

So, in a less direct way, is his brother, the President. What some of these extremists have been saying in private about—and to—Robert Kennedy and John Kennedy is certainly no less bitter than what has been said about them by, say, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama.

Piling complication upon complication is the new situation in the Northern white community. Formerly, that community was generally if somewhat vaguely sympathetic to Negro demands in the South but at the same time felt no intimate involvement. Now there is a sudden sense of involvement and fear in the North, fear for property rights and for the maintenance of the more subtle, but nonetheless real, forms of segregation practiced in the North.

It is conceivable that those who are preaching Negro "revolution" in the South may find they are promoting white "counter-revolution" in the North. This is the ultimate nightmare of many politicians, in both parties, today.

Entertainers Snub Segregated Clubs

NEW YORK (AP)—The American Guild of Variety Artists voted in convention Monday for an immediate national boycott of entertainment centers that racially segregate either customers or employes.

Delegates to the 16th national convention of AGVA voted unanimously by cheering acclamation, according to an announcement made after their closed session.

President Joey Adams of AGVA said the unanimous vote made it mandatory on the union's national board to approve the boycott. This formal action was scheduled for Friday.

AGVA, with several thousand members, is one of the major unions in the entertainment field. Its jurisdiction extends to nightclubs, hotel supper clubs, and other centers that use vaudeville type live entertainment. It does not cover the legitimate stage or television.

The boycott resolution voiced AGVA's intention to "aid and support and lend assistance to the President and the attorney general of the United States in their programs and efforts to eliminate and ban the policy of segregation in hotels, nightclubs and other places of entertainment."

"AGVA will advocate the non-appearance of AGVA members in any hotels, club or place of entertainment where such a policy of segregation exists."

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE JUNE 6, 1963

OFFICE OF THE WHITE HOUSE PRESS SECRETARY
(San Diego, California)

THE WHITE HOUSE

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT
AT GRADUATION EXERCISES OF SAN DIEGO STATE COLLEGE
SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA

(AS ACTUALLY DELIVERED)

President Love, Governor Brown, Chancellor Heilbrun, Dr. Loewe, Trustees, Fellow Graduates, Ladies and Gentlemen: I want to express a very warm sense of appreciation for the honor that you have given to me today, to be an instant graduate of this distinguished college. It is greatly appreciated and I am delighted to participate in what is a most important ceremony in the lives of us all.

One of the most impressive, if not the most impressive accomplishment of this great Golden State has been the recognition by the citizens of this State of the importance of education as the basis for the maintenance of an effective, fres society. This fact was recognized in our earliest beginnings at the Massachusetts Bay Colony, but I do not believe that any State in the Union has given more attention in recent years to educating its citizens to the highest level, doctorate level, in the State colleges, the junior colleges, the high schools, the grade schools. You recognize that a free society places burdens upon any free citizens. To govern is to choose and the ability to make those choices wisely and responsibly and prudently implies the best of all of us.

No country can possibly move ahead, no free society can possibly be sustained, unless it has an educated citizenry whose quality of mind and heart permit it to take part in the complicated and sophisticated decisions that pour not only upon the President and upon the Congress, but upon all the citizens who service the ultimate power.

I am sure that the graduates of this college recognize that the effort of the people of California that govern the Legislature, the local communities, the faculty, that this concentrated effort of mind and scholarship to educate the young citizens of this State has not been done merely to give this school's graduates an economic advantage in the life struggle. Quite obviously, there is a higher purpose, and that is the hope that you will turn to the service of the State, the scholarship, the education, the qualities which society has helped develop in your; that you will render on the community level or on the State level or on the national level or the international level a contribution to the maintenance of freedom and peace and the security of our country and those associated with it in a most critical time.

In so doing, you will follow a great and laudable tradition which combined American scholarship and American leadershil in political affairs. It is an extraordinary fact of history, I think, unmatched since the days of early Greece, that this country should have produced during its founding days in a population of a handful of men such an extraordinary range of scholars and creative thinkers who helped build this country -- Jefferson, Franklin, Morris, Wilson, and all the rest. This is a great tradition which we must maintain in our time with increasing strength and increasing vigor.

MORE

Those of you who are educated, those of us who recognize the responsibilities of an educated citizen, should now concern ourselves with whether we are providing an adequate education for all Americans, will all Americans have an equal chance to develop their intellectual qualities and whether we are preparing ourselves today for the educational challenges which are going to come before this decade is out.

The first question, and the most important -- does every American boy and girl have an opportunity to develop whatever talents they have? All of us do not have equal talent, but all of us should have an equal opportunity to develop those talents. Let me cite a few facts to show that they do not.

In this fortunate State of California, the average current expenditure for a boy and girl in the public schools is $515, but in the State of Mississippi it is $230. The average salary for classroom teachers in California is $7,000, while in Mississippi it is $3600.

Nearly three-quarters of the young, white population of the United States have graduated from high school, but only about two-fifths of our non-white population has done the same. In some States, almost 40 percent of the non-white population has completed less than five years of school. Contrast it with seven percent of the white population. In one American State, over 36 percent of the public school buildings are over 40 years of age. In another, only four percent are that old.

Such facts, and one could prolong the recital indefinitely, make it clear that American children today do not yet enjoy equal educational opportunities for two primary reasons: One is economic and the other is racial. If our Nation is to meet the goal of giving every American child a fair chance, because an uneducated child makes an uneducated parent who in another day produces another uneducated child, we must move ahead swiftly in both areas, and we must recognize that segregation and education, and I mean de facto segregation in the North as well as the proclaimed segregation in the South, brings withit serious handicaps to a large proportion of the population. It does no good, as you in California know better than any, to say that that is the business of another State. It is the business of our country, and in addition, these young, uneduczted boys and girls know no State boundaries and they come West as well as North and East, and they are your citizens as well as citizens of this country.

The second question relates to the quality of our education. Today one out of every three students in the fifth grade will drop out of high school, and only two outof ten will graduate from college. In the meantime, we need more educated men and women, and we need less and less unskilled labor. There are millions of jobs that will be available in the next seven years for educated young men and women. The demand will be overwhelming, and there will be millions of people out of work who are unskilled because with new machines and technology there is less need for them. This combination of a tremendously increasing population among our young people, of less need for unskilled labor, of increasingly unskilled labor available, combines to form one of the most serious domestic problems that this country will fact in the next ten years. Of Americans 18 years of age or older, more than 23 million have less than eight years of schooling, and over 8 million have less than five years. What kind of judgment, what kind of response can we expect of a citizen who has been to school less than five years, and we have in this country 8 million who have been to school lessthan five years? As a result, they can't read or write or do simple arithmetic. They are illiterate in this rich country of ours, and they constitute the hard core of our unemployed. They can't write a letter to get a job, and they can't read, in many cases, a help-wanted sign. One outof every ten workers who failed to finish elementary school are unemployed, as compared to one out of 50 (college craduates).

In short, our current educational programs, much as they represent a burden upon the taxpayers of this country, do not meet the responsibility. The fact of the matter is that this is a problem which faces us all, no matter where we live, no matter what our political views must be. "Knowledge is power," as Francis Bacon said 500 years ago, and today it is truer than it ever was.

What are we going to do by the end of this decade? There are four million boys and girls born each year in the United States. Our population is growing each decade by a figure equal to the total population of this country at the time of Abraham Lincoln just 100 years ago. Our educational system is not expanding fast enough. By 1970 the number of students in our public, elementary, and secondary schools will have increased 25 percent over 1960. Nearly three-quarters of a million new classrooms will be needed, and we are not building them at that rate. By 1970 we will have 7 million students in our colleges and universities, 3 million more than we do today. We are going to double the population of our colleges and universities in ten years. We are going to have to build as many school, and college classrooms and buildings in 10 years as we did in 150 years.

By 1970 we will need 7500 Ph.D.'s (each year) in the physical sciences, mathematics, and engineering, In 1960 we graduated 3000. Such facts make it clear that we have a major responsibility and a major opportunity, one that we should welcome, because there is no greater asset in this country than an educated man or woman. Education, quite rightly, is the responsibility of the State and the local community, but from the beginning of our country's history, from the time of the Northwest Ordinance, as John Adams and Thomas Jefferson recognized, from the time of the Morrill Act at the height of the Civil War, when the Land Grant College system was set up under the Administration of President Lincoln, from the beginning it has been recognized that there must be a national commitment and that the national government must play its role in stimulating a system of excellence which can serve the great national purpose of a free society, and it is for that reason that we have sent to the Congress of the United States legislation to help meet the needs of higher education, by assisting in the construction of college academic facilities, and junior colleges and graduate centers, and technical institutes, and by stepping up existing programs for student loans and graduate fellowships and other student assistance programs.

We have to improve, and we have so recommended, the quality of our teachers by expanding teacher training institutes, by improving teacher preparation programs, by broadening educational research and by authorizing -- and this is one of our greatest needs -- increased training for teachers for the handicapped -- the deaf, and those who can't speak, and those who are otherwise handicapped. And it is designed to strengthen public elementary and secondary education through grants to the States for better teachers' salaries, to relieve critical classroom shortages, to meet the special educational problems of depressed areas, and the continuing expansion of vocational education and counsel.

And finally, we must make a massive attack upon illiteracy in the year 1963 in the United States by an expansion of university extension courses and by a major effort to improve our libraries in every community of our country.

I recognize that this represents a difficult assignment for us all, but I don't think it is an assignment from which we should shrink. I believe that education comes at the top of the responsibilities of any government, at whatever level. It is essential to our survival as a nation in a dangerous and hazardous world, and it is essential to the maintenance of freedom at a time when freedom is under attack.

I have traveled inthe last 24 hours from Washington to Colorado to Texas to here, and on every street I see mothers standing with two or three or four children. They are going to pour into our schools and our colleges in the next 10 or 20 years and I want this generation of Americans to be as prepared to meet this challenge as our forefathers did in making it possible for all of us to be here today.

We are the privileged, and it should be the ambition of every citizen to express and expand that privilege so that all of our countrymen and women share it.

Thank you.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

RFK: Race Crisis to Get Worse

Atta forward Pres. Hd.

By JACK ANDERSON 6-14-63

Washington.

ATTY. GEN. Robert Kennedy, looking harassed and haggard, warned of worsening race relations the other day at separate closed - door sessions of his party's Southern and Northern senators.

The divided meeting led Wyoming Sen. Gale McGee to remark ruefully: "Here we are talking about the problem of segregation, and we're meeting as segregated senators."

But the attorney general gave both groups the same gloomy briefing. He confessed that the race issue was "a boiling kettle" which is keeping him up nights, warned that the worst outbreaks can be expected in the North.

"There were over 60 riots last week," he said.

He blamed extremists of both races but leveled his harshest blast at Alabama's big-stick lawman Eugene "Bull" Connor.

RESENTMENT

Connor's dogs and hoses caused Negro resentment to boil to the surface, Kennedy said. He claimed that the Rev. Martin Luther King had no more than 10 demonstrators when he first came to Birmingham to organize antisegregation marches.

It was his arrest on Good Friday and the harsh attitude of city officials which won him Negro support, Kennedy alleged.

The attorney general was also disappointed in the Rev. King who had been more belligerent than expected. He had expressed his private appreciation to federal negotiators for "saving the day" in Birmingham but had refused to give them any public credit.

The attorney general was more worried about racial tension in the North where, he warned, it is approaching the explosion point. He expressed alarm over the "breakdown of communications."

He also reported that the militant Black Muslims, the white-hating Negro extremists, have no following in the South but "bear watching" in the North.

At Kennedy's session with Southern solons, Louisiana Sen. Allen Ellender tried to bait him.

"Isn't it true," Ellender demanded, "that you publicly stated you favored the demonstrators?"

Kennedy snapped back denial and called upon Alabama Sen. Lister Hill for confirmation.

Virginia Sen. Harry Byrd, his apple cheeks flushed, was politely belligerent. He warned that integration can never be imposed upon some rural sections.

Except for Byrd and Ellender, the Southerners discussed the Negro question calmly with Kennedy.

South Carolina Sen. Strom Thurmond contributed a few surprisingly restrained remarks, and Georgia Sen. Richard Russell, the traditional leader of Southern filibusters, merely raised some constitutional questions.

At the Northern meeting, West Virginia Sen. Robert Byrd urged the attorney general "to do everything possible" to prevent Negroes from using children in their demonstrations.

Kennedy replied that Negroes are fighting for racial equality for future generations and are prepared to sacrifice children to win the battle.

Michigan Sen. Phil Hart called upon Kennedy to send Congress a bill that would complete desegregation in every school district.

"This was in the Democratic platform," he declared, "and I ran on the platform."

UNWORKABLE

Answering for Kennedy, civil rights chief Burke Marshall insisted such a bill would be "completely unworkable."

In answer to a question from Alaska Sen. Ernest Gruening, Senate Leader Mike Mansfield announced he was prepared to keep the Senate in session all year if it took that long to get a civil rights bill passed.

But he warned: "We're not going to be able to get a bill that Joe Clark and Phil Hart would want," referring to the senators from Pennsylvania and Michigan who have been pressing for a strong rights measure.

Mansfield also cautioned that it would take Republican help to break a Southern filibuster, notified GOP Sen. Jacob Javits of New York that 27 Republican votes would be needed.

For the time being, however, Mansfield will hold off action on Negro rights until tempers cool down across the country. —(c1963.)

KENNEDY PRESSES G.O.P. TO SUPPORT CIVIL RIGHTS DRIVE

Has 2d Talk With Heads of Party—Also Sees Truman and 300 Union Leaders

BROAD BACKING SOUGHT

Message to Congress Due Next Week—Ban on Job Discrimination Dropped

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON June 13 — President Kennedy renewed his efforts today to rally the broadest possible support for new civil rights legislation.

He held a second meeting with Congressional leaders of both parties on his legislative plans. He talked with former President Harry S. Truman. And he met with nearly 300 labor union leaders.

The theme of bipartisanship was most significant. Today was the second time Mr. Kennedy had invited Republican leaders in to discuss his ideas on civil rights legislation. He scheduled a third session for next Monday.

That kind of consultation on a domestic issue is wholly extraordinary. At most, the opposition party would usually be called in the day before a message was delivered and informed of its contents.

It is now evident that the two weeks of delay in sending the much-discussed civil rights message to Capitol Hill were designed to let the President build as broad a base of support as possible.

Expected Next Week

The message is now expected to go to Congress the middle of next week, but even that is not certain. Mr. Kennedy leaves next weekend for his European trip.

Republican leaders attending the White House talks today were headed by the principal party spokesman in each house, Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois and Representative Charles A. Halleck of Indiana.

With them were Representatives Leslie C. Arends of Illinois and Gerald R. Ford Jr. of Michigan, the assistant House Republican leader and chairman of the House Republican Conference, respectively. Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper of Iowa came along as a substitute for Senator Thomas H. Kuchel of California, the assistant Senate Republican leader.

The leading Congressional Democrats were also there, including Vice President Johnson.

JOB STUDY IN SOUTH BEGUN BY PENTAGON

NYT 6-14-63

WASHINGTON, June 13 (AP) — The Defense Department disclosed today it was making on-the-spot surveys on the extent of equal employment of civilian Negroes at major military bases in the South.

These surveys are part of a program for the armed services at home and overseas intended to promote efficient utilization of all employes, the department said today.

Reports received from the services "also will identify and correct any instances in which past discrimination may be impeding present employment opportunities," the Pentagon said.

Stephen Shulman, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, said that the matter of race was not involved in that part of the program directed at improving utilization of employees. But, he said, the Defense Department would not be "color blind" in the studies of current employment practices.

Crewless Trains Forecast

Mr. Evers had been scheduled to be a witness.

Dr. Henry, testifying about a number of previously disclosed incidents, painted a grim picture of Negro life in Mississippi.

He said he had been arrested twice on trumped-up charges to discourage his activities for racial equality. The plate-glass window of his drugstore has been smashed seven times, he said. Last April, when Representative Charles C. Diggs Jr., Democrat of Michigan, was visiting him, the Henry home was bombed, Dr. Henry said.

Dr. Henry said that only eight of more than 200 Negro public high schools in Mississippi were accredited by the State Board of Education. Not one Negro attends a school with white children, he testified.

Late in the afternoon, Mr. Kennedy met for about an hour and a half with the labor leaders, many of whom pledged him their cooperation in attempting to end racial discrimination in unions and elsewhere.

Outlines Rights Program

Mr. Kennedy outlined in general terms his forthcoming civil rights legislative proposals. He told the labor leaders they "could do more, could move more rapidly," according to Dallas W. Sells, president of the Indiana State American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations.

As the meeting opened in the East Room of the White House, the President told the group they were to discuss a matter that concerned "all who occupy positions of responsibility."

What he wanted most of all, he said, was "to hear from you of what we can most usefully do about the matter."

Then he introduced Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, who termed the racial crisis "the most serious problem that we can possibly face." The basic solution, Mr. Wirtz suggested, is "to have more jobs" and equality of economic opportunity.

A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters of America, admonished the other labor leaders that they "ought to be moving faster." Negroes themselves, he said, are already "moving faster than their own leadership."

David J. McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers of America, said he had pledged "complete support" to Mr. Kennedy and to his proposed legislation.

"There is a large economic problem involving Negroes," Mr. McDonald said, "and, if we do not solve it by educating Negroes to get jobs," the problem will have to be solved by taxation for "a permanent relief dole."

"This the Negro doesn't want, he said.

James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical Workers, said he had suggested that the President add a fair employment practices bill to his legislative program.

The labor leaders agreed afterward that there was no dissention at the meeting. A statement issued by George Meany, president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., said he had pledged "the unstinting assistance of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. to the prompt achievement of a full, enforceable civil rights program on every front."

New Rights Legislation

Congress Is Found in Mood to Act, But the Prospects Are It Will Hedge

By CABELL PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 13—A favorable atmosphere for new civil rights legislation exists in Congress, a check of party leaders indicates, but the prospect is hedged by many provisos and limitations. A consensus of these leaders is that new laws aimed at correcting discrimination in certain types of public accommodations are a possibility at this session, provided their applicability is limited to large business establishments.

News Analysis

It is also believed that a ban on Federal aid to school districts practicing segregation can be passed provided it is not accompained by authority for the Government to initiate suits for its enforcement.

The present crisis in race relations in the South and other parts of the country has worked to ameliorate, to some extent, the die-hard opposition to stricter civil rights laws, many Congressional sources say. But the new legislation, they add, still will have to be won in strife, including probably a Senate filibuster.

Drawing the Line

The line between the attainable and unattainable, these sources believe, is to be drawn at the point where an attempt is made to make the statutes inclusive and inflexible.

For example, all agree that a mandatory fair employment practices code that wipes out all vestiges of job discrimination is beyond reach at this session. Opposition would not come only from civil rights opponents in the South, but also elsewhere from states-rights conservatives, Democratic and Republican.

Similarly, it is believed that any attempt under a public accommodations statute to enforce nondiscrimination at village tourist homes and roadside restaurants, and their larger counterparts in cities, would meet with defeat.

However, if such a statute were limited in scope to establishments of a truly inter-state charaicter, or those doing a substantial dollar volume of business, the prospects for passage would be much improved.

Opposition is almost equally intense against giving the Attorney General authority to initiate suits for the enforcement of these or any other civil rights statutes. Such authority would virtually eliminate litigation in state and local courts, which has been a chief tactic of delay and defense used by segregationists.

Contrary to Negro Demands

These limitations run contrary to the "all and now" theme that marks the demands of Negro leaders and many of their liberal white supporters. On the other hand, they also mark the practical limits of congressional willingness to meet these demands. At this time, anyway. And this, it is stressed, is the measure of what is attainable.

Whether a program of Negro demonstrations aimed at Congress, which has been promised by some leaders, would stretch these limitations is open to question. Most members questioned about it say that demonstrations would have no effect. Others say that it might have an opposite effect to that intended, that Congress would become more recalcitrant at any efforts to coerce it.

Democratic leaders, who have been in close touch with the White House in recent weeks, say that President Kennedy has been placed in a difficult position by the explosive rise in civil rights pressures.

the kind of bill it would propose, and to get reactions from the two groups.

A official who attended both sessions said the results were "encouraging."

"Actually," he added, "the Southerners were easier to deal with than some of the liberals. The liberals wanted to talk only about how far such a bill should go. They seemed to want to knock down all the barriers at one stroke. But the Southerners, some of them, at least were interested in finding out what could be done in practical terms.

"I'm convinced that a good many of them recognize that new legislation is inevitable. They are going to fight it, which they have to do to stay alive politically. But once they have made the fight, I believe many of them are prepared to accept some new laws as long as they don't completely outrage their supporters."

Senate sources say that plenty of votes are available to pass a moderate civil rights program once it has cleared the probable hurdle of a filibuster.

A leadership nosecount indicates that 40 to 45 Democratic votes would be available to invoke closure, leaving 20 to 25 to be contributed by Republicans for the necessary 67.

ly reported bill to prohibit the exclusion of Negroes from hotels, theaters, restaurants and other places of public accommodation.

Other legislative requests of the President include authority for the Justice Department to step into school segregation cases and methods of speeding up lawsuits to secure voting rights for Negroes.

Senator Dirksen objected strongly to basing this measure on the Federal Government's power over interstate commerce.

Republicans are sensitive because of the use of the commerce clause of the Constitution in the past for such social goals, as setting minimum wages. Senator Dirksen said he was concerned about a further "shredding" of the clause.

The Administration is now expected to base the public accommodations proposal, constitutionally, on both the commerce clause and the 14th Amendment. Senator Dirksen prefers relying on the amendment's provision that no state shall discriminate on account of race.

The possibility that the program would include some kind of ban on discrimination in employment has waned in recent days. This possibility now has apparently been foreclosed. It was not mentioned today.

Hard Role to Play

He will be obliged, they say, to come out for a strong rights program closely approximating the maximum demands of the more influential Negro leadership groups. It is important for the President to establish and maintain a role of aggressive leadership in this crisis.

At the same time, it is argued, he must guard against demands so extreme that they would aid his opposition. The program that is ultimately shaped, a leader said, "must be bold enough to show the Negroes that he means business, and moderate enough to have some practical chance of getting through Congress; that a pretty hard mix."

Among the series of conference held this week were two in which Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and Burke Marshall, his chief civil rights deputy, met separately at the Capitol, first with a group of Senate Southern leaders, and later the same day with a group of liberals. The purpose was to review the Administration's thinking on

A Time for Reflection and Vigilant Calm

By JAMES RESTON

WASHINGTON, June 13—The civil rights debate has started with a series of ugly threats which, if carried out, could produce the most ominous constitutional and racial crisis of this century.

Even before President Kennedy has sent his civil rights program to Capitol Hill, Senator Lister Hill of Alabama, one of the Southern leaders, has threatened to "use the filibuster and any other means that are available" to oppose the legislation.

Meanwhile, the Rev. George Lawrence, the Northeast regional representative for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said in New York yesterday that any filibuster against Congressional civil rights action would touch off "massive acts of civil disobedience all over the nation."

Thousands upon thousands of Negroes, Rev. Lawrence added, would pour into Washington this summer to press for action and would, unless satisfied, "tie up public transportation by laying our bodies prostrate on runways of airports, across railroad tracks and at bus depots."

Before we go much further down this ominous path, it may be wise for those who want to help the Negro achieve equality and those who oppose Negro equality to take a calm look ahead.

The Senate Line-Up

The President is now committed to a civil rights program. It will probably go to the Congress next week and will be the focus of attention throughout the long, hot, irritating Washington summer and well into the autumn. If the end of this is an unbroken filibuster in the Senate, and therefore no legislative relief for the legitimate grievances of the American Negro, it is difficult to see how racial violence can be avoided.

The question remains, however, whether threats of civil disobedience are the way to avoid or break a filibuster, and it is here that the most careful judgment will have to be made on how best to serve the cause of equality.

Senator Hill and Senator Richard Russell of Georgia have threatened a filibuster. It will take two thirds of Senate members present and voting (67 out of 100) to bring the legislation to a vote. There are now 67 Democratic Senators and 33 Republicans, but 22 of the Democrats are from the South. Therefore, to cut off the debate, 45 Democratic and 22 Republican votes would be necessary.

If the end of this is an unbroken filibuster in the Senate, and therefore no legislative relief for the legitimate grievances of the American Negro, it is difficult to see how racial violence can be avoided.

The question remains, however, whether threats of civil disobedience are the way to avoid or break a filibuster, and it is here that the most careful judgment will have to be made on how best to serve the cause of equality.

There are now 67 Democratic Senators and 33 Republicans, but 22 of the Democrats are from the South. Therefore, to cut off the debate, 45 Democratic and 22 Republican votes would be necessary.

To get this will require the greatest demonstration of bipartisan cooperation ever put together in this generation on a domestic issue. If all 100 members of the Senate vote, the President will have to get the support of every Democrat from the North and West and he can lose only 11 Republicans.

In this situation, then, who are the friends of the Negro? Those who urge and threaten more and bigger Negro demonstrations and acts of civil disobedience in Washington and elsewhere, or those who want to let the great constitutional and social question be debated in an atmosphere of vigilant calm?

Nobody who has talked to any large number of Senators on Capitol Hill this week will lightly recommend the path of massive demonstrations on Capitol Hill—unless, of course, he wants to see the President's program defeated.

The conservative Republicans are in no mood to be pressured or blackmailed into voting for this program. Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, the Republican leader in the Senate, is taking a statesmanlike attitude toward the problem. He is cooperating with the White House and trying to work out a program that will give the Negroes relief, but it is his judgment that he cannot carry his party with him in an atmosphere of turmoil.

The Administration, too, has had some solemn second thoughts about approving more demonstrations. Unless it can get a non-violent and non-partisan atmosphere for the debate, it is convinced that it cannot win. For this reason, there was some irritation here today at former President Truman's caustic remark that the Republicans "have never done anything on civil rights"—this at a moment when President Kennedy was pleading with the Republican leaders to help him draft an acceptable civil rights program.

Demonstration or Intimidation?

It is easy to scoff at those who now propose moderation. The demonstrations against the Negro's humiliation are easy to understand, and without them it is clear that the Administration would not now be considering such a legislative program of civil rights.

Yet there is a point beyond which demonstration can easily be interpreted as intimidation, and produce a counteraction that will revive the Republican-Democratic conservative coalition in the Senate.

That coalition is not solid now. It has been shaken by the events of the last few weeks, and this is precisely the paradox of the situation. For, while the Negro demonstrations have undoubtedly created the opportunity for new civil rights legislation, continued and mounting demonstrations could easily carry the battle into the plaza on Capitol Hill and defeat the whole program.

THE WHITE HOUSE

MESSAGE ON CIVIL RIGHTS AND JOB OPPORTUNITIES

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Last week I addressed to the American people an appeal to conscience -- a request for their cooperation in meeting the growing moral crisis in American race relations. I warned of "a rising tide of discontent that threatens the public safety" in many parts of the country. I emphasized that "the events in Birmingham and elsewhere have so increased the cries for equality that no city or State or legislative body can prudently choose to ignore them." "It is a time to act", I said, "in the Congress, in State and local legislative bodies and, above all, in all of our daily lives."

In the days that have followed, the predictions of increased violence have been tragically borne out. The "fires of frustration and discord" have burned hotter than ever.

At the same time, the response of the American people to this appeal to their principles and obligations has been reassuring. Private progress -- by merchants and unions and local organizations -- has been marked, if not uniform, in many areas. Many doors long closed to Negroes, North and South, have been opened. Local bi-racial committees, under private and public sponsorship, have mushroomed. The Mayors of our major cities, whom I earlier addressed, have pledged renewed action. But persisting inequalities and tensions make it clear that Federal action must lead the way, providing both the nation's standard and a nationwide solution. In short, the time has come for the Congress of the United States to join with the Executive and Judicial Branches in making it clear to all that race has no place in American life or law.

On February 28, I sent to the Congress a message urging the enactment this year of three important pieces of civil rights legislation:

1. Voting. Legislation to assure the availability to all of a basic and powerful right -- the right to vote in a free American election -- by providing for the appointment of temporary Federal voting referees while voting suits are proceeding in areas of demonstrated need; by giving such suits preferential and expedited treatment in the Federal courts; by prohibiting in Federal elections the application of different tests and standards to different voter applicants; and by providing that, in voting suits pertaining to such elections, the completion of the sixth grade by any applicant creates a presumption that he is literate. Armed with the full and equal right to vote, our Negro citizens can help win other rights through political channels not now open to them in many areas.

2. Civil Rights Commission. Legislation to renew and expand the authority of the Commission on Civil Rights, enabling it to serve as a national civil rights clearing house offering information, advice and technical assistance to any public or private agency that so requests.

3. School Desegregation. Legislation to provide Federal technical and financial assistance to aid school districts in the process of desegregation in compliance with the Constitution.

Other measures introduced in the Congress have also received the support of this Administration, including those aimed at assuring equal employment opportunity.

Although these recommendations were transmitted to the Congress some time ago, neither House has yet had an opportunity to vote on any of these essential measures. The Negro's drive for justice, however, has not stood still -- nor will it, it is now clear, until full equality is achieved. The growing and understandable dissatisfaction of Negro citizens with the present pace of desegregation, and their increased determination to secure for themselves the equality of opportunity and treatment to which they are rightfully entitled, have underscored what should already have been clear: the necessity of the Congress enacting this year -- not only the measures already proposed -- but also additional legislation providing legal remedies for the denial of certain individual rights.

The venerable code of equity law commands "for every wrong, a remedy." But in too many communities, in too many parts of the country, wrongs are inflicted on Negro citizens for which no effective remedy at law is clearly and readily available. State and local laws may even affirmatively seek to deny the rights to which these citizens are fairly entitled -- and this can result only in a decreased respect for the law and increased violations of the law.

In the continued absence of Congressional action, too many state and local officials as well as businessmen will remain unwilling to accord these rights to all citizens. Some local courts and local merchants may well claim to be uncertain of the law, while those merchants who do recognize the justice of the Negro's request (and I believe these constitute the great majority of merchants, North and South) will be fearful of being the first to move, in the face of official, customer, employee or competitive pressures. Negroes, consequently, can be expected to continue increasingly to seek the vindication of these rights through organized direct action, with all its potentially explosive consequences, such as we have seen in Birmingham, in Philadelphia, in Jackson, in Boston, in Cambridge, Maryland, and in many other parts of the country.

In short, the result of continued Federal legislative inaction will be continued, if not increased, racial strife -- causing the leadership on both sides to pass from the hands of reasonable and responsible men to the purveyors of hate and violence, endangering domestic tranquility, retarding our Nation's economic and social progress and weakening the respect with which the rest of the world regards us. No American, I feel sure, would prefer this course of tension, disorder and division -- and the great majority of our citizens simply cannot accept it.

For these reasons, I am proposing that the Congress stay in session this year until it has enacted -- preferably as a single omnibus bill -- the most responsible, reasonable and urgently needed solutions to this problem, solutions which should be acceptable to all fair-minded men. This bill would be known as the "Civil Rights Act of 1963", and would include -- in addition to the aforementioned provisions on voting rights and the Civil Rights Commission -- additional titles on public accommodations, employment, Federally assisted programs, a Community Relations Service, and education, with the latter including my previous recommendation on this subject. In addition, I am requesting certain legislative and budget amendments designed to improve the training, skills and economic opportunities of the economically distressed and discontented, white and Negro alike. Certain executive actions are also reviewed here; but legislative action is imperative.

I. Equal accommodations in public facilities

Events of recent weeks have again underlined how deeply our Negro citizens resent the injustice of being arbitrarily denied equal access to those facilities and accommodations which are otherwise open to the general public. That is a daily insult which has no place in a country proud of its heritage -- the heritage of the melting-pot, of equal rights, of one nation and one people. No one has been barred on account of his race from fighting or dying for America -- there are no "white" or "colored" signs on the foxholes or graveyards of battle. Surely, in 1963, 100 years after Emancipation, it should not be necessary for any American citizen to demonstrate in the streets for the opportunity to stop at a hotel, or to eat at a lunch counter in the very department store in which he is shopping, or to enter a motion picture house, on the same terms as any other customer. As I stated in my message to the Congress of February 28, "no action is more contrary to the spirit of our democracy and Constitution -- or more rightfully resented by a Negro citizen who seeks only equal treatment -- than the barring of that citizen from restaurants, hotels, theatres, recreational areas and other public accommodations and facilities."

The United States Government has taken action through the courts and by other means to protect those who are peacefully demonstrating to obtain access to these public facilities; and it has taken action to bring an end to discrimination in rail, bus and airline terminals, to open up restaurants and other public facilities in all buildings leased as well as owned by the Federal Government, and to assure full equality of access to all Federally owned parks, forests and other recreational areas. When uncontrolled mob action directly threatened the nondiscriminatory use of transportation facilities in May 1961, Federal marshals were employed to restore order and prevent potentially widespread personal and property damage. Growing nationwide concern with this problem, however, makes it clear that further Federal action is needed now to secure the right of all citizens to the full enjoyment of all facilities which are open to the general public.

Such legislation is clearly consistent with the Constitution and with our concepts of both human rights and property rights. The argument that such measures constitute an unconstitutional interference with property rights has consistently been rejected by the courts in upholding laws on zoning, collective bargaining, minimum wages, smoke control and countless other measures designed to make certain that the use of private property is consistent with the public interest. While the legal situations are not parallel, it is interesting to note that Abraham Lincoln, in issuing the Emancipation Proclamation 100 years ago, was also accused of violating the property rights of slave-owners. Indeed, there is an age-old saying that "property has its duties as well as its rights"; and no property owner who holds those premises for the purpose of serving at a profit the American public at large can claim any inherent right to exclude a part of that public on grounds of race or color. Just as the law requires common carriers to serve equally all who wish their services, so it can require public accommodations to accommodate equally all segments of the general public. Both human rights and property rights are foundations of our society -- and both will flourish as the result of this measure.

In a society which is increasingly mobile and in an economy which is increasingly interdependent, business establishments which serve the public -- such as hotels, restaurants, theatres, stores and others -- serve not only the members of their immediate communities but travelers from other states and visitors from abroad. Their goods come from all over the nation. This participation in the flow of interstate commerce has given these business establishments both increased prosperity and an increased responsibility to provide equal access and service to all citizens.

Some 30 states*, the District of Columbia and numerous cities -- covering some 2/3 of this country and well over 2/3 of its people -- have already enacted laws of varying effectiveness against discrimination in places of public accommodation, many of them in response to the recommendation of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights in 1947. But while their efforts indicate that legislation in this area is not extraordinary, the failure of more states to take effective action makes it clear that Federal legislation is necessary. The state and local approach has been tried. The voluntary approach has been tried. But these approaches are insufficient to prevent the free flow of commerce from being arbitrarily and inefficiently restrained and distorted by discrimination in such establishments.

Clearly the Federal Government has both the power and the obligation to eliminate these discriminatory practices: first, because they adversely affect the national economy and the flow of interstate commerce; and secondly, because Congress has been specifically empowered under the Fourteenth Amendment to enact legislation making certain that no state law permits or sanctions the unequal protection or treatment of any of its citizens.

There have been increasing public demonstrations of resentment directed against this kind of discrimination -- demonstrations which too often breed tension and violence. Only the Federal Government, it is clear, can make these demonstrations unnecessary by providing peaceful remedies for the grievances which set them off.

For these reasons, I am today proposing, as part of the Civil Rights Act of 1963, a provision to guarantee all citizens equal access to the services and facilities of hotels, restaurants, places of amusement and retail establishments.

This seems to me to be an elementary right. Its denial is an arbitrary indignity that no American in 1963 should have to endure. The proposal would give the person aggrieved the right to obtain a court order against the offending establishment or persons. Upon receiving a complaint in a case sufficiently important to warrant his conclusion that a suit would materially further the purposes of the Act, the Attorney General -- if he finds that the aggrieved party is unable to undertake or otherwise arrange for a suit on his own (for lack of financial means or effective representation, or for fear of economic or other injury) -- will first refer the case for voluntary settlement to the Community Relations Service described below, give the establishment involved time to correct its practices, permit state and local equal access laws (if any) to operate first, and then, and only then, initiate a suit for compliance. In short, to the extent that these unconscionable practices can be corrected by the individual owners, localities and states (and recent experience demonstrate how effectively and uneventfully this can be done), the Federal Government has no desire to intervene.

But an explosive national problem cannot await city-by-city solutions; and those who loudly abhor Federal action only invite it if they neglect or evade their own obligations.

This provision will open doors in every part of the country which never should have been closed. Its enactment will hasten the end to practices which have no place in a free and united nation, and thus help move this potentially dangerous problem from the streets to the courts.

II. Desegregation of Schools

In my message of February 28, while commending the progress already made in achieving desegregation of education at all levels as required by the Constitution, I was compelled to point out the slowness of progress toward primary and secondary school desegregation. The Supreme Court has recently voiced the same opinion. Many Negro children entering segregated grade schools at the time of the Supreme Court decision in 1954 will enter segregated high schools this year, having suffered a loss which can never be regained. Indeed, discrimination in education is one basic cause of the other inequities and hardships inflicted upon our Negro citizens. The lack of equal educational opportunity deprives the individual of equal economic opportunity, restricts his contribution as a citizen and community leader, encourages him to drop out of school and imposes a heavy burden on the effort to eliminate discriminatory practices and prejudices from our national life.

The Federal courts, pursuant to the 1954 decision of the United States Supreme Court and earlier decisions on institutions of higher learning, have shown both competence and courage in directing the desegregation of schools on the local level. It is appropriate to keep this responsibility largely within the judicial arena. But it is unfair and unrealistic to expect that the burden of initiating such cases can be wholly borne by private litigants. Too often those entitled to bring suit on behalf of their children lack the economic means for instituting and maintaining such cases or the ability to withstand the personal, physical and economic harassment which sometimes descends upon those who do institute them. The same is true of students wishing to attend the college of their choice but unable to assume the burden of litigation.

These difficulties are among the principal reasons for the delay in carrying out the 1954 decision; and this delay cannot be justified to those who have been hurt as a result. Rights such as these, as the Supreme Court recently said, are "present rights. They are not merely hopes to some future enjoyment of some formalistic constitutional promise. The basic guarantees of our Constitution are warrants for the here and now . . . "

In order to achieve a more orderly and consistent compliance with the Supreme Court's school and college desegregation decisions, therefore, I recommend that the Congress assert its specific Constitutional authority to implement the 14th Amendment by including in the Civil Rights Act of 1963 a new title providing the following:

(A) Authority would be given the Attorney General to initiate in the Federal District Courts appropriate legal proceedings against local public school boards or public institutions of higher learning -- or to intervene in existing cases -- whenever

(1) he has received a written complaint from students or from the parents of students who are being denied equal protection of the laws by a segregated public school or college; and

(2) he certifies that such persons are unable to undertake or otherwise arrange for the initiation and maintenance of such legal proceedings for lack of financial means or effective legal representation or for fear of economic or other injury; and

(3) he determines that his initiation of or intervention in such suit will materially further the orderly progress of desegregation in public education. For this purpose, the Attorney General would establish criteria to determine the priority and relative need for Federal action in those districts from which complaints have been filed.

(B) As previously recommended, technical and financial assistance would be given to those school districts in all parts of the country which, voluntarily or as the result of litigation, are engaged in the process of meeting the educational problems flowing from desegregation or racial imbalance but which are in need of guidance, experienced help or financial assistance in order to train their personnel for this changeover, cope with new difficulties and complete the job satisfactorily (including in such assistance loans to a district where State or local funds have been withdrawn or withheld because of desegregation).

Public institutions already operating without racial discrimination, of course, will not be affected by this statute. Local action can always make Federal action unnecessary. Many school boards have peacefully and voluntarily desegregated in recent years. And while this Act does not include private colleges and schools, I strongly urge them to live up to their responsibilities and to recognize no arbitrary bar of race or color -- for such bars have no place in any institution, least of all one devoted to the truth and to the improvement of all mankind.

III. Fair and Full Employment

Unemployment falls with special cruelty on minority groups. The unemployment rate of Negro workers is more than twice as high as that of the working force as a whole. In many of our larger cities, both North and South, the number of jobless Negro youth -- often 20% or more -- creates an atmosphere of frustration, resentment and unrest which does not bode well for the future. Delinquency, vandalism, gang warfare, disease, slums and the high cost of public welfare and crime are all directly related to unemployment among whites and Negroes alike -- and recent labor difficulties in Philadelphia may well be only the beginning if more jobs are not found in the larger Northern cities in particular.

Employment opportunities, moreover, play a major role in determining whether the rights described above are meaningful. There is little value in a Negro's obtaining the right to be admitted to hotels and restaurants if he has no cash in his pocket and no job.

Relief of Negro unemployment requires progress in three major areas:

(1) More jobs must be created through greater economic growth. The Negro -- too often unskilled, too often the first to be fired and the last to be hired -- is a primary victim of recessions, depressed areas and unused industrial capacity. Negro unemployment will not be noticeably diminished in this country until the total demand for labor is effectively increased and the whole economy is headed toward a level of full employment. When our economy operates below capacity, Negroes are more severely affected than other groups. Conversely, return to full employment yields particular benefits to the Negro. Recent studies have shown that for every one percentage point decline in the general unemployment rate there tends to be a two percentage point reduction in Negro unemployment.

Prompt and substantial tax reduction is a key to achieving the full employment we need. The promise of the area redevelopment program -- which harnesses local initiative toward the solution of deep-seated economic distress -- must not be stifled for want of sufficient authorization or adequate financing. The accelerated public works program is now gaining momentum; states, cities and local communities should press ahead with the projects financed by this measure. In addition, I have instructed the Departments of Labor, Commerce, and Health, Education, and Welfare to examine how their programs for the relief of unemployment and economic hardship can be still more intensively focussed on those areas of hard-core, long-term unemployment, among both white and non-white workers. Our concern with civil rights must not cause any diversion or dilution of our efforts for economic progress -- for without such progress the Negro's hopes will remain unfulfilled.

(2) More education and training to raise the level of skills. A distressing number of unemployed Negroes are illiterate and unskilled, refugees from farm automation, unable to do simple computations or even to read a help-wanted advertisement. Too many are equipped to work only in those occupations where technology and other changes have reduced the need for manpower -- as farm labor or manual labor, in mining or construction. Too many have attended segregated schools that were so lacking in adequate funds and faculty as to be unable to produce qualified job applicants. And too many who have attended non-segregated schools dropped out for lack of incentive, guidance or progress. The unemployment rate for those adults with less than 5 years of schooling is around 10%; it has consistently been double the prevailing rate for high school graduates; and studies of public welfare recipients show a shockingly high proportion of parents with less than a primary school education.

Although the proportion of Negroes without adequate education and training is far higher than the proportion of whites, none of these problems is restricted to Negroes alone. This nation is in critical need of a massive upgrading in its education and training effort for all citizens. In an age of rapidly changing technology, that effort today is failing millions of our youth. It is especially failing Negro youth in segregated schools and crowded slums. If we are ever to lift them from the morass of social and economic degradation, it will be through the strengthening of our education and training services -- by improving the quality of instruction; by enabling our schools to cope with rapidly expanding enrollments; and by increasing opportunities and incentives for all individuals to complete their education and to continue their self-development during adulthood.

I have therefore requested of the Congress and request again today the enactment of legislation to assist education at every level from grade school through graduate school.

I have also requested the enactment of several measures which provide, by various means and for various age and educational groups, expanded job training and job experience. Today, in the new and more urgent context of this Message, I wish to renew my request for these measures, to expand their prospective operation and to supplement them with additional provisions. The additional $400 million which will be required beyond that contained in the January Budget is more than offset by the various Budget reductions which I have already sent to the Congress in the last four months. Studies show, moreover, that the loss of one year's income due to unemployment is more than the total cost of 12 years of education through high school; and, when welfare and other social costs are added, it is clear that failure to take these steps will cost us far more than their enactment. There is no more profitable investment than education, and no greater waste than ill-trained youth.

Specifically, I now propose:

(A) That additional funds be provided to broaden the Manpower Development and Training Program, and that the Act be amended, not only to increase the authorization ceiling and to postpone the effective date of State matching requirements, but also (in keeping with the recommendations of the President's Committee on Youth Employment) to lower the age for training allowances from 19 to 16, to allocate funds for literacy training, and to permit the payment of a higher proportion of the program's training allowances to out-of-school youths, with provisions to assure that no one drops out of school to take advantage of this program;

(B) That additional funds be provided to finance the pending Youth Employment bill, which is designed to channel the energies of out-of-school, out-of-work youth into the constructive outlet offered by hometown improvement projects and conservation work;

(C) That the pending vocational education amendments, which would greatly update and expand this program of teaching job skills to those in school, be strengthened by the appropriation of additional funds, with some of the added money earmarked for those areas with a high incidence of school drop-outs and youth unemployment, and by the addition of a new program of demonstration youth training projects to be conducted in these areas;

(D) That the vocational education program be further amended to provide a work-study program for youth of high-school age, with Federal funds helping their school or other local public agency employ them part time in order to enable and encourage them to complete their training;

(E) That the ceiling be raised on the Adult basic education provisions in the pending Education program, in order to help the states teach the fundamental tools of literacy and learning to culturally deprived adults. More than 22 million Americans in all parts of the country have less than eight years of schooling; and

(F) That the public welfare work-relief and training program, which the Congress added last year, be amended to provide Federal financing of the supervision and equipment costs, and more Federal demonstration and training projects, thus encouraging state and local welfare agencies to put employable but unemployed welfare recipients to work on local projects which do not displace other workers.

To make the above recommendations effective, I call upon more states to adopt enabling legislation covering unemployed fathers under the aid-to-dependent children program, thereby gaining their services for "work-relief" jobs, and to move ahead more vigorously in implementing the Manpower Development and Training Program. I am asking the Secretaries of Labor and HEW to make use of their authority to deal directly with communities and vocational schools whenever State cooperation or progress is insufficient, particularly in those areas where youth unemployment is too high. Above all, I urge the Congress to enact all of these measures with alacrity and foresight.

For even the complete elimination of racial discrimination in employment -- a goal towards which this nation must strive (as discussed below) -- will not put a single unemployed Negro to work unless he has the skills required and unless more jobs have been created -- and thus the passage of legislation described above (under both sections (1) and (2)) is essential if the objectives of this message are to be met.

(3) Finally racial discrimination in employment must be eliminated. Denial of the right to work is unfair, regardless of its victim. It is doubly unfair to throw its burden on an individual because of his race or color. Men who served side by side with each other on the field of battle should have no difficulty working side by side on an assembly line or construction project.

Therefore, to combat this evil in all parts of the country,

(A) The Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, under the Chairmanship of the Vice President, should be given a permanent statutory basis, assuring it of adequate financing and enforcement procedures. That Committee is now stepping up its efforts to remove racial barriers in the hiring practices of Federal Departments, Agencies and Federal contractors, covering a total of some 20 million employees and the nation's major employers. I have requested a company-by-company, plant-by-plant, union-by-union report to assure the implementation of this policy.

(B) I will shortly issue an executive order extending the authority of the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity to include the construction of buildings and other facilities undertaken wholly or in part as a result of Federal grant-in-aid programs.

(C) I have directed that all Federal construction programs be reviewed to prevent any racial discrimination in hiring practices, either directly in the rejection of presently available qualified Negro workers or indirectly by the exclusion of Negro applicants for apprenticeship training.

(D) I have directed the Secretary of Labor, in the conduct of his duties under the Federal Apprenticeship Act and Executive Order No. 10925, to require that the admission of young workers to apprenticeship programs be on a completely nondiscriminatory basis.

(E) I have directed the Secretary of Labor to make certain that the job counseling and placement responsibilities of the Federal-State Employment Service are carried out on a nondiscriminatory basis, and to help assure that full and equal employment opportunity is provided all qualified Negro applicants. The selection and referral of applicants for employment and for training opportunities, and the administration of the employment offices' other services and facilities, must be carried on without regard to race or color. This will be of special importance to Negroes graduating from high school or college this month.

(F) The Department of Justice has intervened in a case now pending before the NLRB involving charges of racial discrimination on the part of certain union locals.

(G) As a part of its new policy on Federal employee organizations, this Government will recognize only those that do not discriminate on grounds of race or color.

(H) I have called upon the leaders of organized labor to end discrimination in their membership policies; and some 118 unions, representing 85% of the AFL-CIO membership, have signed nondiscrimination agreements with the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. More are expected.

(I) Finally, I renew my support of pending Federal Fair Employment Practices legislation, applicable to both employers and unions. Approximately two-thirds of the nation's labor force is already covered by Federal, state and local equal employment opportunity measures -- including those employed in the 22 states and numerous cities which have enacted such laws as well as those paid directly or indirectly by Federal funds. But, as the Secretary of Labor testified in January 1962, Federal legislation is desirable, for it would help set a standard for all the nation and close existing gaps.

This problem of unequal job opportunity must not be allowed to grow, as the result of either recession or discrimination. I enlist every employer, every labor union, and every agency of government -- whether affected directly by these measures or not -- in the task of seeing to it that no false lines are drawn in assuring equality of the right and opportunity to make a decent living.

IV. Community Relations Service

I have repeatedly stressed the fact that progress in race relations, while it cannot be delayed, can be more solidly and more peacefully accomplished to the extent that legislation can be buttressed by voluntary action. I have urged each member of the United States Conference of Mayors to establish bi-racial human relations committees in every city; and I hope all communities will establish such a group, preferably through official action. Such a board or committee can provide invaluable services by identifying community tensions before they reach the crisis stage, by improving cooperation and communication between the races, and by advising local officials, merchants and organizations on the steps which can be taken to insure prompt progress.

A similar agency is needed on the Federal level -- to work with these local committees, providing them with advice and assistance -- to work in those communities which lack a local committee -- and generally to help ease tensions and suspicions, to help resolve inter-racial disputes and to work quietly to improve relations in any community threatened or torn with strife. Such an effort is in no way a substitute for effective legislative guarantees of human rights. But conciliation and cooperation can facilitate the achievement of those rights, enabling legislation to operate more smoothly and more effectively.

The Department of Justice and its Civil Rights Division have already performed yeoman service of this nature, in Birmingham, in Jackson, and throughout the country. But the problem has grown beyond the time and energies which a few otherwise burdened officials can make available -- and, in some areas, the confidence of all will be greater in an intermediary whose duties are completely separated from departmental functions of investigation or litigation.

It is my intention, therefore, to establish by Executive Order (until such time as it can be created by statute) an independent Community Relations Service -- to fulfill the functions described above, working through regional, state and local committees to the extent possible, and offering its services in tension-torn communities either upon its own motion or upon the request of a local official or other party. Authority for such a Service is included in the proposed omnibus bill. It will work without publicity and hold all information imparted to its officers in strict confidence. Its own resources can be preserved by its encouraging and assisting the creation of state and local committees, either on a continuing basis or in emergency situations.

Without powers of enforcement or subpoena, such a Service is no substitute for other measures; and it cannot guarantee success. But dialogue and discussion are always better than violence -- and this agency, by enabling all concerned to sit down and reason together, can play a major role in achieving peaceful progress in civil rights.

V. Federal programs

Simple justice requires that public funds, to which all taxpayers of all races contribute, not be spent in any fashion which encourages, entrenches, subsidizes or results in racial discrimination. Direct discrimination by Federal, state or local governments is prohibited by the Constitution. But indirect discrimination, through the use of Federal funds, is just as invidious; and it should not be necessary to resort to the courts to prevent each individual violation. Congress and the Executive have their responsibilities to uphold the Constitution also;

and, in the 1960's, the Executive branch has sought to fulfill its responsibilities by banning discrimination in Federally financed housing, in NDEA and NSF institutes, in Federally affected employment, in the Army and Air Force Reserve, in the training of civilian defense workers and in all Federally owned and leased facilities.

Many statutes providing Federal financial assistance, however, define with such precision both the Administrator's role and the conditions upon which specified amounts shall be given to designated recipients that the amount of administrative discretion remaining -- which might be used to withhold funds if discrimination were not ended -- is at best questionable. No administrator has the unlimited authority to invoke the Constitution in opposition to the mandate of the Congress. Nor would it always be helpful to require unconditionally -- as is often proposed -- the withdrawal of all Federal funds from programs urgently needed by Negroes as well as whites; for this may only penalize those who least deserve it without ending discrimination.

Instead of permitting this issue to become a political device often exploited by those opposed to social or economic progress, it would be better at this time to pass a single comprehensive provision making it clear that the Federal Government is not required, under any statute, to furnish any kind of financial assistance -- by way of grant, loan, contract, guaranty, insurance or otherwise -- to any program or activity in which racial discrimination occurs. This would not permit the Federal Government to cut off all Federal aid of all kinds as a means of punishing an area for the discrimination occurring therein -- but it would clarify the authority of any administrator with respect to Federal funds or financial assistance and discriminatory practices.

Conclusion

Many problems remain that cannot be ignored. The enactment of the legislation I have recommended will not solve all our problems of race relations. This bill must be supplemented by action in every branch of government at the Federal, state and local level. It must be supplemented as well by enlightened private citizens, private businesses and private labor and civic organizations, by responsible educators and editors, and certainly by religious leaders who recognize the conflict between racial bigotry and the Holy Word.

This is not a sectional problem -- it is nationwide. It is not a partisan problem. The proposals set forth above are based on a careful consideration of the views of leaders of both parties in both Houses of Congress. In 1957 and 1960, members of both parties rallied behind the Civil Rights measures of my predecessor; and I am certain that this tradition can be continued, as it has in the case of world crises. A national domestic crisis also calls for bipartisan unity and solutions.

We will not solve these problems by blaming any group or section for the legacy which has been handed down by past generations. But neither will these problems be solved by clinging to the patterns of the past. Nor, finally, can they be solved in the streets, by lawless acts on either side, or by the physical actions or presence of any private group or public official, however appealing such melodramatic devices may seem to some.

During the weeks past, street demonstrations, mass picketing and parades have brought these matters to the Nation's attention in dramatic fashion in many cities throughout the United States. This has happened because these racial injustices are real and no other remedy was in sight. But, as feelings have risen in recent days, these demonstrations have increasingly endangered lives and property, enflamed emotions and unnecessarily divided communities. They are not the way in which this country should rid itself of racial discrimination. Violence is never justified; and, while peaceful communication, deliberation and petitions of protest continue, I want to caution against demonstrations which can lead to violence.

This problem is now before the Congress. Unruly tactics or pressures will not help and may hinder the effective consideration of these measures. If they are enacted, there will be legal remedies available; and, therefore, while the Congress is completing its work, I urge all community leaders, Negro and white, to do their utmost to lessen tensions and to exercise self-restraint. The Congress should have an opportunity to freely work its will. Meanwhile, I strongly support action by local public officials and merchants to remedy these grievances on their own.

The legal remedies I have proposed are the embodiment of this nation's basic posture of common sense and common justice. They involve every American's right to vote, to go to school, to get a job and to be served in a public place without arbitrary discrimination -- rights which most Americans take for granted.

In short, enactment of "The Civil Rights Act of 1963" at this session of the Congress -- however long it may take and however troublesome it may be -- is imperative. It will go far toward providing reasonable men with the reasonable means of meeting these problems; and it will thus help end the kind of racial strife which this nation can hardly afford. Rancor, violence, disunity and national shame can only hamper our national standing and security. To paraphrase the words of Lincoln; "In giving freedom to the Negro, we assure freedom to the free -- honorable alike in what we give and what we preserve."

I therefore ask every member of Congress to set aside sectional and political ties, and to look at this issue from the viewpoint of the Nation. I ask you to look into your hearts -- not in search of charity, for the Negro neither wants nor needs condescension -- but for the one plain, proud and priceless quality that unites us all as Americans; a sense of justice. In this year of the Emancipation Centennial, justice requires us to insure the blessings of liberty for all Americans and their posterity -- not merely for reasons of economic efficiency, world diplomacy and domestic tranquility -- but, above all, because it is right.

President's Message: 'Our Heritage of Equal Rights'

WASHINGTON (AP)—The text of President John F. Kennedy's civil rights message to Congress Wednesday:

Last week I addressed to the American people an appeal to conscience—a request for their cooperation in meeting the growing moral crisis in American race relations. I warned of "a rising tide of discontent that threatens the public safety" in many parts of the country. I emphasized that "the events in Birmingham and elsewhere have so increased the cries for equality that no city or state or legislative body can prudently choose to ignore them." "It is a time to act," I said, "in the Congress, in state and local legislative bodies and, above all, in all of our daily lives."

In the days that have followed, the predictions of increased violence have been tragically borne out. The "fires of frustration and discord" have burned hotter than ever.

At the same time, the response of the American people to this appeal to their principles and obligations has been reassuring. Private progress—by merchants and unions and local organizations—has been marked, if not uniform, in many areas.

Many doors long closed to Negroes, North and South, have been opened. Local biracial committees, under private and public sponsorship, have mushroomed. The mayors of our major cities, whom I earlier addressed, have pledged renewed action.

But persisting inequalities and tensions make it clear that federal action must lead the way, providing both the nation's standard and a nationwide solution. In short, the time has come for the Congress of the United States to join with the executive and judicial branches in making it clear to all that race has no place in American life or law.

Rights Legislation

On Feb. 28, I sent to the Congress a message urging the enactment this year of three important pieces of civil rights legislation:

1. Voting. Legislation to assure the availability to all of a basic and powerful right — the right to vote in a free American election—by providing for the appointment of temporary federal voting referees while voting suits are proceeding in areas of demonstrated need; by giving such suits preferential and expedited treatment in the federal courts; by prohibiting in federal elections merchants who do recognize the justice of the Negro's request (and I believe these constitute the great majority of merchants, North and South) will be fearful of being the first to move, in the face of official, customer, employe or competitive pressures.

Negroes, consequently, can be expected to continue increasingly to seek the vindication of these rights through organized direct action, with all its potentially explosive consequences, which we have seen in Birmingham, in Philadelphia, in Jackson, in Boston, in Cambridge, Md., and in many other parts of the country.

In short, the result of continued federal legislative inaction will be continued, if not increased, racial strife—causing the leadership on both sides to pass from the hands of reasonable and responsible men to the purveyors of hate and violence, endangering domestic tranquility, retarding our nation's economic and social progress and weakening the respect with which the rest of the world regards us. No American, I feel sure, would prefer this course of tension, disorder and division—and the great majority of our citizens simply cannot accept it.

Omnibus Bill

For these reasons, I am proposing that the Congress stay in session this year until it has enacted — preferably as a single omnibus bill—the most responsible, reasonable and urgently needed solutions to this problem, solutions which should be acceptable to all fair-minded men. This bill would be known as the "Civil Rights Act of 1963," and would include—in addition to the aforementioned provisions on voting rights and Civil Rights Commission—additional titles on public accommodations, employment, federally assisted programs, a community relations service, and education, with the latter including my previous recommendation on this subject. In addition, I am requesting certain legislative and budget amendments designed to improve the training, skills and economic opportunities of the economically distressed and discontented, white and Negro alike. Certain executive actions are also reviewed here; but legislative action is imperative.

1. Equal accommodations in public facilities.

Events of recent weeks have again underlined how deeply our Negro citizens resent the injustice of being arbitrarily denied 100 years ago, was also accused of violating the property rights of slaveowners. Indeed, there is an age-old saying that "Property has its duties as well as its rights"; and no property owner who holds those premises for the purpose of serving at a profit the American public at large can claim any inherent right to exclude a part of that public on grounds of race or color. Just as the law requires common carriers to serve equally all who wish their services, so it can require public accommodations to accommodate equally all segments of the general public. Both human rights and property rights are foundations of our society—and both will flourish as the result of this measure.

Mobile Society

In a society which is increasingly mobile and in an economy which is increasingly interdependent, business establishments which serve the public—such as hotels, restaurants, theaters, stores and others—serve not only the members of their immediate communities but travelers from other states and visitors from abroad. Their goods come from all over the nation. This participation in the flow of interstate commerce has given these business establishments both increased prosperity and an increased responsibility to provide equal access and service to all citizens.

Some 30 states, the District of Columbia and numerous cities—covering some ⅔ of this country and well over ⅔ of its people—have already enacted laws of varying effectiveness against discrimination in places of public accommodation, many of them in response to the recommendation of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights in 1947. But while their efforts indicate that legislation in this area is not extraordinary, the failure of more states to take effective action makes it clear that federal legislation is necessary. The state and local approach has been tried. The voluntary approach has been tried. But these approaches are insufficient to prevent the free flow of commerce from being arbitrarily and inefficiently restrained and distorted by discrimination in such establishments.

(The states and cities to which the message referred were listed as: Alaska, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North

lem cannot await city-by-city solutions; and those who loudly abhor federal action only invite it if they neglect or evade their own obligations.

This provision will open doors in every part of the country which never should have been closed. Its enactment will hasten the end to practices which have no place in a free and united nation, and thus help move this potentially dangerous problem from the streets to the courts.

II. Desegregation of schools.

In my message of Feb. 28, while commending the progress already made in achieving desegregation of education at all levels as required by the Constitution, I was compelled to point out the slowness of progress toward primary and secondary school desegregation. The Supreme Court has recently voiced the same opinion. Many Negro children entering segregated grade schools at the time of the Supreme Court decision in 1954 will enter segregated high schools this year, having suffered a loss which can never be regained. Indeed, discrimination in education is one basic cause of the other inequities and hardships inflicted upon our Negro citizens. The lack of equal educational opportunity deprives the individual of equal economic opportunity, restricts his contribution as a citizen and community leader, encourages him to drop out of school and imposes a heavy burden on the effort to eliminate discriminatory practices and prejudices from our national life.

the attorney general would establish criteria to determine the priority and relative need for federal action in those districts from which complaints have been filed.

(B) As previously recommended, technical and financial assistance would be given to those school districts in all parts of the country which, voluntarily or as the result of litigation, are engaged in the process of meeting the educational problems flowing from desegregation or racial imbalance but which are in need of guidance, experienced help or financial assistance in order to train their personnel for this changeover, cope with new difficulties and complete the job satisfactorily (including in such assistance loans to a district where state or local funds have been withdrawn or withheld because of desegregation).

Public institutions already operating without racial discrimination, of course, will not be affected by this statute. Local action can always make federal action unnecessary. Many school boards have peacefully and voluntarily desegregated in recent years. And while this act does not include private colleges and schools, I strongly urge them to live up to their responsibilities and to recognize no arbitrary bar of race or color—for such bars have no place in any institution, least of all one devoted to the truth and the improvement of all mankind.

Unemployment falls with special cruelty on minority groups. The unemployment rate of Negro workers is more than twice as high as that of the working force as a whole. In many of our larger cities, both North and South, the number of jobless Negro youth—often 20 per cent or more—creates an atmosphere of frustration, resentment and unrest which does not bode well for the future. Delinquency, vandalism, gang warfare, disease, slums and the high cost of public welfare and crime are all directly related to unemployment among white and Negroes alike—and recent labor difficulties in Philadelphia may well be only the beginning if more jobs are not found in the larger Northern cities in particular.

Need Opportunity

Employment opportunities, moreover, play a major role in determining whether the rights described above are meaningful. There is little value in a Negro's obtaining the right to be admitted to hotels and restaurants if he has schooling is around 10 per cent; it has consistently been double the prevailing rate for high school graduates; and studies of public welfare recipients show a shockingly high proportion of parents with less than a primary school education.

I am asking the secretaries of labor and HEW to make use of their authority to deal directly with communities and vocational schools whenever state cooperation or progress is insufficient, particularly in those areas where youth unemployment is too high. Above all, I urge the Congress to enact all of these measures with alacrity and foresight.

For even the complete elimination of racial discrimination in employment — a goal towards which this nation must strive (as discussed below) —will not put a single unemployed Negro to work unless he has the skills required and unless more jobs have been created — and thus the passage of legislation described above (under both sections (1) and (2)) is essential if the objectives of this message are to be met.

(3) Finally race discrimination in employment must be eliminated. Denial of the right to work is unfair, regardless of its victim. It is doubly unfair to throw its burden on an individual because of his race or color. Men who served side by side with each other on the field of battle should have no difficulty working side-by-side on an assembly line or construction project.

Therefore, to combat this evil in all parts of the country,

(A) The Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, under the chairmanship of the vice president, should be given a permanent statutory basis, assuring it of adequate financing and enforcement procedures. That committtee is now stepping up its efforts to remove racial barriers in the hiring practices of federal departments, agencies and federal contractors, covering a total of some 20 million employes and the nation's major employers. I have requested a company-by-company, plant-by-plant, union-by-union report to assure the administration of this policy.

(B) I will shortly issue an executive order extending the authority of the Committee on Equal Employment to include the construction of buildings and other facilities undertaken wholly or in part as a result of federal grant-in-aid programs.

(C) I have directed that all federal construction programs be reviewed to prevent any racial discrimination in hiring practices government—whether affected directly by these measures or not—in the task of seeing to it that no false lines are drawn in assuring equality of the right and opportunity to make a decent living.

IV. Community relations service.

I have repeatedly stressed the fact that progress in race relations, while it cannot be delayed, can be more solidly and more peacefully accomplished to the extent that legislation can be buttressed by voluntary action. I have urged each member of the United States Conference of Mayors to establish biracial human relations committees in every city; and I hope all communities will establish such a group, preferably through official action. Such a board or committee can provide invaluable services by identifying community tensions before they reach the crisis stage, by improving cooperation and communication between the races, and by advising local officials, merchants and organizations on the steps which can be taken to insure prompt progress.

Advice Agency

A similar agency is needed on the federal level—to work with these local committees, providing them with advice and assistance—to work in those committees, which lack a local committee—and generally, to help ease tensions and suspicions, to help resolve inter-racial disputes and to work quietly to improve relations in any community threatened or torn with strife. Such an effort is in no way a substitute for effective legislative guarantees of human rights. But conciliation and cooperation can facilitate the achievement of those rights, enabling legislation to operate more smoothly and more effectively.

The Department of Justice and its Civil Rights Division have already performed yeoman service of this nature, in Birmingham, in Jackson, and throughout the country. But the problem has grown beyond the time and energies which a few otherwise burdened officials can make available—and, in some areas, the confidence of all will be greater in an intermediary whose duties are completely separated from departmental functions of investigation or litigation.

It is my intention, therefore, to establish by executive order (until such time as it can be created by statute) an independent community relations service—to fulfill the functions described above, working through regional, state and local committees to the extent possible and offering its services in tension-torn communities either upon its own motion or mittees, under private and public sponsorship, have mushroomed. The mayors of our major cities, whom I earlier addressed, have pledged renewed action.

But persisting inequalities and tensions make it clear that federal action must lead the way, providing both the nation's standard and a nationwide solution. In short, the time has come for the Congress of the United States to join with the executive and judicial branches in making it clear to all that race has no place in American life or law.

Rights Legislation

On Feb. 28, I sent to the Congress a message urging the enactment this year of three important pieces of civil rights legislation:

1. Voting. Legislation to assure the availability to all of a basic and powerful right — the right to vote in a free American election—by providing for the appointment of temporary federal voting referees while voting suits are proceeding in areas of demonstrated need; by giving such suits preferential and expedited treatment in the federal courts; by prohibiting in federal elections the application of different tests and standards to different voter applicants, and by providing that, in voting suits pertaining to such elections, the completion of the sixth grade by any applicant creates a presumption that he is literate. Armed with the full and equal right to vote, our Negro citizens can help win other rights through political channels not now open to them in many areas.

2. Civil rights commission. Legislation to renew and expand the authority of the Commission on Civil Rights, enabling it to serve as a national civil rights clearing house offering information, advice and technical assistance to any public or private agency that so requests.

2. School desegregation. Legislation to provide federal technical and financing assistance to aid school districts in the process of desegregation in compliance with the Constitution.

Other measures introduced in the Congress have also received the support of this administration, including those aimed at assuring equal employment opportunity.

Although these recommendations were transmitted to the Congress sometime ago, neither house has yet had an opportunity to vote on any of these essential measures. The Negroes' drive for justice, however, has not stood still —nor will it, it is now clear, until full equality is achieved.

Immediate Need

The growing and understandable dissatisfaction of Negro citizens with the present pace of desegregation and their increased determination to secure for themselves the equality of opportunity and treatment to which they are rightfully entitled have underscored what should already have been clear: The necessity of the Congress enacting this year—not only the measure already proposed—but also additional legislation providing legal remedies for the denial of certain individual rights.

The venerable code of equity law commands "for every wrong, remedy." But in too many communities, in too many parts of the country, wrongs are inflicted on Negro citizens for which no effective remedy at law is clearly and readily available. State and local laws may even affirmatively seek to deny the rights to which these citizens are fairly entitled—and this can result only in a decreased respect for the law and increased violations of the law.

In the continued absence of congressional action, too many state and local officials as well as businessmen will remain unwilling to accord these rights to all citizens. Some local courts and local merchants may well claim to be uncertain of the law, while those posing that the Congress stay in session this year until it has enacted — preferably as a single omnibus bill—the most responsible, reasonable and urgently needed solutions to this problem, solutions which should be acceptable to all fair-minded men. This bill would be known as the "Civil Rights Act of 1963," and would include—in addition to the aforementioned provisions on voting rights and Civil Rights Commission—additional titles on public accommodations, employment, federally assisted programs, a community relations service, and education, with the latter including my previous recommendation on this subject. In addition, I am requesting certain legislative and budget amendments designed to improve the training, skills and economic opportunities of the economically distressed and discontented, white and Negro alike. Certain executive actions are also reviewed here; but legislative action is imperative.

1. Equal accommodations in public facilities.

Events of recent weeks have again underlined how deeply our Negro citizens resent the injustice of being arbitrarily denied equal access to those facilities and accommodations which are otherwise open to the general public. That is a daily insult which has no place in a country proud of its heritage—the heritage of the melting-pot, of equal rights, of one nation and one people. No one has been barred on account of his race from fighting or dying for America—there are no "white" or "colored" signs on the foxholes or graveyards of battle. Surely, in 1963, 100 years after emancipation, it should not be necessary for any American citizen to demonstrate in the streets for the opportunity to stop at a hotel, or to eat at a lunch counter in the very department store in which he is shopping, or to enter a motion picture house, on the same terms as any other customer. As I stated in my message to the Congress of February 28, "No action is more contrary to the spirit of our democracy and Constitution—or more rightfully resented by a Negro citizen who seeks only equal treatment—than the barring of that citizen from restaurants, hotels, theaters, recreational areas and other public accommodations and facilities."

Business Protection

The United States government has taken action through the courts and by other means to protect those who are peacefully demonstrating to obtain access to these public facilities; and it has taken action to bring an end to discrimination in rail, bus and airline terminals, to open up restaurants and other public facilities in all buildings leased as well as owned by the federal government, and to assure fully equality of access to all federally owned parks, forests and other recreational areas. When uncontrolled mob action directly threatened the nondiscriminatory use of transportation facilities in May 1961, federal marshals were employed to restore order and prevent potentially widespread personal and property damage. Growing nationwide concern with this problem, however, makes it clear that further federal action is needed now to secure the right of all citizens to the full enjoyment of all facilities which are open to the general public.

Such legislation is clearly consistent with the Constitution and with our concepts of both human rights and property rights. The argument that such measures constitute an unconstitutional interference with property rights has consistently been rejected by the courts in upholding laws on zoning, collective bargaining, minimum wages, smoke control and countless other measures designed to make certain that the use of private property is consistent with the public interest. While the legal situations are not parallel, it is interesting to note that Abraham Lincoln, in issuing the Emancipation Proclamation citizens.

Some 30 states, the District of Columbia and numerous cities—covering some ⅔ of this country and well over ⅔ of its people—have already enacted laws of varying effectiveness against discrimination in places of public accommodation, many of them in response to the recommendation of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights in 1947. But while their efforts indicate that legislation in this area is not extraordinary, the failure of more states to take effective action makes it clear that federal legislation is necessary. The state and local approach has been tried. The voluntary approach has been tried. But these approaches are insufficient to prevent the free flow of commerce from being arbitrarily and inefficiently restrained and distorted by discrimination in such establishments.

U.S. Obligation

Clearly the federal government has both the power and the obligation to eliminate these discriminatory practices: First, because they adversely affect the national economy and the flow of interstate commerce; and secondly, because Congress has been specifically empowered under the Fourteenth Amendment to enact legislation making certain that no state law permits or sanctions the unequal protection or treatment of any of its citizens.

There have been increasing public demonstrations of resentment directed against this kind of discrimination — demonstrations which too often breed tension and violence. Only the federal government, it is clear, can make these demonstrations unnecessary by providing peaceful remedies for the grievances which set them off.

For these reasons, I am today proposing, as part of the Civil Rights Act of 1963, a provision to guarantee all citizens equal access to the services and facilities of hotels, restaurants, places of amusement and retail establishments.

This seems to me to be an elementary right. Its denial is an arbitrary indignity that no American in 1963 should have to endure. The proposal would give the persons aggrieved the right to obtain a court order against the offending establishment or persons. Upon receiving a complaint in a case sufficiently important to warrant his conclusion that a suit would materially further the purposes of the act, the attorney general—if he finds that the aggrieved party is unable to undertake or otherwise arrange for a suit of his own (for lack of financial means or effective representation, or for fear of economic or other injury)—will first refer the case for voluntary settlement to the community relations service described below, give the establishment involved time to correct its practices, permit state and local equal access laws (if any) to operate first, and then, and only then, initiate a suit for compliance. In short, to the extent that these unconscionable practices can be corrected by the individual owners, localities and states (and recent experience demonstrate how effectively and uneventfully this can be done), the federal government has no desire to intervene.

But an explosive national problem is created by those who persist in practices which have no place in a free and united nation, and thus help move this potentially dangerous problem from the streets to the courts.

II. Desegregation of schools.

In my message of Feb. 28, while commending the progress already made in achieving desegregation of education at all levels as required by the Constitution, I was compelled to point out the slowness of progress toward primary and secondary school desegregation. The Supreme Court has recently voiced the same opinion. Many Negro children entering segregated grade schools at the time of the Supreme Court decision in 1954 will enter segregated high schools this year, having suffered a loss which can never be regained. Indeed, discrimination in education is one basic cause of the other inequities and hardships inflicted upon our Negro citizens. The lack of equal educational opportunity deprives the individual of equal economic opportunity, restricts his contribution as a citizen and community leader, encourages him to drop out of school and imposes a heavy burden on the effort to eliminate discriminatory practices and prejudices from our national life.

Courage of Courts

The federal courts, pursuant to the 1954 decision of the United States Supreme Court and earlier decisions on institutions of higher learning, have shown both competence and courage in directing the desegregation of schools on the local level. It is appropriate to keep this responsibility largely within the judicial arena. But it is unfair and unrealistic to expect that the burden of initiating such cases can be wholly borne by private litigants. Too often those entitled to bring suit on behalf of their children lack the economic means for instituting and maintaining such cases or the ability to withstand the personal, physical and economic harassment which sometimes descend upon those who do institute them. The same is true of students wishing to attend the college of their choice but unable to assume the burden of litigation.

The difficulties are among the principal reasons for the delay in carrying out the 1954 decision; and this delay cannot be justified to those who have been hurt as a result. Rights such as these, as the Supreme Court recently said, are "present rights. They are not merely hopes to some future enjoyment of some formalistic constitutional promise. The basic guarantees of our Constitution are warrants for the here and now. . . .

Better Compliance

In order to achieve a more orderly and consistent compliance with the Supreme Court's school and college desegregation decisions, therefore, I recommend that the Congress assert its specific constitutional authority to implement the 14th Amendment by including in the Civil Rights Act of 1963 a new title providing the following:

(A) Authority would be given the attorney general to initiate in the federal district courts appropriate legal proceedings against local public school boards or public institutions of higher learning—or to intervene in existing cases—whenever:

(1) He has received a written complaint from students or from the parents of students who are being denied equal protection of the laws by a segregated public school or college; and

(2) He certifies that such persons are unable to undertake or otherwise arrange for the initiation and maintenance of such legal proceedings for lack of financial means or effective legal representation or for fear of economic or other injury; and

(3) He determines that his initiation of or intervention in such suit will materially further the orderly progress of desegregation in public education. For this purpose, of all one devoted to the truth and the improvement of all mankind.

III. Fair and full employment.

Unemployment falls with special cruelty on minority groups. The unemployment rate of Negro workers is more than twice as high as that of the working force as a whole. In many of our larger cities, both North and South, the number of jobless Negro youth—often 20 per cent or more—creates an atmosphere of frustration, resentment and unrest which does not bode well for the future. Delinquency, vandalism, gang warfare, disease, slums and the high cost of public welfare and crime are all directly related to unemployment among white and Negroes alike—and recent labor difficulties in Philadelphia may well be only the beginning if more jobs are not found in the larger Northern cities in particular.

Need Opportunity

Employment opportunities, moreover, play a major role in determining whether the rights described above are meaningful. There is little value in a Negro's obtaining the right to be admitted to hotels and restaurants if he has no cash in his pocket and no job.

Relief of Negro unemployment requires progress in three major areas:

(1) More jobs must be created through greater economic growth. The Negro—too often unskilled, too often the first to be fired and the last to be hired—is a primary victim of recessions, depressed areas and unused industrial capacity. Negro unemployment will not be noticeably diminished in this country until the total demand for labor is effectively increased and the whole economy is headed toward a level of full employment. When our economy operates below capacity, Negroes are more severely affected than other groups. Conversely, return to full employment yields particular benefits to the Negro. Recent studies have shown that for every one percentage point decline in the general unemployment rate there tends to be a two percentage point reduction in Negro unemployment.

Prompt and substantial tax reduction is a key to achieving the full employment we need. The promise of the area redevelopment program—which harnesses local initiative toward the solution of deep-seated economic distress—must not be stifled for want of sufficient authorization or adequate financing. The accelerated public works program is now gaining momentum; states, cities and local communities should press ahead with the projects financed by this measure. In addition, I have instructed the Departments of Labor, Commerce, and Health, Education, and Welfare to examine how their programs for the relief of unemployment and economic hardship can be still more intensively focused on those areas of hard-core, long-term unemployment, among both white and nonwhite workers. Our concern with civil rights must not cause any diversion or dilution of our efforts for economic progress—for without such progress the Negro's hopes will remain unfulfilled.

(2) More education and training to raise the level of skills.

A distressing number of unemployed Negroes are illiterate and unskilled, refugees from farm automation, unable to do simple computations or even to read a help-wanted advertisement. Too many are equipped to work only in those occupations where technology and other changes have reduced the need for manpower—as farm labor or manual labor, in mining or construction. Too many have attended segregated schools that were so lacking in adequate funds and faculty as to be unable to produce qualified job applicants. And too many who have attended nonsegregated schools dropped out for lack of incentive, guidance or progress. The unemployment rate for those adults with less than 5 years of tion to assist education at every level from grade school through graduate school.

I have also requested the enactment of several measures which provide, by various means and for various age and educational groups, expanded job training and job experience. Today, in the new and more urgent context of this message, I wish to renew my request for these measures, to expand their prospective operation and to supplement them with additional provisions. The additional $400 million which will be required beyond that contained in the January budget is more than offset by the various budget reductions which I have already sent to the Congress in the last four months. Studies show, moreover, that the loss of one year's income due to unemployment is more than the total cost of 12 years of education through high school; and, when welfare and other social costs are added, it is clear that failure to take these steps will cost us far more than their enactment. There is no more profitable investment than education, and no greater waste than ill-trained youth.

Detailed Proposals

Specifically, I now propose:

(A) That additional funds be provided to broaden the manpower development and training program, and that the act be amended, not only to increase the authorization ceiling and to postpone the effective date of state matching requirements, but also (in keeping with the recommendations of the President's Committee on Youth Employment) to lower the age for training allowances from 19 to 16, to allocate funds for literacy training, and to permit the payment of a higher proportion of the program's training allowances to out-of-school youths, with provisions to assure that no one drops out of school to take advantage of this program;

(B) That additional funds be provided to finance the pending youth employment bill, which is designed to channel the energies of out-of-school, out-of-work youth into the constructive outlet offered by home-town improvement projects and conservation work;

(C) That the pending vocational education amendments, which would greatly update and expand this program of teaching job skills to those in school, be strengthened by the appropriation of additional funds, with some of the added money earmarked for those areas with a high incidence of school dropouts and youth unemployment, and by the addition of a new program of demonstration youth training projects to be conducted in these areas;

(D) That the vocational education program be further amended to provide a work-study program for youth of high-school age, with federal funds helping their school or other local public agency employ them part time in order to enable and encourage them to complete their training;

(E) That the ceiling be raised on the adult basic education provisions in the pending education program, in order to help the states teach the fundamental tools of literacy and learning to culturally deprived adults. More than 22 million Americans in all parts of the country have less than eight years of schooling; and

State Legislation

(F) That this public welfare work-relief and training program, which the Congress added last year, be amended to provide federal financing of the supervision and equipment costs, and more federal demonstration and training projects, thus encouraging state and local welfare agencies to put employable but unemployed welfare recipients to work on local projects which do not displace other workers.

To make the above recommendations effective, I call upon more have no difficulty working side-by-side on an assembly line or construction project.

Therefore, to combat this evil in all parts of the country,

(A) The Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, under the chairmanship of the vice president, should be given a permanent statutory basis, assuring it of adequate financing and enforcement procedures. That committtee is now stepping up its efforts to remove racial barriers in the hiring practices of federal departments, agencies and federal contractors, covering a total of some 20 million employes and the nation's major employers. I have requested a company-by-company, plant-by-plant, union-by-union report to assure the administration of this policy.

(B) I will shortly issue an executive order extending the authority of the Committee on Equal Employment to include the construction of buildings and other facilities undertaken wholly or in part as a result of federal grant-in-aid programs.

(C) I have directed that all federal construction programs be reviewed to prevent any racial discrimination in hiring practices, either directly in the rejection of presently available qualified Negro workers or indirectly by the exclusion of Negro applicants for apprenticeship training.

(D) I have directed the secretary of labor, in the conduct of his duties under the Federal Apprenticeship Act and Executive Order No. 10925, to require that the admission of young workers to apprenticeship programs be on a completely nondiscriminatory basis.

Job Counseling

(E) I have directed the secretary of labor to make certain that the job counseling and placement responsibilities of the Federal-State Employment Service are carried out on a nondiscriminatory basis, and to help assure that full and equal employment opportunity is provided all qualified Negro applicants. The selection and referral of applicants for employment and for training opportunities, and the administration of the employment offices' other services and facilities, must be carried on without regard to race or color. This will be of special importance to Negroes graduating from high school or college this month.

(F) The Department of Justice has intervened in a case now pending before the NLRB involving charges of racial discrimination on the part of certain locals.

(G) As part of its new policy on federal employes' organizations, this government will recognize only those that do not discriminate on grounds of race or color.

(H) I have called upon the leaders of organized labor to end discrimination in their membership policies; and some 118 unions, representing 35 percent of the AFL-CIO membership, have signed nondiscrimination agreements with the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. More are expected.

(I) Finally, I renew my support of pending federal fair employment practices legislation, applicable to both employers and unions. Approximately two-thirds of the nation's labor force is already covered by federal, state and local equal employment opportunity measures — including those employed in the 22 states and numerous cities which have enacted such laws as well as those paid directly or indirectly by federal funds. But, as the secretary of labor testified in January, 1962, federal legislation is desirable, for it would help set a standard for all the nation and close existing gaps.

This problem of unequal job opportunities must not be allowed to grow, as the result of either recession or discrimination. I enlist every employer, every labor union, and every agency of solve inter-racial disputes and to work quietly to improve relations in any community threatened or torn with strife. Such an effort is in no way a substitute for effective legislative guarantees of human rights. But conciliation and cooperation can facilitate the achievement of those rights, enabling legislation to operate more smoothly and more effectively.

The Department of Justice and its Civil Rights Division have already performed yeoman service of this nature, in Birmingham, in Jackson, and throughout the country. But the problem has grown beyond the time and energies which a few otherwise burdened officials can make available—and, in some areas, the confidence of all will be greater in an intermediary whose duties are completely separated from departmental functions of investigation or litigation.

It is my intention, therefore, to establish by executive order (until such time as it can be created by statute) an independent community relations service—to fulfill the functions described above, working through regional, state and local committees to the extent possible and offering its services in tension-torn communities either upon its own motion or upon the request of a local official or other party. Authority for such a service is included in the proposed omnibus bill. It will work without publicity and hold all information imparted to its officers in strict confidence. Its own resources can be preserved by its encouraging and assisting the creation of state and local committees, either on a continuing basis or in emergency situations.

Reason Together

Without powers of enforcement or subpoena, such a service is no substitute for other measures; and it cannot guarantee success. But dialogue and discussions are always better than violence—and this agency, by enabling all concerned to sit down and reason together, can play a major role in achieving peaceful progress in civil rights.

V. Federal programs.

Simple justice requires that public funds, to which all taxpayers of all races contribute, not be spent in any fashion which encourages, entrenches, subsidizes or results in racial discrimination. Direct discrimination by federal, state or local governments is prohibited by the Constitution. But indirect discrimination, through the use of federal funds, is just as invidious; and it should not be necessary to resort to the courts to prevent each individual violation. Congress and the executive have their responsibilities to uphold the Constitution also; and, in the 1960s, the executive branch has sought to fulfill its responsibilities by banning discrimination in federally financed housing, in federally affected employment, in the Army and Air Force Reserve, in the training of civilian defense workers and in all federally owned and leased facilities.

Many statutes providing federal financial assistance, however, define with such precision both the administrator's role and the conditions upon which specified amounts shall be given to designated recipients that the amount of administrative discretion remaining—which might be used to withhold funds if discrimination were not ended—is at best questionable. No administration has the unlimited authority to invoke the Constitution in opposition to the mandate of the Congress. Nor would it always be helpful to require unconditionally—as is often proposed—the withdrawal of all federal funds from programs urgently needed by Negroes as well as white; for this may only penalize those who least deserve it without ending discrimination.

Instead of permitting this issue to become a political device often exploited by those opposed to social or economic progress, it would be better at this time to pass a single comprehensive provision making it clear that the federal government is not required, under any statute, to furnish any kind of financial assistance—by way of grant, loan, contract, guaranty, insurance or otherwise—to any program or activity in which racial discrimination occurs. This would not permit means of punishing an area for the discrimination occurring therein—but it would clarify the authority of any administrator with respect to federal funds or financial assistance and discriminatory practices.

Conclusion

Many problems remain that cannot be ignored. The enactment of the legislation I have recommended will not solve all our problems of race relations. This bill must be supplemented by action in every branch of government at the federal, state and local level. It must be supplemented as well by enlightened private citizens, private businesses and private labor and civic organizations, by responsible educators and editors, and certainly by religious leaders who recognize the conflict between racial bigotry and the Holy Word.

This is not a sectional problem —it is nationwide. It is not a partisan problem. The proposals set forth above are based on a careful consideration of the views of leaders of both parties in both houses of Congress. In 1957 and 1960, members of both parties rallied behind the civil rights measures of my predecessor; and I am certain that this tradition can be continued, as it has in the case of world crises. A national domestic crisis also calls for bipartisan unity and solutions.

We will not solve these problems by blaming any group or section for the legacy which has been handed down by past generations. But neither will these problems be solved by clinging to the patterns of the past. Nor, finally, can they be solved in the streets, by lawless acts on either side, or by the physical actions or presence of any private group or public official, however appealing such melodramatic devices may seem to some.

During the weeks past, street demonstrations, mass picketing and parades have brought these matters to the nation's attention in dramatic fashion in many cities throughout the United States. This has happened because these racial injustices are real and no other remedy was in sight. But, as feelings have risen in recent days, these demonstrations have increasingly endangered lives and property, enflamed emotions and unnecessarily divided communities. They are not the way in which this country should rid itself of racial discrimination. Violence is never justified; and, while peaceful communication, deliberation and petitions of protest continue, I want to caution against demonstrations which can lead to violence.

This problem is now before the Congress. Unruly tactics or pressures will not help and may hinder the effective consideration of these measures. If they are enacted, there will be legal remedies available; and, therefore, while the Congress is completing its work, I urge all community leaders, Negro and white, to do their utmost to lessen tensions and to exercise self-restraint. The Congress should have an opportunity to freely work its will. Meanwhile, I strongly support action by local public officials and merchants to remedy these grievances on their own.

Rights of All

The legal remedies I have proposed are the embodiment of this nation's basic posture of common sense and common justice. They involve every American's right to vote, to go to school, to get a job and to be served in a public place without arbitrary discrimination — rights which most Americans take for granted.

In short, enactment of "The Civil Rights Act of 1963" at this session of the Congress—however long it may take and however troublesome it may be—is imperative. It will go far toward providing reasonable men with the reasonable means of meeting these problems; and it will thus help end the kind of racial strife which this nation can hardly afford. Rancor, violence, disunity and national shame can only hamper our national standing and security. To paraphrase the words of Lincoln; "in giving freedom to the Negro, we assure freedom to the free—honorable alike in what we give and what we preserve."

I therefore ask every member of Congress to set aside sectional and political ties, and to look at this issue from the viewpoint of the nation. I ask you to look into your hearts—not in search of charity, for the Negro neither wants nor needs condescension—but for the one plain, proud and priceless quality that unites us all as Americans; a sense of justice. In this year of the emancipation centennial, justice requires us to insure the blessings of liberty for all Americans and their posterity —not merely for reasons of economic efficiency, world diplomacy and domestic tranquility — but, above all, because it is right.

Wilbur.

Completing the senior course at the Naval War College, Newport, R.I., in May 1930, he served from June of that year until February 1932 as head of the department of navigation at the Naval Academy. He then returned to sea as commanding officer of the U.S.S. Rochester, and from July 1933 until July 1934 served as chief of staff to Commander Base Force, U.S. Fleet, reporting to Headquarters, 11th Naval District, San Diego, Calif., for his next tour of duty. On June 5, 1937, he assumed command of the U.S.S. California, which he had assisted in fitting out in 1921. He remained in that command until January 1938, when he was designated chief of staff and aide to Commander Battleships, Battle Force. In November 1938 he was commissioned rear admiral.

He attended the advanced course at the Naval War College for 6 months, and on December 27, 1939, became Commander, Base Force, U.S. Fleet, redesignated Base Force, Pacific Fleet in February 1941. From August of that year until February 1942 he had additional duty as Commander, Train Squadron 2. On February 27, 1942, he became commander, Service Force, U.S. Pacific Fleet, with the accompanying rank of vice admiral, and served in that capacity until March 1945. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal and the Legion of Merit, with citations, in part, to follow:

Distinguished Service Medal: "For exceptionally meritorious service * * * as Commander Base Force and Commander Service Force, U.S. Pacific Fleet, in connection with operations against the enemy in the Pacific War Area from December 1939 to February 1945. Charged with logistic support or the Pacific Fleet and naval shore-based establishments in the Pacific Ocean Area, (he) applied keen intelligence and resourceful initiative to the complexities of his assignment and, working with tireless energy, planned and organized a greatly enlarged service of supply which enabled him to provide personnel provisions, fuel and ammunition for all fleet operations and thereby accommodate the vital needs of our constantly increasing naval forces in this strategic theater of war with remarkable expediency."

Legion of Merit: "For exceptionally meritorious conduct * * * while attached temporarily to the staff of Commander South Pacific, during the period 18 October to 7 December 1942 * * * (He) was instrumental in initiating and establishing the logistic supply system for the South Pacific Forces * * * in the face of most difficult transportation problems and concurrent combat reactions."

From March 6 to October 1945 he served as commander, South Pacific Force and Area, and was awarded a Gold Star in lieu of the second Legion of Merit for outstanding services and swill in the performance of his duties. The citation states that he was "instrumental in promptly initiating and administering efficient measures for moving personnel and supplies forward from the South Pacific Area into the more advanced combat areas * * * resulting in the acceleration of the campaign in the Central Pacific."

Returning to the United States in October 1945, he had temporary duty in the Office of the Inspector General, Navy Department, and in February 1946 reported to commander, Western Sea Frontier, for duty as general inspector for that area. In April 1946 he was ordered relieved of all active duty and, following a period of leave, was transferred to the retired list after 44 years of active naval service. On January 14, 1954, he was given the combat promotion to admiral, U.S. Navy, retired, his commission dated August 7, 1947. Fleet Adm. C. W. Nimitz flew from Berkeley to Coronado to make personal delivery of this commission at the Naval Air Station, San Diego.

In addition to the Distinguished Service Medal and the Legion of Merit with Gold Star in lieu of the second award, Admiral Calhoun has been designated to wear the Combat "V" and has the Nicaraguan Campaign Medal; the Victory Medal, Submarine Clasp (World War I); the Yangtze Service Medal; American Defense Service Medal, Fleet Clasp; the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Medal; and the World War II Victory Medal.

Admiral Calhoun is a great grandson of Mr. John Caldwell Calhoun, Vice President of the United States, from South Carolina. He was married on February 10, 1946, to Miss Rosalie Oneschuk, of Milford, Mass., ex-first lieutenant, Army Nurse Corps. Mrs. Calhoun served from June 1943 to August 1945 in the South Pacific Force, at 8th Army General Hospital, Dumbea, New Caledonia. They reside at 1115 Alameda Boulevard, Coronado, Calif. They have two sons, Alexander Oneschuk Calhoun, and Patrick Noble Calhoun; and a daughter, Rosalie Julia Calhoun. He has two sons by a former marriage, William L. Calhoun, Jr., and John C. Calhoun.

United States Hires Unqualified Negroes

OF

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, June 27, 1963

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD another outstanding editorial from the Columbia Record, of Columbia, S.C. This editorial is entitled "United States Hires Unqualified Negroes," and was printed in the June 24, 1963, issue of the Columbia Record. It is the sequel to another excellent editorial from the Columbia Record which I placed in the RECORD on page A3945 on June 24, 1963.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES HIRES UNQUALIFIED NEGROES

(Denial of the right to work is unfair, regardless of its victim. It is doubly unfair to throw its burden on an individual because of his race or color.—President Kennedy.)

Nowhere in his civil rights message to Congress did President Kennedy note with righteous indignation a discrimination in employment that grows daily by leaps and bounds, all across the Nation. The discrimination, transcending the law, is directed from Washington.

The President ignored the discrimination "because of race or color" because the white citizen is its victim, the employer is the Federal Government, and the whole drive is the result of extraordinary pressures brought by Vice President JOHNSON'S Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

These things are happening in the United States:

1. The Civil Service Commission regulations are being reduced to a meaningless shamble;

2. Unqualified Negroes are being hired even though qualified whites are being rejected;

3. Federal agents are hunting Negro applicants in the boondocks, even though white applicants are being spurned;

4. Unrealistic and illogical "percentages" of Negro employees are being forced on local agencies;

5. And Federal supervisory officials are threatened with the loss of their own jobs if such discriminations are not made in favor of the Negro.

Last Thursday (June 20) the Record cataloged a series of such startling violations of any respectable concept of "fair employment." Since that time, we've not only corroborated the incidents but have received communications about similar ones and even more astonishing revelations.

Federal supervisory officials, we have now learned, have been instructed by their Washington directors to hire certain percentages of Negro employees or be fired. In several instances, the top personnel were given the choice of implementing the program, being transferred, or resigning Government employ.

The only qualification, in some agencies, an applicant needs in this weird June month of 1963 is "the right color." The color is not white.

It doesn't matter whether the new Negro employees are qualified or unqualified. Washington has directed that "unqualified Negroes be placed on temporary employment" for 800 hours, at the end of which time the employee is to be qualified. (Eight hundred hours adds up to about 5 months.)

If a Federal agency can scrounge around and find more than its "quota" of qualified Negroes, it has been given instructions to hire them. "Disregard the fact that there is no opening. Hire them. Forget about the money. Washington'll supply it."

The vital civil service register, at the heart and core of the Government's merit system, has gone by the boards. In one southern area, the register was simply abolished. Object: to hire and upgrade Negroes with a total disregard for civil service regulations.

In other areas, the Civil Service Commission has just been bypassed or ignored.

"Never before," said one Federal official, "has my agency been involved in politics. Never. Now, it's completely saturated."

With all the seriousness that the Record can muster, it appeals to Congress to immediately investigate such violations. We may have reached the point where, also, Congress must establish a counterpart to Vice President JOHNSON'S Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity for Federal jobs.

It might be called the Committee on Equal White Employment Opportunity.

felt wishes for the continued resurgence of the Italian Republic.

It was 471 years ago that Columbus and his three frail ships reached the Western Hemisphere. Throughout history, few men have had to fight so desperately for their ideas and few men have been forced to face unknowns of such proportion and consequence. The heritage of Columbus, the son of a wool merchant, is indeed the heritage of a true pioneer.

We are all familiar with the challenges encountered and the hardships endured in the preparation and conduct of his journey. The financial and physical problems, however, were not the most burdensome. The responsibility for the failure of the voyage would be entirely his. Columbus was gambling not only his future, but also his life and the lives of those accompanying him. Their fate depended upon the validity of a concept generally regarded as absurd—that one could reach the East by sailing west.

Today our country also faces a future that is both challenging and uncertain. As this pioneer, whose only chart was faith, dared to face the unknown in a superstition-ridden world, we too must summon all our courage and skill in order to extract the promises and avoid the perils of life in a nuclear world. In the tradition of Columbus, we must strive to bring to all mankind a higher civilization—one noble in purpose and humanitarian in practice. At the present time, the need for men of such dedication and faith is more urgent than ever. The question now is not whether a few will succeed or fail, but whether all will perish or prevail. On this day, it is appropriate that we not only pay honor to Columbus as a man and source of inspiration, but also that we recognize the debt owed to his native land. Many Italians have brought their energies and talents to Massachusetts and the entire Nation. Their economic, cultural, and political contributions have been of immense significance in the development and prosperity of my home State.

In the achievements of Columbus, there is a lesson for us all. This adventurous Italian was willing to sacrifice personal comfort and risk life itself in defense of a concept which he held to be true. Likewise, those who would enjoy the blessings of human liberty must be of equal courage and commitment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, 471 years ago this week Christopher Columbus, the son of a Genoese weaver, navigated his 3 little ships and 120 men into the waters of the Western Hemisphere.

The great Italian explorer had to conquer more than the Atlantic Ocean in 1492. He fought poverty, ridicule, physical anguish, disappointment, treachery, and ingratitude in an effort to prove some scientific truths which we now accept without question.

His was a victory for all civilization. But today I want to call special attention to the fact that he was an Italian, the first of many who came to the New World in the next several centuries and made important contributions to benefit our society.

This week, as we pay tribute to the memory of this great Italian, the atmosphere in Washington is being poisoned by the testimony of a man who is a criminal and who happens to be of Italian descent.

I regret to have to raise this issue so bluntly, but it is a matter of deep concern to me because I believe that Joseph Valachi, because of his name and the names of some of those he is testifying about, is doing the saddest of injustices to millions of decent, hard-working Americans who also happen to be of Italian origin.

Mr. President, this is in no sense a criticism of the hearings or those who are conducting them. Organized crime in America is an ugly subject which must be investigated and must be exposed if we are to know how to legislate most effectively against crime.

My comments, however, are directed at Americans in general and some news writers in particular who are using these hearings as an excuse to defame a whole people.

I ask them to remember that some 12 million Americans of Italian descent are following these hearings with horror and disgust while Valachi talks about the very lowest elements of society. I suggest that any heavily publicized, heavily televised hearings about the worst elements of any race, religion, or national origin would be equally sordid and unfair to those groups.

But, above all, I ask all Americans this week to remember that after Christopher Columbus, Italy gave us a great number of outstanding persons who helped make America better and helped shape the American way of life into what it is today.

To name just a few:

Enrico Tonti came from Italy in the 17th century to join LaSalle in exploration of the Western Hemisphere. Among his other achievements was the exploration of the Mississippi to its mouth.

Francesco Vigo came to America from Piedmont in 1775 and became a successful merchant. When the expedition of George Rogers Clark in the Revolutionary War seemed about to fail for lack of supplies, Vigo put his fortune at the disposal of the Revolutionary cause and made possible the success of Clark's campaign against the British in the West.

Philip Mazzei, from Poggio-a-Caiano, settled in Virginia in 1773 and became a friend of Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson translated some of Mazzei's patriotic American writings into English and was influenced by these writings in his own drafting of our Declaration of Independence.

Constantino Brumidi, the outstanding Roman painter, is known to all of us in the Congress. Beginning in 1855 he started work in the Capitol and introduced the art of fresco to this country. Every day we walk under his magnificent paintings in the corridors and in the rotunda, which was his great love. When he began his work on the rotunda frieze he was 70 years old, but he worked for 3 years from a belt that hung 100 feet from the floor. As the partial result of a fall, he died in January 1880, leaving behind some of the truly great works of art in America.

Charles Barsotti came here from the Pisa area in 1872, established the first Italian daily in the United States and was known as an outstanding civic leader and philanthropist.

Enrico Caruso, the grand opera tenor from Naples, spent the last 20 years of his life making the air of America beautiful with his singing—and also contributing great sums of money to the Allied cause in World War I.

Luigi Palma di Cesnola, of Rivarolo, came to the United States in 1860, founded a military school for officers and then enlisted and fought through the Civil War. As a naturalized American he became American consul to Cyprus, and later director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

Louis Amateis of Turin came to America in 1883 and did outstanding work as university professor, architect and sculptor.

Nor can we omit such scientists as Enrico Fermi, who made possible the use of atomic power. Its ultimate use for peaceful purposes can and will open up a whole new world and a better life for all peoples.

Mr. President, I have named only a few of those Italians who have contributed substantially to our culture, and only those who are no longer alive.

But I urge my fellow Americans on Columbus Day to think of the 12 million Italians and persons of Italian origin who are living today in the United States, who make us proud by their incalculable enrichment of the wonderful land that is our America.

PULASKI DAY

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, October 11 marks the 184th anniversary of the death of Count Casimir Pulaski—a renowned soldier in the forces of freedom and a symbol of the European support which helped make American independence possible. I am pleased to join with those citizens of Polish birth or ancestry in observing the anniversary of the death of one of freedom's foremost defenders. Pulaski distinguished himself by his valor, his military genius, and his tireless zeal in the pursuit of liberty for his people. Unable to achieve this end in his homeland, he crossed the Atlantic and made the supreme sacrifice in an effort to bring liberty to America.

Pulaski fought for freedom on the battlefields of both the Old World and the New. For, in 1768 he joined with his father in active rebellion to combat the domination of Poland. The young nobleman's military exploits were temporarily successful and he ultimately became the commander in chief of the Polish patriots. However, his forces were finally crushed and scattered, his estates confiscated, and he was forced into exile in 1772.

While in exile in France, Pulaski met Benjamin Franklin and offered his services to the cause of independence. In 1777 he joined Washington's army as a volunteer. After distinguished service at the battle of Brandywine he was promoted by Congress to the rank of brigadier general in the Continental Army. He shared the hardships and deprivations of Valley Forge and then received permission from Congress to organize an independent corps of cavalry. To that time, the cavalry had amounted to little or nothing in the revolutionary forces. Pulaski, who used the remnants of his personal fortune to help equip the men, is now considered to be the father of the U.S. cavalry. When he led the American and French cavalry at Savannah, Pulaski had already played heroic roles at the battles of Brandywine, Trenton, and Flemington. In the siege of Savannah, October 9, he gallantly charged the enemy lines at the head of his cavalry, was mortally wounded, and died 2 days later.

Thus, today we honor a man to whom freedom was a lifetime objective. Whether on the battlefields of Europe or America, Pulaski's cause was the same—the cause of freedom. Now, as we pay tribute to Pulaski's contributions to bringing liberty to this land, let us also express our fervent hope that the spirit which motivated him survives in his native country and may one day prevail.

WHERE DOES GOLDWATER STAND?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Where Does GOLDWATER Stand?" published in the U.S. News & World Report of September 2, 1963.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHERE DOES GOLDWATER STAND?

Question. Senator GOLDWATER, when do you expect to announce your intentions for 1964?

Answer. I can't give you an exact date, because, as I have said, I'm playing this thing by ear day by day. I would much prefer to run for the Senate, but I realize that I am being put in a position more and more in which I have to make a decision.

Things may change between now and the time of decision, which I would say would come sometime around the closing date for filing in the New Hampshire primary. That will be in January, I think. And, if the tide still runs the way it is running now, I'm going to have to say yes or no. I wouldn't want to say yes or no now, because I think it's much too early.

Question. If you miss the nomination for President, would you still have ample time to run for reelection to the Senate?

Answer. Yes. I have to file as a candidate for the Senate, I think, the week before the national convention. Our primaries in Arizona aren't until the second week in September. If I happen to decide to seek the nomination for President, and not get it, my name will be in for the Senate, which is my real love, and I would run. If I decided to seek the nomination for President, and got it, I would not run for the Senate.

Question. You would not?

Answer. Absolutely not.

Question. Is this your own decision, or are the laws of Arizona such that you couldn't run for both President and Senator?

Answer. It's my own decision. Our State attorney general gave a ruling which indicates to me that no State could deny a man running for two Federal offices—that is, he could run for the Presidency or the Vice Presidency and a Senate or House seat. His ruling is that the State law does not deal with this case. But I wouldn't run, I don't think it's right.

Question. Is it necessary, Senator, to have your permission to file your name in the New Hampshire primary?

Answer. As I understand it, no.

Question. If you do decide to run for the presidential nomination, would it be your plan to enter most of the primaries?

Answer. It would certainly have to be any candidate's plan to enter enough primaries to convince Republicans across the country that he could get votes, and to discourage his opposition from continuing in the race.

Question. How can a Senator find time, in addition to his Senate duties, to go out and run in primaries around the country?

Answer. He would have to do as President Kennedy did—just ignore his senatorial duties. I think he missed over 200 votes in the Senate that last year.

But I do have an advantage here that other so-called "hopefuls"—if that's the word—do not have.

For most of the years between 1954 and this year, with the exception of the 2 years before my last election to the Senate, I've been traveling this country as chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee. I have a map stuck up on the wall, and you can see from the number of pins the thousands of speeches I've made. I have traveled over a million miles, and I don't think anyone in this party knows more Republicans than I do.

This accumulation of Republican friends wasn't done with the idea of using it for anything except getting Republicans elected to the Senate and the House. It came as a byproduct of just doing my job as a Republican. And now, of course, if I decide to seek the nomination, this becomes my most valuable asset. It's an asset that almost any other candidate would have to develop. And you don't develop a million miles and a thousand speeches just overnight.

Question. In connection with your possible candidacy, do you think it would be good for the country if a second term were denied to Kennedy in 1964?

Answer. I think it's absolutely essential.

Question. Why?

Answer. I think we have to have a change in 1964—not because of the individual, but because of the steady and increasing reach for power over the daily lives of Americans by the President and the men around him.

Question. Senator, some people have identified you with the John Birch Society. Are you a member of that society?

Answer. No. I have never been a member of it. In fact, when it was organized, the head of the society, Mr. Robert J. Welch, was asked if he would support Nixon or GOLDWATER for the Presidency. This was back, I think, in 1958 or 1959. He said no, GOLDWATER was too far to the left and Nixon was a Socialist.

Question. Is Mr. Welch now a supporter of yours?

Answer. No; He's not. In fact, I have a letter here that was written to a friend of mine, and Mr. Welch says:

"No matter how high my regard for Senator GOLDWATER might be, I could neither support him nor oppose him in the forthcoming campaign, because whatever I did would be construed as an official position of the John Birch Society."

That same letter from Welch said this:

"The John Birch Society takes absolutely no position in political campaigns, and, therefore, neither can I. Since about half of our members are Republicans, half Democrats, and with a sprinkling of independents, you can readily see why this policy is necessary."

Question. Then, so far as you know, the John Birch Society, as a society, is not supporting you?

Answer. No, I've never heard of them supporting any candidate, frankly, and I know they're not supporting me for anything, including running for the Senate in Arizona.

Question. Many people have said that you should either accept the support of the John Birch people or repudiate that support. What is your comment on that Answer. Well, these people who have suggested that have never given me any good reason for doing it. If it's because the Birch Society takes an extreme position now and then, I can recall American Legion posts that have taken extreme positions. The Americans for Democratic Action, I believe, have some very extreme positions.

My answer is that the members of the Birch Society have a constitutional right to take the positions they choose, even though I might disagree with them. I don't agree, for example, that Earl Warren should be impeached. I might disagree with Earl Warren, but I don't go so far as to say impeach him. But anybody has a right to suggest impeachment of any public official in this country.

I don't agree with the idea of repealing the income tax, but they certainly have the right to suggest that. According to those who are trying to read something dangerous into this nebulous "far right" theory, all these people—not just the Birch Society, but all Americans who oppose, for example, the United Nations—and there are millions of them—should be denied this right to hold strong minority opinions.

So I can't bring myself to disavow a group that is exercising its constitutional rights, and I repeat my challenge to those who have asked me to do this: Point out what they're doing that is dangerous, name names and places that they occupy in the Republican Party, prove that these people in these places are tending to take over the Republican Party and destroy it. I know of no working members of the party above a few precinct-committee people in Arizona who are members of the Birch Society.

Question. Then you don't agree with those who say the John Birch Society is dangerous to the country?

Answer. A statement I saw in the paper puts the total membership of the Birch Society at around 12,000 to 15,000. Now, if 12,000 to 15,000 people—like the former Chief Justice of my Supreme Court in Arizona, a Democrat, or the president of our second-biggest bank, a Democrat—are dangerous to the United States, I shudder to think of the danger of the Americans for Democratic Action.

Question. Would you call yourself a disciple of the "radical right?"

Answer. I don't think I'm a radical in any position. I think there are some radicals in this country. We've always had them. Washington, Jefferson, and others have been plagued with these people. Lincoln was plagued with them.

But it's very difficult to put your finger on them. Just who are they? Some of these groups are very selfish in nature, very narrow in nature. Others are broad. But I still want somebody to spell out "far right."

Question. How would you define the "far right?"

Answer. I might try it. In my opinion, if you had a "radical right," it would be a fascist position—sort of like George Lincoln Rockwell and his Nazis—in no way associated with the Republican Party or the Democratic Party. On the "radical left" you'd have the Communist Party, in no way associated with the Democratic Party or the Republican Party.

So you get the spectrum down then to what, on the left, are called "liberals," but who are not "liberals" in the true or existing sense of the word; and on the Republican side, "conservatives."

Now, I imagine there can be extremes in those positions. The farthest to the left, not being a Communist, would be an "extreme liberal." The farthest to the right, not being a Nazi, would be an "extreme rightist."

I think the "conservative" movement, which is neither of these, contains more people than any other movement in the country.

Question. Do you think there are more "conservatives" in this country than "liberals"?

Answer. I think so.

Question. Over the years, Senator, have you consistently supported the Republican nominee for President?

Answer. That's right.

Question. Would you expect the so-called "liberal" wing of the Republican Party to support a "conservative" nominee of the Republican Party in 1964?

Answer. If they're worthy of the name Republican, I would expect them to support the candidate. I couldn't see them voting for Kennedy without becoming Democrats.

Question. Would you support the Republican nominee in 1964, even though he turned out to be a "liberal" Republican?

Answer. I would support the Republican nominee in 1964 because I don't care who the Republican nominee is, he's going to be better for the United States than any New Frontiersman.

Question. Have you actively supported "liberal" Republicans in State elections?

Answer. Yes. I have supported men like Senators JAVITS, CASE, KUCHEL, and COOPER. I've raised considerable sums of money for them. I went into New York City to help raise money for Governor Rockefeller.

So, as I say, I believe in the two-party system. I believe we ought to have our little arguments within the system, but, when the time comes, we ought to argue with the opposition.

WHERE REPUBLICANS DIFFER

Question. Are you and Governor Rockefeller at odds on all issues?

Answer. Well, the Governor and I have met together here in Washington at least four times in the last 12 months. We've seen each other in New York, I think, at least twice. And I would say that our areas of disagreement are relatively small. Rockefeller and I are much closer together than Hubert Humphrey and Harry Byrd—we're both Republicans and they're both Democrats.

I think the field of public welfare, the welfare state, is where you find the Republican Party at odds. When you get into fiscal responsibility, taxation, foreign policy, the rest of the domestic policy, I don't think there's a great deal of difference.

Question. In that case, why is Governor Rockefeller so critical of you?

Answer. I don't know, frankly. I'm at a loss on that. Up until the time I read his recent statement, if you had asked me that question, I'd have said, "We're friends. I trust him, I like him, and so on."

It doesn't mean that I don't still like him, but I had no advance warning of his change in attitude until he issued that statement. I had assumed the situation was one of Rockefeller and Goldwater working for unity in the Republican Party.

THE SOUTH HAS BEEN GOING MORE AND MORE REPUBLICAN

Question. Has there been any contact since that statement?

Answer. No. I haven't seen hide nor hair of him since, and I don't expect to.

Question. Senator, have you advocated that the Republicans simply cross off the big industrial States of the East in 1964?

Answer. No. I don't know where that ever started. I'm a very practical politician. I don't cross anybody off anyplace, anytime. I have said that I think the large cities in the East are going to be very tough for Republicans for the very simple reason that the Democrats control the city machinery.

Now, you give me a mayor and city council of New York as Republicans and I'm going to take New York City for a presidential candidate. It's as simple as that. He probably has 500,000 votes before the polls open in the morning—not crooked, they're just machine votes.

I think we have to be practical and recognize that the large eastern cities are not likely to go for Republicans at the presidential level. But we can sure as heck work in them, and we can work for better organization.

And I've never said forget the Negro vote or the Italian vote or any minority vote. Go after them. I say we should do our strong hunting where the ducks are flying.

Question. Do you think a Republican nominee in 1964 will have a good chance of carrying New York State?

Answer. My honest opinion is "no," because New York City is controlled by a Democratic machine.

Now, by the same token—and that's what makes this answer a little hard—the State is controlled by a Republican administration. If northern New York would vote with the same intensity as downstate New York, then my answer would be the other way. But, in looking at it in a very practical manner, and looking at history, I would expect that New York City would again do a better job of getting the vote out than would the more conservative elements up north.

SOUTH'S DRAMATIC TREND

Question. Can a Republican nominee win the South?

Answer. The South, since 1948, has been going more and more Republican. This has nothing to do with the race issue, because it was going on before the Supreme Court decision. Its tempo hasn't increased appreciably, percentagewise, since the Supreme Court decision, but we trebled our vote for congressional candidates from 1958 to 1962, and my guess is that we'll at least double it or even treble it again in 1964. You could have a pretty dramatic change in the South in Republican House Members.

I think 10 or 12 more Republican seats out of the South could be expected in 1964. But if we get the switch we've been having, it's going to be better than that. The Republican strength in the South in presidential elections has been in the big cities—42 out of the 53 went for Nixon.

You find the violent, die-hard segregationist living out in the rural areas, where you find the violent, die-hard Democratic Party. But, in the cities, it's becoming more and more Republican-oriented.

Question. Where else can you see a combination of States that could elect a Republican as President?

Answer. I think the Middle West—and when I say "Middle West," I go all the way from the Pennsylvania line on out to the Rocky Mountains—the Rocky Mountain States, the Southwest. I think the Republicans' chief problem will be in the larger boss-ruled cities—not because of the candidate, not because of the party, but because the Republicans don't control the machinery.

Question. Is the problem in the cities related also to the large labor vote and the large Negro vote?

Answer. The Negro vote, I think, will go about as it has gone in the past—some 80 percent in the large cities for the Democrat. We can't tell what the Negro vote is out in the West. We treat it as a vote, not as a separate entity.

The union man, I've always believed, votes as he feels he should. There are some exceptions. I would say where the UAW (United Auto Workers) is strong in Detroit, they pretty much vote the union line. But some studies show about 25 percent of even Walter Reuther's union to be Republican. In my State, in the most heavily organized county in the State, where the largest mines in the world are and 85 percent of the working force belongs to the union, I carried that county last time, which was a great switch from the time before.

The studies that I have seen show that about 42 percent of the union members consider themselves Republican. This was back in the 1950's. There are no up-to-date studies that I know of.

Eisenhower got the majority of the union vote in both of his elections. So I don't write that vote off. But I don't think we have made the approach to them. I think we should visit more freely with the union people, convince them that our interests are their interests, that under the Republican Party they are going to earn more and earn it longer and more of it than they've been able to do under the Democrats. After all, if there are more jobs created, there will be more people employed.

TROUBLES IN CALIFORNIA

Question. What about California? How do you assess that, Senator?

Answer. Right now, Republicanwise—I hate to use the word—it's a mess. The party is disorganized. There are no immediate signs of its coming back together, although there are a lot of darn good people working on it. I have a feeling that they will achieve unity out there well in advance of the time it is needed.

It will be a tough State for either the Democrats or Republicans to say, "It's in the bag."

Question. Could you win without both California and New York?

Answer. Theoretically, yes, you can—but it's assuming a lot of strength in a lot of areas. You'd have to have Texas, you'd have to have Illinois, you'd have to take Ohio, Indiana, seven of the Southern States, the Mountain States——

Question. And some of New England?

Answer. I always look on New England as a strong Republican place, and I think we'll see it stronger this time.

Question. How about Massachusetts?

Answer. Well, Massachusetts will naturally go to Kennedy—and Connecticut, Rhode Island. But I think in New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont, we will win.

Question. You spoke of the Democrats' having gained successes in the North by controlling the big-city machines. Has that also been true of the South?

Answer. No, because it wasn't necessary. The Democrats have never bothered much about the South. The South has been treated like a little stepchild.

Name me a man of the stature of RICHARD RUSSELL, Senator from Georgia, for example, who occupies a place high in Democratic Party councils. I don't think he even knows where the Democratic national headquarters are located. And the South is beginning to resent this. This philosophy may come back to haunt the Democrats, because, if they can't take the South and they can't take the Middle West and the Rocky Mountain West, then we may be approaching a day when we can say, "We might win without New York and California."

California is a little different horse. Her big cities are not boss-controlled cities, as the eastern cities are. City politics out there are just big-city politics without the gangster-boss element that we find in virtually every large eastern city. When I say "large," I mean a million and above.

Question. Senator, what do you think will be the dominant issues, to be decided in 1964?

Answer. Oh, it's kind of hard to say now. It will be a year from now before the campaign will be getting underway. I think foreign policy will certainly be one issue—Cuba,

Laos, Vietnam as it now stands, although Vietnam could change—and the general growth of communism and our seemingly inability to stop it; certainly the outflow of gold; the slowness of our economy—although this could change—and fiscal irresponsibility.

I think this fiscal thing has a great potential, because more and more people are understanding what you mean by taxes and the deprivation of private property.

Question. Senator, speaking of national issues, what is your own record on integration of the races?

Answer. My record, of course, was made in my own State. I don't think you can make other than a legislative record in Washington, and I'll stand on my legislative record here.

In Arizona, my retail company has always hired Negroes. It's only been recently that any Negroes have been interested in saleswomen's jobs, although we have two Negro beauty operators, and have had them for some time. Out of about 500 employees, I think we have about 25 Negroes, and some of them in very responsible positions.

When I became adjutant general for the Air National Guard, I integrated that organization, and it ultimately resulted in the whole Guard movement being integrated.

The first official act that I was able to get accomplished as a member of the city council in Phoenix was the desegregation of the restaurant at the local airport. Earlier, when I got back from World War II, I found that we had acquired segregated high schools, which we didn't have when I went to high school there. I made, for that time and that town, a sizable contribution to the court fight to end segregation.

I'll stand on my record, what I've done in this field in my own State and elsewhere.

Question. What do you say in the South about civil rights?

Answer. When people in the South ask me my stand, I say I'm opposed completely to discrimination. I think that this is the problem—not segregation. But I hesitate as an Arizonian to go into some other State and try to tell them to do things. I discuss it with them, but using only moral persuasion.

Question. Do you mean that segregation laws or integration laws ought to be a State and local matter?

Answer. As far as everything goes, except the Supreme Court decision on schools.

The last civil rights bill—the one in 1957, which caused the long filibuster—was too broad. It would have allowed the Attorney General to use this pretense to go into any area of our lives in our States. I think today, if a tight and limited law were written aimed at correcting specific situations in school districts or schools, even the South might buy this. But nobody is going to stand by for a bill that is a blunderbuss and allows the Attorney General to ride off in all directions, abusing the daily lives of people.

Question. What about the civil rights bill now before Congress?

Answer. I would oppose completely the povision on public accommodations—hotels, motels, restaurants, etc.—and accept no compromise on it. It's entirely unconstitutional. I think if we enact that we can kiss goodbye to our concept of limited Government, our concept of constitutional guarantee of rights, and I'll have no part of it.

Question. Do you mean that it gives the Federal Government too much power over the daily lives of people?

Answer. It does. I feel very strongly that, when a man invests his property in a business, he has the legal right to conduct that business any way he wants to, just so it doesn't do damage to other businesses. I think he has a moral obligation, in his advertising, to say that he will not cater to this group or that group or any group he chooses. I think this is an inherent right of property, and, if we destroy this concept of control of property, then we're giving acquiescence to the idea that property can be taken from us without the due processes of the law.

DANGER OF POLICE STATE

Question. Could that provision be enforced without a vast Federal police force?

Answer. I don't see how it could, and this in another reason that I think this administration has to go. I think we're getting closer and closer and closer to situations that require a police state. And this is the reason I don't think some of these people really understand what they're asking for when they support the public-accommodations proposal.

Question. How do you feel about the proposed power to withhold Federal assistance in instances where discrimination is practiced?

Answer. The Republican Party was going to take a position that such withholding should be mandatory. However, we were warned by Senator HRUSKA of Nebraska to take another look at it, because this is much broader than anybody has realized. It gets into small business loans, for example.

Let's say that a small store in California has a small business loan, and the charge is made that segregation exists. Then every Federal project in that State, conceivably—but certainly in that political subdivision—would have to be stopped.

So the Republicans are taking another look at this. We don't want it to be discretionary, because this gives the President too much power.

I FAVOR WITHDRAWING RECOGNITION FROM RUSSIA

Question. As you see it, Senator, where does this trend toward concentration of power lead?

Answer. The trend, for at least 30 years, has been to a completely centralized Government.

Today we're seeing small business in trouble because of the oppressive size of Government, which requires taxation to the point where small businessmen can't retain profits.

The big man can get along today, but how long is it going to be before even big business can't withstand the combined pressures of big labor and big Government? Then how long will it be before big labor can't withstand the total power of big Government? Then you have one thing left—you have Government, period—Government running business, the labor unions, the daily lives of the people. These are my fears.

Question. Could this come about without the consent of the people, as expressed in the congressional elections?

Answer. Yes, it has been coming about mainly because too many of the people in this country have not voted.

Question. In other words, people are not alert to the danger—

Answer. They don't understand it. I think they're beginning to understand it.

I think businessmen are beginning to see that the present trend can only lead to Government takeover. I think some of the labor leaders are beginning to be fearful of this, because of the way Kennedy has had to handle the railroad strike. He was suggesting compulsory arbitration, which means the end of striking, and that, in my opinion, is the only weapon the workingman has. It does away with collective bargaining, and this is just another natural step toward wholesale Government control of both business and labor.

Not that the Kennedys necessarily are going this route with a purpose, but I think they just inherited this 30-year philosophy that the Federal Government has to have more power, that it has to be able to control business, labor and the lives of individual people in order to govern the United States properly.

GETTING A CLEAR-CUT VOTE

Question. Do we need a clear test at the polls in a national election—to find out what the majority of the people think?

Answer. I'm beginning to think that it would not be a bad idea. That doesn't necessarily mean that I am the only conservative. As I say, Republicans are conservative. Some Republicans would give the people more of a choice than others. But, regardless of who the Republican might be, there would be a basic difference between that person and Kennedy, because they would represent fundamentally different principles of government.

Question. You support right to work laws, do you not?

Answer. As a State matter, yes; I would not propose a national right to work law, although I have an amendment in now to the Taft-Hartley Act that would give the States the right to determine whether they would have the union shop or not. In other words, in the absence of State legislation calling for the union shop there would be an open shop. But this is not the same as national "right to work"; nor would I support a national right to work amendment.

Question. Would you favor withdrawing recognition from Soviet Russia and other Communist States?

Answer. I have always favored withdrawing recognition from Russia. I never favored recognition from the start. I remember when it was first done. I think we lent dignity to a movement that doesn't deserve the respect that goes with formal recognition. I don't like to lend dignity and respect to an outfit that says they're out to bury us.

Question. Do you think we can coexist with a Castro-type Cuba?

Answer. This word "coexistence" is a misunderstood one. Can we coexist with the Cubans, the Russians, the East Germans? We have to, as people. But do we have to coexist with the philosophy of communism? No. I don't see how we can do it without the almost-certain knowledge that sooner or later one of us won't be around to coexist either with or together. The philosophy is the point that I disagree on.

Now, coexistence has ben recognized by the leaders of the Communist movement as the greatest weapon they have. This goes clear back to Engels and Marx, Lenin, Stalin—and I have many quotes on that that I've dug up, pointing out the desire of the Communists to establish coexistence and then find that our leaders mistake what coexistence is.

I know Senator FULBRIGHT has a fit every time I speak against coexistence. He misunderstands it. He thinks that I want to have war—to annihilate people. You can't annihilate ideas. You replace bad ideas with better ideas, and that's what we ought to be getting along with.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT CUBA

Question. What course would you advocate on Cuba?

Answer. The course that I've advocated constantly, I've never changed on, would be a blockade—as Kennedy imposed—the training of Cuban exiles, the equipping of Cuban exiles. All of this should be done in conjunction with the Organization of American States.

I would advocate the establishment of a single Cuban government-in-exile. This would be the first "must."

Then we should support from the air, with supplies and equipment, any movement they might undertake to overthrow the Castro regime.

Question. Could we do that without getting the United States involved in a war?

Answer. I'm absolutely convinced we can, and I think most of the American states are convinced that we can, too.

Question. As time goes on, is it getting more and more difficult to overthrow the Castro regime?

Answer. Yes, yes. At the Bay of Pigs, that very limited number of men, if we had carried through with supplying them, would probably have succeeded and would have made the difference now in Cuba. But now Castro has the second-best army in this hemisphere.

Question. What is your view on foreign aid?

Answer. If we have to live with foreign aid—and I don't think we do have to live with foreign economic aid—I think it should be used as a "rifle," aimed at specific areas where we can gain an advantage over the Russians. And I don't think we're gaining it by giving foreign aid to the 90-odd countries that we give it to. We might find a project in some country that Russia would be willing to try to outbid us on. Let her do it. She can't afford an economic race with us at the present time, and I think it will be a good number of years away until she can.

I would rather see this foreign-economic-aid money channeled into technical assistance and the Peace Corps concept, because I think this is going to prove desirable. I've always had faith in it. I'd like to see us encourage more private investment around the world, although we have a whale of a lot of it at the present time.

Question. Would you channel more of this money into loans and less into grants?

Answer. I certainly would. And I would expect the country receiving a loan to demonstrate that it could provide collateral or some sensible basis for a loan. And then again, I'd look pretty carefully at whom I was lending it to.

Question. What kind of countries should be getting aid?

Answer. The countries that needed it right after the war no longer need it. I think that a country like Greece could certainly be interested in loans, because they need development. Turkey, if she needs it. Countries that are with us or can be brought with us. Pakistan, by all means. I would put a question mark around India, because you never know where she is.

In the Latin countries, I think our whole program there needs reorienting. The idea is good, but we're not getting the job done, because we're assuming that the Latins are going to make changes in their social patterns that they're not ready to make or willing to make.

Question. You have spoken of the danger of $100 billion budgets. How much do you think this Government ought to be spending?

Answer. Well, let's not start with the 100 billions. My objection is not to any one figure. It's just to excessive spending, where we're spending more than we're taking in. I don't think any country can do that, any more than a business can.

They can do it during wartime. But if you just recall what happened in 1929 to Austria, from precisely the same things we're doing in this country today, then you have a better understanding of my fear of deficit spending. Now, Austria was engaged in housing projects, rural and urban redevelopment, and the expenditure of funds over and above what they were taking in, and, in spite of all warnings, they continued to do it, and when the collapse came, it started a world depression.

There's nothing to prevent the United States from starting a world depression if our credit and our currency and our economic were to collapse.

Our gold-outflow situation, some will argue, is offset by the some $70 to $75 billion that's owed us by foreign countries. What assurance have we that they'll pay off when we get in trouble?

So my objection to budgets is not $100 billions; it would be $90 or $80 or $70 or $200, if the amount is more than we take in.

I think we can effect reductions in the nature of $7 billions, maybe $10, but I won't go as far as some people who say $15. I think the agricultural program presents the best opportunity. And I think health, education, and welfare is another area, where we had 7 million people on relief in 1936 and we have 7 million people on relief in 1963, and it's costing us many times as much to handle these people.

Question. Would you, over a period of years, phase out various welfare programs?

Answer. Oh, I don't think you can do that. Take social security, for example. I think it could be made flexible and voluntary—flexible by allowing a man to choose a higher salary on which to pay, say, up to $10,000, and voluntary in that, if a man didn't want to go under it, he wouldn't have to. He might decide that he could provide a better retirement for himself.

I think that, around 1970, employees and employers are going to start looking at the 10-percent tax, as it will be then, and say, "I can get a much better policy through private sources than I'm getting out of the Government." Then I'd expect to hear some push for a change in social security.

Question. To make it voluntary?

Answer. Or to rewrite it completely and bring it up to date, make it conform with modern times, and make it more actuarially sound than it is today.

Question. What about the general field of welfare?

Answer. Such programs have become established in people's minds. I would merely stop the introduction of new programs, because I think we're in every conceivable field that we can get into. And then I would start trying to convince the Governors of the States that, if they took these things back, they could do them with less money.

Then the Federal Government would be able to reduce spending by similar amounts and not be required to tax so high.

HOW TO CUT TAXES

Question. As matters stand now, do you oppose the tax cut of 1963?

Answer. I haven't seen it in its entirety. I fundamentally oppose any tax cut without a cut in expenditures.

Question. And you don't see any prospect of a cut in expenditures?

Answer. No, and just a quick look at the proposed tax cuts: While they have made a gesture toward the area that's needed, where it's needed, I don't think it's enough.

Question. What area do you mean?

Answer. This is the area of encouraging capital investments. When you think that our rate of capital investment in the last quarter of last year, for the first time since 1957, equaled 1957, and that this year its only a little bit above the 1957 figure, you begin to see, in my opinion, what's wrong with the economy, why it's sluggish. We are not replacing antiquated factories, antiquated stores, warehouses, and so forth, and we're trying to get along with machinery that is far outpaced by European factories.

And the plain fact of the matter is today: Where can you find a good investment? I mean, you're actually as well off, in most cases, putting money in Federal or municipal bonds as you are going into corporate stocks.

I remember in my own business when a 10-percent profit was not impossible. I don't argue that that was a proper rate. But a 2½-percent profit today is very high. And the probability of withstanding any prolonged dip in sales in my business just doesn't exist today. In the 1929 depression, I went 5 years with the dropoff in sales and managed to live. I couldn't do it today.

I think it's well and good to talk about cutting the lower bracket income taxes, but when you give a man $12 to $20 more a month, I can't see him going crazy in spending. And you give the high income man $100 more a month—that isn't going to mean much to him. But if you give a corporation a real break, so that they can turn around and invest, say, 10 percent more next year than they invested this year, I can see the economy running into a manpower shortage in a relatively short time.

Question. Would you say that the proposed 48-percent rate for corporations is still too high?

Answer. I think it is.

Question. And would you say that a 70-percent rate—that's the proposed top rate—for individuals is too high?

Answer. That's confiscatory.

Question. You've been quoted as saying that a graduated tax is a confiscatory tax. Is that your view?

Answer. I don't think I'd put it that way. But I think it has been destructive of initiative—and when you destroy American initiative, you destroy the possibility of more earnings.

I found that in my own business, even before I got out of it some 10 or 12 years ago. You'd ask a young executive if he'd like to take a higher job; he would say, "Well, let me take a look at it." And he'd come back and say, "No, Mary and I have decided that I had better stay where I am because if I take that higher job, Im going to have to work harder and I'm not really going to make enough more to make it worth while—so no, thank you."

NEEDED: A NEW TAX CODE

Question. Then you don't believe in any graduation at all in the income tax?

Answer. I won't go that far, but I'm opposed to the theory. I'd like to see some other suggestions made in the whole field.

In fact, if I had anything to say about this tax picture, what I would do would be to assemble some knowledgeable legislators, some knowledgeable academic people, some knowledgeable business people, some knowledgeable labor people, and say, "Get off in the corner and write us a new tax code that's going to produce sufficient revenue in a fair way for our Government."

Then, when this has been accomplished, you proceed to sell it to the Congress, and when you're convinced you have it sold, throw the old tax code out of the window and enact a new one—start all over again.

This thing we're working on is a mess.

Question. Are you concerned about the complications in the present tax law and the new complications that are being written in by the new tax bill?

Answer. You cannot write new additions to this tax code without giving jobs to about 2,000 new tax attorneys a year. I have no objection to tax attorneys, but you can't write something to correct an evil here without producing an evil over here. And this to me, frankly, is one of the major sources of immorality in this country—the fact that the father will go home and say, "Well, I beat Uncle Sam out of 200 bucks today," and the kid says, "Gee, how did you do that, Dad?" "Well, real smart—here's how I did it." Perfectly legal, but is it moral? So the kid say, "Well, the old man stole 200 bucks from Uncle Sam. I'll steal a dollar from somebody."

I did a little piece on this once—it never got into print—on what the Volstead Act and the income tax amendment have done to the morals of our people.

Question. Do you agree that a tax cut is essential to the economy?

Answer. In 1954 we cut taxes by 7.4 billion, but the economy was running at a pretty vigorous rate and the money was reinvested.

I think it was only 2 years before we were collecting twice as much as we cut. Now, if the economy were moving at a faster clip today and there wasn't this antibusiness attitude, anti-stockmarket attitude, anti-investor attitude on the part of the administration, I think I'd be wholeheartedly for a tax cut.

Question. At the risk of another, larger deficit?

Answer. Even at the risk of a larger deficit, because I think the expenditures and increased sources of taxation would offset the deficit. But I don't think that will happen now. I hope I'm wrong, because a tax cut—even this one—would be good if it didn't mean offsetting this by more inflation—increased costs all along the line.

CONCERN OVER A TEST BAN

Question. Will you tell us, Senator, whether you are for or against the ratification of the nuclear test ban treaty?

Answer. I have some very, very serious reservations about it. I am not convinced yet that the political advantages outweigh the military disadvantages, and I would say that it's in this general area that the administration has been most lax in selling its bill.

They're very general. They don't spell out what they mean by political advantages, where the military have spelled out very precisely the military disadvantages. And I have to agree with Dr. Edward Teller, with Gen. Curtis LeMay, with General Power, General Schriever. I think the Russians are ahead of us—not just in weapon size, because I don't think that's too important—but in nuclear know-how, which I think is very important.

I'm worried about whether our missiles will get there, whether or not the Russians have an antiballistic missile system that will keep them from getting there.

The fact is that we don't know enough about nuclear environment or electromagnetic pulse or fireball blackout. We know there are problems, and I know that some of them can be solved underground and in laboratories, but we can never be sure unless we continue atmospheric testing.

I have to hear some pretty sound political arguments given to me in the next 2 or 3 weeks before I can decide that politics offsets the military disadvantage, and, if I were the administration, I would be coming up to the Senate with more and more argument on the political end.

All they talk about is a "next step." What is it? Nonaggression? I don't think they have a chance of getting a nonaggression pact through this Senate, or even approved by the military.

So where are the political advantages? Frankly, I can't see them today.

FBI INVESTIGATION OF BOMBINGS OF NEGRO HOMES AND CHURCHES IN ALABAMA

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter dated October 8, 1963, addressed to me, from Harvey H. Hewitt, colonel, U.S. Air Force, retired, of Falls Church, Va., regarding the FBI investigation of bombings of Negro homes and churches in Alabama.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 8, 1963.

Hon. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR ROBERTSON: On September 13, 1963, there was broadcast over Washington television station WTOP a portion of a press conference held by Gov. George Wallace regarding FBI investigation of bombings of Negro homes and churches in Alabama.

From Governor Wallace's statements I got the impression that he believed certain evidence concerning the bombings which the FBI had uncovered was being withheld from the public because of some embarrassment such evidence might bring to the Department of Justice.

I wrote to you on September 14, saying I felt Governor Wallace's charges were serious ones that bring into question the integrity of our system of justice on the Federal level. I asked that the charges be looked into to determine their truth or falsity. I expressed no opinion of my own either one way or the other.

You referred my letter to Mr. J. Edgar Hoover whose reply was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for September 25, 1963—pages 17046 and 17047. Unfortunately for me, your prefacing remarks to Mr. Hoover's letter as published in the RECORD implied that I, personally, had claimed that on the basis of the number of bombings in Alabama, the FBI had been either inefficient, negligent, or both. My letter had contained no such claim or suggestion.

I have the highest personal confidence in Mr. J. Edgar Hoover and in the important work being done by the FBI. I would never without just cause suggest inefficiency or negligence. I respectfully request that this letter be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so as to correct any erroneous impression that might have been created as to my position in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

HARVEY H. HEWITT.

ROYALTIES FROM MINERAL PRODUCTION ON FEDERAL LANDS IN WYOMING

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, one of the potentials for economic growth in the State of Wyoming is our vast storehouse of mineral deposits. Even now these minerals are being utilized to provide a thriving industrial base in many parts of the State.

Since about 50 percent of Wyoming is in Federal ownership and an even greater share of the mineral rights belong to the Federal Government a sizable sum is contributed to the Treasury each year for the right to mine these minerals.

Mr. President, I am the sponsor of a bill to provide that 90 percent of these royalties are returned to the State of origin. To me this would provide for a more equitable distribution of this money and would be a positive step in providing State governments with additional revenue to meet their steadily rising expenses.

The benefits of this action are outlined in an editorial published recently by the Kemmerer Gazette. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BIG PAYDAY

For many years, Wyoming's Senators and Congressmen in Washington have beat the drums loudly in an effort to get for their State 90 percent of the royalties from mineral production on Federal lands within Wyoming.

You may have wondered what all the shouting is about.

The thing that generates all the excitement over 90 percent return is potentially the biggest payday in Wyoming's history. The situation is this:

More than half of the lands within Wyoming's borders are owned by the Federal Government. The Federal Government collects a royalty on all natural resources produced on these public lands.

The Federal Government retains 10 percent of all these royalties to administer the collection of the royalties. Federal statute earmarks an additional 52½ percent of all the royalties to the reclamation fund which helps finance new reclamation projects in the West.

The remaining 37½ percent is given to Wyoming State government to spend in any way that it sees fit. The way we choose to spend our 37½ percent of the royalty is to give half of it to the Wyoming Highway Department for construction of new highways and half of it to subsidize education in the State. The portion that goes to education is shared equally between the State school foundation fund and the University of Wyoming.

How much money does this 37½ percent amount to?

The amount varies each year as the mineral production on public lands varies. A conservative average of Wyoming's annual receipts from the mineral royalty is about $12 million.

The question has long been argued of why should Wyoming and other Western States get only 37½ percent. Why shouldn't they collect the full 90 percent?

The remaining 52½ percent that goes into the reclamation fund represents only a very miniscule part of the total amount of money that is spent on reclamation projects. If this money were taken away from reclamation, the loss would hardly be noticed. Moreover, some other States (Texas is one) receive reclamation projects without contributing a dime to the reclamation fund.

Another argument is that when Alaska was admitted to the Union, its State constitution specifically required that 90 percent of the public land mineral royalty be returned to the State. If Alaska gets a 90-percent return, why shouldn't Wyoming?

If Wyoming did get a 90-percent return, that average paycheck of about $12 million each year would all of a sudden skyrocket to about $30 million each year.

To give an idea of just how great an impact this $30 million would make in Wyoming, we point out that Wyoming's general fund is expected to collect and pay out in the neighborhood of $36 million in the current 2-year period.

The benefits derived by Wyoming citizens from this added revenue would be tremendous. The added school foundation payments would usher in a new era of highest quality education in the local school districts. The construction debt at the University of Wyoming would be paid off very quickly and the university, too, would enjoy a lucrative financial future.

And let us not forget that the mineral royalty is derived from depletable resources. Part of the royalty receipts, therefore, ought to be used to aid in the establishment of nondepletable industry (this was the theory of the reclamation fund).

Anyway you look at it, a 90-percent royalty return would be the "Original big payday" in Wyoming. And it would cause a virtual fiscal revolution in our State government.

Why Kennedy Is Worried About Goldwater

By JAMES RESTON

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10—After indicating that Senator Goldwater may be his opponent in next year's election, President Kennedy said this week that he expected "a hard, close fight."

This, of course, is standard procedure. Presidents are like football coaches: they are always cautious early in the season. But in Kennedy's case the caution is genuine, and for several interesting reasons.

First, he studies the election returns and is impressed by a single fact. This is that Franklin Roosevelt is the only Democratic President in over a hundred years who managed to get a majority of the popular vote.

F.D.R. got 57.41 per cent in 1932; 60.80 in 1936; 54.69 in 1940, and 53.39 in 1944, but the other five Democratic Presidents since 1856 got less than a majority.

Woodrow Wilson, for example, won in 1912 with 41.85 per cent of the vote and squeaked in again in 1916 with 49.26 per cent of the vote, while 13 of the 16 Republican Presidents since 1856 have been majority Presidents.

Civil Rights Timetable

These figures do not impress most political observers, who are more interested in the electoral vote, but President Kennedy himself won by only 118,550 votes in 1960, got less than a majority of the popular vote, and shakes every time he looks at his narrow margin of victory in Illinois, New Jersey, Missouri, Minnesota and several other states of the Union.

In addition to this preoccupation with the Democratic cliff-hangers of the past, the Kennedy camp is worried about taxes and civil rights, particularly the latter.

As they see it now, their main hope of saving even part of the normally Democratic South next year is to get the civil rights debate over this year and pray for a comparatively quiet truce in the racial war in 1964.

A big tax cut is important to their election plans and they have counted on it to spur the economy and reduce unemployment next year, but they see the racial turmoil as such a threat to re-election that if they had to choose between passing the tax bill or the civil rights bill this year they would probably choose civil rights.

Threat to Re-election

This is a factor in their strategy for the North as well as the South. For while Kennedy's political aides are counting on a larger percentage of the Negro vote than ever before, they believe continued racial disorder next year will cost them votes in the North as well as major losses in the South.

These are the major elements of concern to the President now, rather than the personal problem of campaigning against Goldwater. The Kennedy strategists see some advantages in running against the Arizona Senator rather than against a more liberal opponent.

These are the major elements of concern to the President now, rather than the personal problem of campaigning against Goldwater. The Kennedy strategists see some advantages in running against the Arizona Senator rather than against a more liberal opponent.

Their reasoning on this is as follows. At the end of four years in office, a President is usually on the defensive. He has been in just long enough to have made mistakes and enemies. The contrast between his promises and his performance is usually embarrassing in the second campaign.

Elements of Concern

Thus, former Vice President Nixon, for example, could argue that he was just barely defeated in 1960 by a series of charges on the so-called missile gap that proved to be false, and by a series of promises that were never redeemed. And there is clearly some sentiment in the Republican party for letting Nixon have another chance to mount precisely such an attack.

But Goldwater has a different problem. He can attack Kennedy from the right but the Kennedys feel that it is easier to take the offensive against Goldwater's economic, social and foreign policies than it would be to attack the more moderate policies of Nixon, Scranton, Romney or some last-minute Republican progressive like Milton Eisenhower.

The Usual Nightmares

Nevertheless, the President is said to be concerned about Goldwater's capacity to put together a winning coalition of the South, the Middle West, the mountain states and one or two large economically depressed states such as Pennsylvania.

The early Democratic soundings indicate not only a pro-Goldwater revolt in the South, but an anti-high taxation, anti-integrated housing, and anti-job equality movement in the North, even among pro-Democratic labor union members.

Peace and Prosperity, of course, will be the Democratic cry, as usual, but this is the time when the element of accident is high and an incumbent President worries about imagined disasters.

What if something went wrong in Cuba again or Vietnam? How could the thin margin of victory in 1960 stand the loss of the South? Outwardly, the President was lighthearted about the prospect of meeting Goldwater, but privately his associates are not so sure.

Ross, Paul Assure RFK Of Cooperation, Alleged Recorded Conversation Shows

EDITOR'S NOTE: Charges of "deal" and denials equally fiery from both camps have filled the air as newly blossoming Republicans and old line Democrats square off for Mississippi's first serious general election campaign. Various national publications and wire services have carried stories purporting to be excerpts from recorded telephphone conversations between Governor Ross Barnett, Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson and U. S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy at the time of the Ole Miss integration crisis last fall. The Commonwealth has secured the full manuscript from which these excerpts apparently were taken. It is one of the manuscripts which has been passed hand to hand in Jackson for some months. It purports to be recordings of the conversations on only one day, September 27, 1962, but each of the speakers alludes to previous conversations. Diligent inquiry turned up no concrete evidence as to where the manuscript originated. Shortly after the Ole Miss intergration riots, in which two men were killed and dozens injured, nationally syndicated columnists writing the conservative Allen-Scott report, claimed that Barnett had taped conversations between himself and Kennedy so that he would be able to prove in Federal Court later that he had "cooperated" with the Justice Department in the Meredith situation and hence purge himself of contempt of court charges. Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson, democratic nominee for governor, whose part in the conversations the manuscript purports to record, charged during the democratic primary last summer that if tapes of conversations between him and Kennedy existed, they would have been released by Washington. A new possibility came to light over the weekend when the Clarion Ledger reported that Mississippi's AFL-CIO organization was claiming to have transcripts of the entire conversations. The Commonwealth, frankly, cannot say where the manuscript reproduced below originated. However, since much of it has been published, and more of it left out of public spring, creating questions, it is carried in full for whatever light it might shed on the current controversy.

CONVERSATION BETWEEN RFK AND GOV. BARNETT THURS. SEPT. 27. 1962 at 2:50

how are you?

BARNETT: Hello General

RFK: Fine, Gov. How are you?

BARNETT: I need a little sleep.

RFK: I just talked to Mr. Watkins and we were going to make this effort at 5 o'clock this afternoon your time.

BARNETT: They will be here about 5 o'clock our time?

RFK: Is that satisfactory?

BARNETT: Yes, sir. That's all right.

RFK: I will send the Marshals that I have available up there in Memphis and I expect there will be about 25 or 30 of them and they will come with Mr. Meredith and they will arrive wherever the gate is and I will have the head Marshal pull a gun and I will have the rest of them have their hands on their guns and their holsters. And then as I understand it he will go through and get in and you will make sure that law and order is preserved and that no harm will be done to Mr. McShane and Mr. Meredith.

BARNETT: Oh, yes.

RFK: And then I think you will see that's accomplished?

BARNETT: Yes - (inaudible) -Hold just a minute, will you? Hello, General, I was under the impression that they were all going to pull their guns. This could be very embarrassing. We got a big crowd here and if one pulls his gun and we all turn it would be very embarrassing. Isn't it possible to have them all pull their guns?

RFK: I hate to have them all draw their guns as I think it could create harsh feelings. Isn't it sufficient if I have one man draw his gun and the others keep their hands on their holsters?

BARNETT: They must all draw their guns. Then they should point their guns at us and then we could step aside. This could be very embarrassing down here for us. It is necessary...

RFK: If they all pull their guns is that all?

BARNETT: (Inaudible)-I will have them put their sticks down before that happens. (Inaudible) There will be no shooting.

RFK: There will be no problems?

BARNETT: (Inaudible). Everyone pull your guns and point them and we will stand aside and you will go right through.

RFK: You will make sure not the Marshals but the State Police will preserve law and order?

BARNETT: There won't be any violence.

RFK: Then we can get the other people out as soon as possible.

BARNETT: One second. General, we expect them all to draw their guns. Lt. Governor Johnson is sitting here with me. (inaudible). Will you talk to him?

JOHNSON: General--

RFK: How are you?

JOHNSON: It is absolutely necessary that they all draw their guns. There won't be any shooting.

RFK: Can you speak a little louder?

JOHNSON: We are telling them to lay their clubs aside and to leave their guns in their automobiles. But it is necessary to have all your people draw their guns, not just one. (Inaudible) and anyone who shoots at all to leave. We appreciate what they have done so far and go back home and that there would be no shooting under any circumstance.

RFK: The one problem--when we come down there representing the Federal Government and draw guns it's going to disturb your people, understandably--

JOHNSON: As much as it would bother them if they just drew one gun and 350 highway partrolmen--

RFK: If they all draw their guns and they go into the university, thereafter, law and order will be preserved by your people?

JOHNSON: We are going to attempt to preserve it.

RFK: They won't leave, will they? What I want to be sure is that it won't be left up to our people.

JOHNSON: We can possibly leave many people up here today. We will do that.

RFK: As I understand from Mr. Watkins and from the Governor, law and order will be preserved by the local people. I don't anticipate a great problem but don't want an angry crowd descending on Oxford this evening. You'll be sure?

JOHNSON: Yes.

RFK: I don't care how you do it just as long as you take that responsibility.

JOHNSON:: (Inaudible) All be on this campus.

RFK: So I've got assurances from the Governor that no harm will come to Mr. Meredith and the Marshals.

JOHNSON: Not as far as we are concerned.

RFK: We will do anything to preserve law and order.

JOHNSON: We will do everything to preserve law and order at all times.

RFK: As long as I have the Governor's assurance and yours.

JOHNSON: To the best of our ability. I believe that we have sufficient men to take care of it.

RFK: Let me talk to the Gov.- again.

BARNETT: General?

RFK: Governor, that's all I wanted. That's the best thing in the long run.

BARNETT: (Inaudible) There won't be any violence. We will control them if there are a few there. The other day there were several thousand at the state office building and we didn't have a bit of trouble.

RFK: Just as long as it is left at the local level. They will be there at 5 o'clock and draw their guns.

BARNETT: We are going to step aside if they do that.

RFK: If there is any problem you will call me?

BARNETT: I will General.

CONVERSATION BETWEEN RFK and GOV. BARNETT THURSDAY, SEPT. 27, 1962, at 3:35 P. M.

RFK: Governor, now he is on his way and should be there about 5:30.

BARNETT: About 5:30.

RFK: He left around--your time--2:30, and I think it takes almost three hours.

BARNETT: Flying from Washington?

RFK: No, he is in Memphis but he is on the other side of Memphis. They are driving down.

BARNETT: About 5:30. I have about 22 minutes to four now. All right.

RFK: The thing is we just received a report from the FBI regarding instructions to state police down there and that they have been told these Marshals are coming and told that you want to preserve law and order and there is not to be any disorder, and that once this fellow gets into the University it is the responsibility of the Marshals to preserve law and order. I didn't want a misunderstanding--

BARNETT: After he gets in you certainly don't expect us to guard him all the time.

RFK: I just want to make sure--

BARNETT: We will do our best, of course. The local law enforcement--

RFK: From our understanding and my agreement with you law and order would be preserved by the State of Mississippi.

BARNETT: You mean after he gets in--well, as far as we can.

RFK: I understand. I don't want to do anything but wanted to be sure--

BARNETT: You mean local authorities?

RFK: Whatever is necessary, Governor. Whatever is necessary to preserve law and order.

BARNETT: But general, I declare I don't think I could agree to guarantee the man after he gets in. When he gets in he is one boy--

RFK: I had better call it off, Governor.

BARNETT: You want me to call the National Guard or anything like that?

RFK: I want to make sure law and order is preserved. From conversations with you the other times you said law and order would be preserved.

BARNETT: As far as it can.

RFK: That's all I ask.

BARNETT: As far as we can with reasonable diligence.

RFK: Governor, all I want from you is the same assurance that you will do what is necessary to preserve law and order.

BARNETT: General, wait a minute here. The Lt. Governor has an idea here.

JOHNSON: General, our local officers are here on the campus and in the county and in the city. They are the ones who would be responsible here.

RFK: My agreement and understanding, Lt. Governor, is with the Governor and you. I don't know them and from the conversations with you, I have to look to you. I don't care what arrangements you make with the other people but I have to be sure order is preserved by the local officials or by whom I don't care. But I want to be sure with you.

JOHNSON: That is nothing we can afford to do. When I talked with you before I told you local law enforcement officials would be on hand to keep the peace if it goes out of hand. Then, of course, we would come it.

RFK: We had over a period of the last four or five days in conversations with the Governor, he always assured me law and order will be preserved. Can I have the same assurance?

JOHNSON: We do that everywhere in our state.

RFK: I don't say there's a problem. If you can give me your assurance I don't care how it's done.

JOHNSON: All right. We couldn't assure you that students will be friendly. You see what I mean.

RFK: I don't mind that but I want to be sure someone will preserve law and order.

JOHNSON: We can't leave our offices here on the campus for the protection of the boy. The local officers will take over. If it looks like a riot or something of course our--will be immediately on the spot.

RFK: Are the local authori ties willing to take that responsibility?

JOHNSON: Oh, yes.

RFK: That's all I want to make sure. I don't care who is doing it. All I want to do

High Court Hears Ross' Jury Plea

Civil Liberties Union Files Brief In Support Of Barnett

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court hears arguments today on whether Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett is entitled to a jury trial on charges of criminal contempt.

Involved in the same case, and also asking for a jury trial, is Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson.

Both were cited for contempt by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans on grounds they refused to obey orders not to interfere with admission of James H. Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

Meredith, a Negro, eventually was enrolled and has graduated, a fact leading Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson of Mississippi to file a brief asking the high tribunal to toss out the contempt charges "since there is no longer a case or a controversy."

The Supreme Court, however, is expected to act on only the jury trial question. The circuit court, after citing Barnett and Johnson, was unable to resolve the question, dividing 4 to 4. It then took the unusual step of asking the Supreme Court to decide the issue.

If the trial is not before a jury, it would be before a judge or judges of the circuit court. If the governor and lieutenant governor are convicted, they could ask the Supreme Court to hear their case once again. Convictions could bring prison sentences. That, said Patterson, "would be nothing short of a disaster."

Solicitor General Archibald Cox, scheduled to argue in favor of a jury trial, in a preliminary brief said that "for good reasons, congress chose to exempt the United States from the hazards of trial by jury when injunctive orders it had secured were wilfully disobeyed."

Cox related that the order Barnett and Johnson were ac- Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Hugo L. Black and William O. Douglas. These dissents, the state officials urged, should now be adopted by the high court as a controlling rule.

The brief added:

"Our civilization has decided, and justly so, that determining the guilt or innocense of men is a thing too important to be trusted to trained men. It wishes for light upon that awful matter. It takes its inquiry to men who do not know the law, but who must rely on their feel of things germane to the experiences of man collectively . . . it collects 12 ordinary men going about their usual avocations the same as was done by the founder of christianity."

Supporting the right of the state officials to a jury trial, the American Civil Liberties Union in a "friend of the court" brief said:

"The right to jury trial is one of the most crucial safeguards against tyranny and oppression contained in the Constitution.

To dispense with that right and to permit a summary trial in cases of criminal contempt is justified neither by necessity nor by history. Indeed, the historical basis for the power to punish contempt summarily is a fiction which this (Supreme) Court should disavow."

High Court Hears Ross' Jury Plea

Civil Liberties Union Files Brief In Support Of Barnett

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court hears arguments today on whether Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett is entitled to a jury trial on charges of criminal contempt.

Involved in the same case, and also asking for a jury trial, is Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson.

Both were cited for contempt by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans on grounds they refused to obey orders not to interfere with admission of James H. Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

Meredith, a Negro, eventually was enrolled and has graduated, a fact leading Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson of Mississippi to file a brief asking the high tribunal to toss out the contempt charges "since there is no longer a case or a controversy."

The Supreme Court, however, is expected to act on only the jury trial question. The circuit court, after citing Barnett and Johnson, was unable to resolve the question, dividing 4 to 4. It then took the unusual step of asking the Supreme Court to decide the issue.

If the trial is not before a jury, it would be before a judge or judges of the circuit court. Cox related that the order Barnett and Johnson were accused of disobeying resulted from an action brought and prosecuted by the United States.

A preliminary brief submitted by Barnett and Johnson referred to a 1958 decision by the Supreme Court that there is no constitutional right to a jury trial.

Supporting the right of the state officials to a jury trial, the American Civil Liberties Union in a "friend of the court" brief said:

"The right to jury trial is one of the most crucial safeguards against tyranny and oppression contained in the Constitution.

To dispense with that right and to permit a summary trial in cases of criminal contempt is justified neither by necessity nor by history. Indeed, the historical basis for the power to punish contempt summarily is a fiction which this (Supreme) Court should disavow."

Hurricane Plane Spots Ship Lost In

NEW YORK (AP) — A heavy hurricane hunter aircraft sighted a decommissioned destroyer escort missing since Saturday night in 50-foot hurricane whipped seas, the Navy announced.

A spokesman said the Fogg was sighted by the WV2 aircraft 150 miles east of Cape Fear, N.C. The spokesman said the ship was upright but he said nothing about the 10 men aboard.

The ship broke loose from the tug towing it about 11:30 p.m. Saturday en route to Mayport, Fla. from Norfolk, Va., to join the reserve fleet.

At flet hadquarters the Navy said there was no new word from the tug Salish which was towing the Fogg when the towline parted Saturday night. A spokesman said the Salish is equipped with radio which has a range of only five or six miles.

When last heard from the heavy tug was having difficulty steering in th high seas and fierce wind.

Hurricane Ginny, with peak winds of 90 miles an hour, was pushing in a northeasterly direction and was centered about 100 statute miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C.

The Fogg was based in Boston but had not seen active service since 1947.

Ships in the vicinity headed toward the helpless destroyer after the aircraft sighting.

However, we won't be able to tie on to her until the weather abates," a Navy spokesman said. Its too rough now."

The Navy spokesman said there had been nothing to indicate any mishaps to the men aboard the destroyer, but that they had probably have been pitched about a lot and may be sick."

Barnett, Paul –

is to have assurances from you two gentlemen whose word I have confidence in and whose word I staked on--

JOHNSON: We are going to do the ultimate.

RFK: Can I talk to the Governor again?

BARNETT: General? You all understand one another?

RFK: Governor, I want to get it from you -- and I have confidence in your word, Governor.

BARNETT: We always say we don't have any violence in this city. It's a seldom thing. We will do whatever a reasonable and prudent officer would do. The Lt. Governor -- we can't guarantee they won't have some trouble. I don't know if we will or not.

RFK: I am not asking that. I just want to make sure that you are going to do what is necessary to preserve law and order.

BARNETT: We do that all over the state.

RFK: That's all I want from you.

BARNETT: We'll give the same protection as anyone else.

RFK: This is a difficult situation and you understand you have to watch it more carefully. But you have given me now your word as an individual and as Governor of the State of Mississippi as far as humanly possible-not superhuman-that law and order will be preserved.

BARNETT: Yes, sir. This thing here - I don't propose to do anything out of the ordinary.

RFK: If it looks like you are going to have some difficulty there you are going to have to take some steps.

BARNETT: We always do that.

RFK: Governor, I don't know whether you are trying to tell me something without saying it. I am relying a good deal on your word and I don't want to be misled.

BARNETT: General, we will do what every reasonable and prudent official would do. Try to keep peace and order all over the State of Mississippi.

RFK: But you have a particularly difficult situation in this area and so it's got to be watched particularly carefully.

BARNETT: I don't think so--not day after day.

RFK: I am not asking that--I have been through this and I don't think I will get any further.

BARNETT: General, I won't treat him like everyone else, you know.

RFK: He gets on campus and indications are there will be trouble-

BARNETT: The local officials here will handle it.

RFK: If it looks like they can't handle it, they will watch and your state officials will-

BARNETT: I certainly will do everything that I think is proper under the particular circumstances to protect the lives and health and persons of everyone. We always do that.

RFK: If it's getting out of hand you would not have any reluctance to use state officials if it appears--

BARNETT: Well, that's been our policy all the time.

RFK: Thanks a lot, Governor.

Conversations between RFK and Governor Barnett Thurs., Sept. 27, 1962, at 3:50 p. m.

BARNETT: General, I felt like I ought to call you back. What we talked about General, it is something that I think this thing ought to wait until you send him back here. Why can't you wait until Saturday morning? Here's the thing about it. We want the people to subside a little bit.

RFK: I think the problem for you, Governor, you will have that court case tomorrow and that's why your lawyers wanted it done today.

BARNETT: Can't you pass that case for awhile?

RFK: They won't do that. You can't do that now.

BARNETT: I think this case ought to be put off. I am honest with you.

RFK: I will call them back and we won't do it.

BARNETT: We better postpone this thing and some of the others will be in touch with you about this thing. Let's not have any misunderstanding. We can't afford to have that. At 5 o'clock it's getting pretty dark down here.

RFK: I think you are making a mistake on it. I think the problem on Saturday is going to be much much more difficult. I think it is going to be much more difficult and your situation before the courts will be mor edifficult. I think it is a great advantage to do it today as your lawyers--

BARNETT: The people probably will find it out.

RFK: There's not going to be any mention of it from here.

BARNETT: Certainly not here. Our conversations weren't taken down here.

RFK: You never had anything that's come out of this office and I never said I talked to you and I have never made one statement about you or anything to do with Mississippi so I think--

BARNETT: One man said, you will all compromise in this thing?'

RFK: You are not compromising-you are standing right up there. Your lawyers advised you on this-your lawyer and everybody else in order to remedy the situation for yourself and get through this case in the best possible fashion. Tomorrow by the time the case starts the situation changes completely. We're not going to make any statement on this. I am happy it gets resolved.

BARNETT: One man said to me, "you're compromising this thing?

RFK: Governor, we're coming in a 5 o'clock and sending 25 marshals bringing their guns and third, I am asking you whether you will take the responsibility for law and order. You said you would.

BARNETT: That's right. General, the Lt. Governor wants to speak to you.

RFK: Governor, as far as you're concerned, there is not going to be any statement out of here and for your own sake and the sake of your state, get it resolved today. I am happy to have all the Marshals pull their guns and force their way in. It's better that way than troopers running around.

BARNETT: Of course, you and I are in agreement. They are going to point their guns--

RFK: I'm asking from you law and order be preserved in Mississippi and you have no choice then.

BARNETT: The Lt. Governor wants to say something.

JOHNSON: General Kennedy, we are trying to be completely honest about this thing. We got a few intense citizens here got a lot of men who are not directly under us who are involved to hold the fort such as sheriffs and deputies. We cannot assure anybody that those people or someone maybe hot headed and start shooting and didn't want to assure you of anything unless we know it could be carried out.

RFK: If you are going to tell me now in contradiction what you told me a half-hour ago that there won't be any shooting. I won't send in any Marshals there that they might be shot-

JOHNSON: That's what we are asking you for time. W've got to have time in order to discreetly move these sheriffs out of here--

RFK: Lt. Governor, let me explain something to you. It's a quarter of two here and your difficulty is that tomorrow you have got this court case and by then it's too late. If you and the Governor don't go to court they will issue a bench warrant and then they will have troopers arrest you and come in and also keep the university open and that situation will be worse. You've got a couple of hours to tell the sheriffs and others to go home and suddenly I will call at 4 o'clock your time and tell them he is coming in.

JOHNSON: I can't move these people out of there, General. Some won't leave.

RFK: Lt. Governor, it's completely up to you. If you say there might be shooting I will call it off.

JOHNSON: I am not telling you there will be any at all as far as we can control.

RFK: I can't take the chance.

JOHNSON: And we couldn't here. That's the reason why we called you. There are 300, 400 or 500 people and we can't shake these people in this length of time and get rid of people whom we don't have complete control over.

RFK: That's up to you. We will face it in court tomorrow.

JOHNSON: That's what I wanted to get over to you we don't want anything to happen. We don't shoot Americans. We've got some hotheaded people in this state who are in this group and we've got to have sufficient time to move them.

RFK: You can't get this done today?

JOHNSON: No, certainly not.

RFK: May I speak to the been kind. I have legislature in session right now and it's rough on me. I'm driving 170 miles--it's rough. You think it best this Meredith matter---

RFK I don't know. You're going to court tomorrow.

BARNETT: That's contempt aginst me. General, I am not committing wrong-doing here. I wish you'd tell them to pass for 30 days.

RFK: I can't do that now, Governor. They said I should have used force against you. They're mad at me and mad at you. I have seen in the papers that they think we should have answered the force you used. They are not very pleased with either one of us and are not going to comprisise in my judgement. We're going to have a great problem tomorrow evening by this time and that's why I wanted to resolve it today.

BARNETT: Just a minute, General. You think this case is going out the window if this matter is not settled?

RFK: I talked to your lawyer about that. Went into it in some detail. I have no control over the court but I think it would be a major step forward if we could get Mr. Meredith in the university before they hear that case tomorrow morning.

BARNETT: General, if they get me in jail I will have to sit up there. I hate to do that but I can do it.

RFK: Sit up where?

BARNETT: Sit in jail. I'm trying to uphold the law.

RFK: If you can get this fellow in the university this evening a lot of our problems would be resolved. Why does anyone have to know this fellow is coming there until I should call you--

BARNETT: We have had several hundred men--

RFK: Can't he come in a gate and I call and say this conversation has not taken place and he is coming through such and such a gate?

BARNETT: Yes--

RFK: Again there is a question of law enforcement but I would have to rely on you that law enforcement would be preserved. I can't do that with 25 men. I would have to rely on you.

BARNETT. General, this thing could be handled a lot better if we wait a few more days on the Meredith case. He is not suffering. Just a few days until the case is settled.

RFK: As your lawyer would tell you, they brought all these judges from all over the country. The whole circuit is coming to hear the case. That's the difficulty.

BARNETT: All 9 judges.

RFK: They are there tonight in New Orleans. I can't tell them to go home. I have no control over this. This is the court. They're mad at me but they're madder at you.

BARNETT: Will they get an idea we compromised this thing? Will the judges think we settled worried about. We know them so well we will get them straightened out.

RFK: Can you move the people from the place they are coming in?

BARNETT: I think it would be bad psychologically to do that, I think you ought to come on as arranged. I think it would be much better.

RFK: Can you assurance feforehand to everybody that they are coming and would absolutely want no violence? Is it going to be a surprise to these people when we pull our guns?

BARNETT: No I will tell them under any circumstances will we have no violence. Not any of them will be armed.

RFK: Can I rely on you that there won't be any violence?

BARNETT: Yes, sir.

RFK: I am taking a hehlluva chance. I am relying on you.

BARNETT: There won't be any violence.

RFK: The Lt. Governor agress on this too?

BARNETT: He agrees there won't be any violence. Of course, we can't guarantee everything.

RFK: I understand that. Your people--

BARNETT: Our people are going to be law abiding.

RFK: O. K. Governor. They will--

BARNETT: They will be there at 5 o'clock.

RFK: It will be a little later than that.

BARNETT: You understand we have had no agreement

RFK: That's correct.

BARNETT: I am just telling you---Everybody thinks we're compromising.

RFK: I am just telling you that we are arriving and we are arriving with force.

CONVERSATION BETWEEN RFK AND GOVERNOR BARNETT Thursday, Sept. 27, 1962, at 6:35 p. m.

BARNETT: General, I'm worried -- I'm nervous, I tell you. You don't realize what's going on. There are several thousand people in here in cars, trucks. Several hundred are lined up on the streets where they are supposed to land. We don't know these people.

RFK: I had better send them back.

BARNETT: There is liable to be a hundred people killed here. It would ruin all of us. Please believe me. Talk to the Lt. Governor, he'll tell you.

RFK: I just have to hear from you, Governor.

BARNETT: There are dozens and dozens of trucks loaded with people. We can't control people like that. A lot of people are going to get killed. It would be embarrassing to me.

RFK: I don't know if it would be embarrassing--that would not be the feeling.

BARNETT: It would be bad all over the nation.

RFK: I'll send them back.

BARNETT: General, do that please. I just have to take the consequences tomorrow.

RFK: I will send them back.

General. I am sorry to have to keep you so long but we will get busy here and do our dead-level best to keep people--there are two or three I'm worried about and I'll see them personally.

RFK: I will have our people call--(pause). Governor, how long would it take before you check with these people?

BARNETT: About, I would say 40 minutes.

'To Preserve the Two-Party System' file

Pres. Politics

The rise of the radical right, says a Republican Senator, threatens changes in the character of his party which could alter American politics as a whole.

NYT Magazine 10-27-63

By JACOB K. JAVITS

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER said the other day that those who would suppress differences of opinion in the name of party unity "mistake conformity for unity." His sound advice to fellow Republicans was that unity is best achieved through a lively debate that would define for Republicans the broad areas where they agree and the specific points where they disagree. Indeed, a consensus formed in this way would lead straight to the choice of candidates who, at the head of the 1964 national ticket, could wage the election campaign with a united party behind them.

As a Republican, I feel that the kind of debate Mr. Eisenhower has called for should go beyond the implied question of whether the consensus aimed at will reflect a "progressive," "moderate" or "conservative" outlook. It goes beyond a related question—also implied — about which of the candidates can best embody whatever the consensus proves to be. These decisions have an importance of their own, and they must be faced in due time. At present, however, another question ought to form the heart of the great debate all Republicans must engage in.

THAT question, as I see it, turns on the choice between two lines of action Republicans can adopt as we position ourselves for the 1964 campaign. One line would follow our tradition dating from 1940 of accommodating the whole spectrum of Republican thought from both progressive and conservative wings of the party. The second line would polarize the party as down-the-line conservative—or ultraconservative—and, would also make foreign policy a partisan issue, contrary to the tradition established by Willkie, Vandenberg and Eisenhower.

By choosing the first line, we can be certain that, regardless of how the election itself turns out, the century-old two-party system that accounts for much of the strength and resiliency of American politics will be preserved intact. At the same time, by choosing this course, we can be certain that the Republican party will retain its historic institutional character, and thus its force as an agent of creative partisanship. It will continue to be a party that is national in scope, broadly representative in membership, sensitive to the pulse of American life, temperate in instinct and practical in its work habits.

By choosing the second line, we can change our party in ways that will radically alter the two-party system as we have known it — and alter the whole of American politics as well. More specifically, in changing the Republican party we recast American party politics along ideological lines — and invite the rise of one-interest splinter parties like those which paralyzed Germany's Weimar Republic and France's Fourth Republic.

There is no doubt in my own mind about the imperative necessity to choose the first line of action. I want to preserve the two-party system and the traditional character of the Republican party. I can see only the gravest kind of trouble ahead if the Republican party commits itself to the second line of action. Yet that is what some forces within the Republican party — contrary to their own conscious intentions, and contrary to their own highest interests — would have the party do.

I HAVE in mind those Republicans who, in their legitimate desire to make the party the chosen agent of "conservatism," have come to think that the radical right—epitomized by such groups as the John Birch Society—is the essence of what "conservatism" means. Their (Continued on Page 105) thinking, in consequence, would result in the Republican party embracing the views and tactics of the radical right. What these Republicans fail to see clearly is the extent to which the radical right is the deadly enemy of the very conservatism they themselves desire.

An authentic conservative would wish to bring to the nation a sense of calm confidence in itself, and to ease its social tensions. He would insist on the decencies in human relationships, and would spring to the defense of the Constitution and each part of the hallowed Bill of Rights. He would make himself the guardian of orderly growth, and check those who would abruptly overturn all policies in being. He would resist the howling extremist, set the example of respect for all lawful authority, and would be the first to honor men who had spent their lives in distinguished service to the Republic. Above all, he would lead in explaining why the complexities of existence stand in the way of utopian solutions to all problems, and why in so many hard cases, the best we can hope for is to learn how to live with fair compromises and reasonable timing.

BUT the radical right is against all of this. It has no confidence in the inner strength of America, since it has no courage of its own. It divides one American from his neighbor, since itself it stands outside American society. It preaches a doctrine of hate, since it is shot through by its own fears. Since it does not understand that freedom means freedom under the law, it seeks to jettison constitutional processes, and to suppress liberties, and to use methods identified with the Communists to fight Communism. And to buttress this tactic, it insists that the greatest threat to America does not come externally from the military and political might of the Soviet Union —or Communist China—but comes internally from the "left-wing" elements.

MEANWHILE, the radical right makes common cause with anarchy in our society by hurling wild charges of Communism at our most distinguished Americans, like Dwight D. Eisenhower and Chief Justice Earl Warren. It would abruptly dismantle the whole apparatus of the modern American state and society, and force us back to the conditions of life of the mid-19th century. Above all, since it views everything in absolute terms — and can't believe that "direct action" won't solve every problem — it accounts for every imperfection by tracing it to a "left-wing" conspiracy in government. Thus, through its nihilism, masquerading as conservatism, it works to destroy the faith Americans have in constitutional government and in responsible leaders of both political parties.

Yet some well-intentioned Republican conservatives not only fail to see the deadly enemy in the radical right but, through their faulty perception, would have the Republican party open its gates to the Trojan horse the radical right represents for the party.

Senator Barry Goldwater, for example, as late as October 2, reaffirmed his narrow view of the radical right by saying that if "you had a radical right, it would be the fascist position—sort of like Lincoln Rockwell and his Nazis." And regarding the John Birch Society: "All of the members of the society I know are good people. Sometimes you can argue with their methods just as you might argue with the members of an American Legion post. But that doesn't mean you have to condemn them."

WE have a duty to ask Senator Goldwater for more discernment as to the radical right's dangers than he has yet shown. What the country has a right to hear from so prominent a Republican as Senator Goldwater is something he has not yet said in clear-cut terms. He has not yet said that he sees in the radical right a movement dangerous to our nation and that he means to do all in his power to keep it out of the Republican party. Governor Rockefeller has said just that! Unless such a statement is made, the danger is that registration drive is maintained for the next 13 months, the result during this time span alone could be 325,000 new Negro voters. This figure, itself, could be the rock on which the "Southern strategy" would founder.

IT is also assumed by implication that a "Southern strategy" would not make it necessary to carry states that have traditionally decided the outcome of Presidential elections—namely, the great industrial states of the Eastern seaboard, the Great Lakes region and the Pacific Coast. It is said that we can safely risk losing them by adopting a states'-rights approach to civil rights, by promising to dismantle much of the 30-year-old structure of social legislation, and by what amounts to a go-it-alone foreign policy based on the threatened use of the bomb, come what may.

The fact remains that the real key to the 1964 election will be the industrial states of the northerly regions. The "Southern strategy" by its own arithmetic would have to win Ohio and Illinois. Both are swing states. Yet the likelihood that this "conservative" strategy would consolidate rather than drain off President Kennedy's strength in them is underlined by what happened in Ohio in the 1958 contest. When the Republican party went into that contest pledged to a right-to-work program—incidentally, against the advice of a conservative, Senator John Bricker—labor came out in force to vote and we Republicans took a historic drubbing.

FINALLY, there persists in the prenomination debate a recurring notion that it would be a good thing if the candidacy of a conservative at least produced a fundamental realignment of political parties into a clear-cut "liberal" and a clear-cut "conservative" party. The experience of Europe with strictly ideological parties says that nothing, in fact, could be worse for the United States.

As each party dropped all dissenters, each, now free of internal restraints, might fly to an extreme position, carrying millions of Americans with it. With our parties and the nation in this polarized condition, the whole of our democracy could be imperiled. A government by coercion instead of by consent could arise if points of difference among the splintered parties appeared impossible to reconcile. Upon gaining control of the apparatus of government, and pile-driving their extremist views through it, such parties could wrench the whole social order out of its socket—when the purpose of conservatism is to keep the social order on an even keel.

I HOPE that, through a full and frank debate, Republicans of all persuasions can come to see their real interests. I hope that they will see that the Republicans have made decisive inroads into the South in recent years by adhering to the moderate views of former President Eisenhower and former Vice President Nixon—and without trying to make the Republican party over to the requirements of the "Southern strategy." Republican moderates and progressives have been equally successful in the North wherever they have provided a rational alternative to the Democrats in dealing with problems the people felt government had to deal with, consistent with the great Republican principles of a vigorous private enterprise system operated in the public interest and of equal opportunity for the individual.

To win the 1964 election, we don't have to fill the air with bluster. We must sanely detail the many failures of the Kennedy Administration at home and abroad. We must show where and why the Administration went astray in Cuba, Latin America and Vietnam; and why and where it has failed on civil rights, health care for the aging, education, the international balance of payments, endemic unemployment and in giving the people a feeling of confidence in our economic future. We must advance Republican alternatives which are internally consistent and politically feasible and which can be attained within the four corners of a Federal Government that plays its own proper part in promoting individual and private enterprise. In short, we can win by remaining in the mainstream of American life as a party of responsible power, seeking constantly to refine and apply our successive new insights into the meaning of Liberty and Union.

7 Q. Mr. President, on the basis of your experience in Philadelphia yesterday and last night, will you regard next Tuesday's mayoral elections as a test of how civil rights will affect the voting? A. In Philadelphia, or—

Q. Yes, as well as in other large Northern cities? A. Well, I'm sure that it will—may be a factor in the elections, though I'm not sure that the two candidates have taken different positions. But I suppose this is a matter of major concern in the country today and it may be reflected in the voting. I'm not, as I say, aware—though I—it may be that the candidates have taken different positions on it. My guess would be that they've taken relatively the same position on the question.

Q. The question is, Mr. President, whether or not there will be some backlash from white minority voters against the Democrats because of their pushing of civil rights?

A. Well, it's possible. We'll have to wait and see, though, as I've said from the beginning, it seems to me both parties have taken a clear position historically and at present on civil rights. But there may be—we'll have to wait and see Tuesday, and I'm sure that a good many things will be written into it, when the results are in.

Georgia Congressmen Voted Against Civil Rights For Negroes

Atl. World 2-12-64

WASHINGTON — Negroes lost again in the vital struggle for civil rights here Monday when Georgia Congressmen voted heavily against such legislation in the House of Representatives.

On the other hand, when an amendment to include an Indian rights bill in the broader one was introduced, seven of them voted in favor of the bill.

Representatives that voted (yes) for the civil rights legislation for Indians were: Phil Landrum, Elliott Hagan, J. J. Flynt, Jr., Robert Stephens, Carl Vinson, Russell Tuten and John Davis.

Charles Weltner, 5th District Congressman, was the only representative who voted (no) against the bill.

Final tabulation reveals that the amendment lost by a 145-95 verdict.

President Orders Negro Hiring in U.S. Construction

By TOM WICKER

(Copyright 1963 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—President John F. Kennedy ordered federal construction programs reviewed Tuesday in an effort to prevent discriminatory hiring practices.

He also ordered Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz to require that young workers be admitted to apprenticeship programs on a non-discriminatory basis.

In a statement issued Tuesday afternoon Kennedy also said he would "shortly issue an executive order" which would have the effect of insuring non-discrimination in hiring on construction projects resulting wholly or in part from federal grant-in-aid programs.

CALLED UNFAIR

"Denial of the right to work is unfair, regardless of its victim," Kennedy said. "It is doubly unfair to throw its burden most heavily on someone because of his race or color."

Administration sources said the statement was partially in response to violence in Philadelphia last week. Negro workers demonstrated there for a larger share of jobs on a school construction project.

Herbert Hill, labor secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said planned demonstrations at federal construction projects would be withheld on the basis of Kennedy's order and the affirmation and assurances given to him by Wirtz.

WAIT AND SEE

"We're going to wait and see," Hill said in reply to questions about demonstrations. He has just conferred with Wirtz and seemed encouraged.

Wirtz announced that his department will review immediately every federal construction project in the country and will act promptly against evidence of discrimination against qualified Negro job applicants on these projects.

He said he expected full cooperation from contractors and unions because "there is a new appreciation of this problem."

Where cooperation is not forthcoming, the secretary said, "the contracts will be canceled, or they will not be let. The pledges will be enforced. Union discrimination will not be used as an excuse to keep them (Negroes) out." He said the government also will urge prime contractors to use Negro subcontractors wherever possible.

In a related development, the Civil Service Commission announced it is sending five-man teams into Southern communities this week "to assure that full opportunity is given to all citizens to compete for federal positions."

The commission said the teams, working out of its Atlanta regional office, will start by visiting Jackson, Miss., Montgomery, Ala., and Nashville, Tenn., all scenes of recent mass demonstrations by Negroes.

About the middle of June similar teams will visit Albany, Ga., Savannah, Ga., Raleigh-Durham, N.C., and Greensboro, N.C. The commission said "further visits may be scheduled for mid-July to additional cities."

FROM

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

RELATIVE TO

CIVIL RIGHTS, AND A DRAFT OF A BILL TO ENFORCE THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO VOTE, TO CONFER JURISDICTION UPON THE DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROVIDE INJUNCTIVE RELIEF AGAINST DISCRIMINATION IN PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS, TO AUTHORIZE THE ATTORNEY GENERAL TO INSTITUTE SUITS TO PROTECT CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS IN EDUCATION, TO ESTABLISH A COMMUNITY RELATIONS SERVICE, TO EXTEND FOR FOUR YEARS THE COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS, TO PREVENT DISCRIMINATION IN FEDERALLY ASSISTED PROGRAMS, TO ESTABLISH A COMMISSION ON EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

JUNE 19, 1963.—Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed

To the Congress of the United States:

Last week I addressed to the American people an appeal to conscience—a request for their cooperation in meeting the growing moral crisis in American race relations. I warned of "a rising tide of discontent that threatens the public safety" in many parts of the country. I emphasized that "the events in Birmingham and elsewhere have so increased the cries for equality that no city or State or legislative body can prudently choose to ignore them." "It is a time to act," I said, "in the Congress, in State and local legislative bodies and, above all, in all of our daily lives."

In the days that have followed, the predictions of increased violence have been tragically borne out. The "fires of frustration and discord" have burned hotter than ever.

FOR RELEASE AT NOON
SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1963

March 30, 1963

Office of the White House Press Secretary

THE WHITE HOUSE

The President today signed an Executive Order establishing the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation.

The purpose of the Commission is to study the causes for the failure of many Americans to exercise their right to vote. The Commission has been asked to give particular attention to

-- laws which restrict registration and voting on the basis of residence, economic status, and for other reasons

-- procedures for registration of voters

-- absentee voting provisions

-- causes of nonvoting by persons who are otherwise qualified to vote.

The Executive Order specifically directs the Commission to avoid consideration of problems involving the denial of registration and voting on the basis of racial or other discriminatory grounds which are within the jurisdiction of the Commission on Civil Rights.

In signing the Order the President indicated his concern over the fact that less than sixty-five percent of the United States population of voting age cast ballots for Presidential electors in 1960, and made the following statement:

"Responsible Americans are increasingly concerned with the wide-spread failure of our citizens to exercise their right to vote and restrictions which prevent many Americans from voting. I have recommended legislation to protect voting rights against discrimination on the basis of race and color in my Message to Congress on Civil Rights of last month. However, the problems are by no means limited to this type of discrimination.

"It has been estimated that some eight million Americans were unable to vote in the election of 1960 because they were unable to comply with State and local residence requirements, which penalize the nation's mobile population. Additional millions of Americans are precluded from exercising their franchise because of limitations on absentee registration and voting -- a problem especially important in the case of military and civil-service personnel whose work require them to be located outside of the State in which they vote. Other Americans are prevented from voting by registration procedures which make voting unnecessarily difficult.

"I have, therefore, today established the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation to study the reasons for the failure of many citizens to register and vote in elections for Members of Congress, the President and Vice President, including laws which restrict registration and voting on the basis of residence, economic status, registration procedures, absentee voting provisions and other reasons for non-voting."

Appointed to the Commission are Richard M. Scammon, Director of the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C.; Bert Bennett, Chairman, North Carolina State Democratic Executive Committee, Winston Salem, N. C.; Brendan Byrne, Executive Director, American Heritage Foundation, New York, New York; Robert A. Forsythe, State Chairman, Republican Party of Minnesota, Edwina, Minnesota; Evron M. Kirkpatrick, Executive Director, American Political Science Association, Bethesda, Maryland; and James Bradshaw Mintener, attorney and civic worker, Washington, D. C.

Also John Perkins, President of University of Delaware, Newark, Delaware; Mrs. Ruth Schertz Phillips, President, League of Women Voters (national), St. Charles, Illinois; Roy Reuther, Director, United Auto Workers' Citizenship-Legislative Department, Detroit, Michigan; Victoria Schuck, Professor of Political

Dear Mr. Branton:

Mr. Scammon has asked me to reply to your letter of April 18 in which you request that the Voter Education Project be added to the mailing list for the interim and final reports of the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation. We are, of course, delighted to do this and appreciate your interest in our work.

By the same token, we would be grateful to you for making available to us copies of any studies you may now have on hand dealing with such subjects as the motivations of non-voters, legal impediments erected by state legislatures to discourage registration, etc. Such documents will be helpful to the staff, and to the Commission in its preliminary deliberations on the subject.

I am enclosing a copy of the Executive Order by which the President created the Commission, so you may be aware of the scope and nature of our study.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Wiley:

I don't know what we could offer these birds that they would be likely to use. There is a lot of good theory hanging around about why people don't ~~tex~~ vote but it all leads to some pretty radical conclusions about what needs to be done, and I can't imagine their being interested in it.

I'm sure they are aware of the standard works on voting behavior and they're bound to have more than we do on state laws other than those of civil rights interest.

Thus I just don't see any way we could be of much help to them.

Dear Mr. Scammon:

I note from press releases that you have been named Chairman of the President's Commission on Registration and Voter Participation. The Voter Education Project would be pleased to receive such interim reports and information as this new commission may have available from time to time.

I would appreciate it if you would place our name with the persons responsible for releasing any such reports.

Wiley:

Yesterday's Constitution carried a story about a new commission appointed by the President to study registration laws and their effect in disfranchising Americans (with specific exclusions of racial matters). I think we should be kept informed of what this commission does. Its chairman is Scammon of the Census Bureau. Since you know him, I thought it would bemore appropriate if you, rather than I, wrote Scammon asking that we be put on the mailing list of the commission and advised of what it's doing and offering any assistance we may be able to provide.

JFK Forms New Committee To Encourage More Voting

N.Y. Times Sat. 3-31-63

By WARREN WEAVER

(Copyright 1963 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, March 30. President Kennedy established Saturday a 10-member commission to encourage more people to vote in national and congressional elections.

He signed an executive order setting up the President's commission on Registration and Voter Participation and named Richard M. Scammon, director of The Bureau of the Census, to head it.

Scammon, a political scientist specializing in election research and analysis, has been the administration's chief advisor on voting patterns and performance since his appointment as census director two years ago.

The new commission was specifically instructed not to deal with aspects of the voting problem that involve racial discrimination, such as the various laws in Southern states that make it difficult, if not impossible, for Negroes to register and vote.

Solutions to such problems, the president's order noted, fall in the jurisdiction of the commission on civil rights.

MR. KENNEDY asked the commission to study state laws that:

—Limit registration and voting to citizens with a specific length of residency and, in some cases, a certain economic status, such as ownership of property worth more than a set figure.

—Make registration for voting unduly inaccessible or cumbersome.

—Make it difficult for residents of a state to cast absentee ballots when they are away from home on election day.

The commission was also directed to try to determine any other factors that result in qualified voters not showing up at the polls on election day.

"RESPONSIBLE Americans are increasingly concerned with the widespread failure of our citizens to exercise their right to vote and restrictions which prevent many Americans from voting," the President declared.

"It has been estimated that some 8,000,000 Americans were unable to vote in the election of 1960 because they were unable to comply with state and local residence requirements, which penalize the nation's mobile population," Kennedy continued.

"Additional millions of Americans are precluded from exercising their franchise because of limitations on absentee registration and voting—a problem especially important in the case of military and civil-service personnel whose work requires them to be located outside of the state in which they vote."

ALTHOUGH Kennedy's description of the commission's duties and aims was non-political, it has been widely accepted for years among political leaders in the larger states that a substantial majority of non-voters—as many as 3 out of 4—would vote Democratic if they could be registered and gotten to the polls.

The belief is that most non-voters are members of minority groups or down near the bottom of the economic ladder or both; as such, right or wrong, they tend to identify themselves with the Democratic party.

THE SCAMMON commission was directed to report its findings to the President by Nov. 30. This would presumably give states ample time to adjust their voting laws to the group's recommendations before the 1964 presidential election, except in cases where constitutional amendment might be required.

The commission will be automatically abolished 60 days after the submission of its final report. Its members will receive $75 a day while on commission work, except for those already receiving federal compensation. They will work for nothing.

The executive order empowers the commission to hire a staff with salaries up to $17,500 a year.

COMMISSION members named by the President in addition to Scammon are: Bert Bennett of Winston-Salem, N.C., Robert A. Forsythe of Edwina, Minn., Evron M. Kirkpatrick of Bethesda, Md., James Bradshaw Mintener of Washington, D.C., John Perkins of Newark, Del., Mrs. Ruth Schertz Phillips of St. Charles, Ill., Roy Reuther of Detroit, Mich., Victoria Schuck of South Hadley, Mass., and Leon W. Washington Jr. of Los Angeles.

PRESIDENT APPOINTS PANEL TO SPUR VOTE

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 31 — President Kennedy has established a ten-member commission to encourage more people to vote in national and Congressional elections.

He signed an Executive order yesterday setting up the President's Commission on Registration and Voter Participation. He named Richard M. Scammon, director of the Census Bureau, to head it.

Mr. Kennedy asked the commission to study state laws that:

Limited registration and voting to citizens with a specific length of residency and, in some cases, a certain economic status, such as ownership of property worth more than a set figure.

Made registration for voting unduly inaccessible or cumbersome.

Made it difficult for residents of a state to cast absentee ballots.

The commission was also directed to try to determine any other factors that resulted in qualified voters not showing up at the polls on election day.

The members of the commission are:

Robert A. Forsythe of Edwina, Minn., Republican state chairman.

Evron M. Kirkpatrick of Bethesda, Md., executive director of the American Political Science Association.

Leon W. Washington Jr. of Los Angeles, publisher of The Los Angeles Sentinel.

White House Adds a Name To Commission on Voting

WASHINGTON, April 1 (AP)—The White House corrected an error today and added member to the Presidential comission investigating reasons why so many Americans fail to vote.

Press Secretary Pierre Salinger said the name of Brendan Byrne, executive director of the American Heritage Foundation, New York, had been inadvertently omitted from the list of commission members announced Saturday. This brings the membership of the commission to 12.

The commission is headed by Richard M. Scammon, director of the Census Bureau.

ment rates where public-owned land is involved are as follows:

"The rate of payment under the program with respect to land which is leased or rented on a cash rent basis and which is owned by the Federal Government or by a State, a political subdivision or any agency thereof and which is otherwise eligible for participation in the program shall not exceed a fair payment rate as determined by the county committee. Such payment rate shall be the actual cash rent per acre of the land adjusted to take into account the quality of the acres which the producer designates as diverted when compared with the total acres rented, and the services performed and improvements made at the lessee's expense which are in addition to rent. A payment in excess of the cash rent may only be made if approved by a representative of the State committee."

If we can be of further service in this matter, please call on us.

Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your letter of December 5, I have been informed by the State land department that the Farmers Investment Co. paid, in 1951, for land in Pinal County $4.50 per acre for cultivated acres, and that averaged in with the uncleared land made payment of $3.60 per acre overall on the acreage under lease from the State.

The State land department further informs that the overall charge of the State to the Farmers Investment Co. for land in Maricopa County was $3 per acre. This is the average of cleared and uncleared land.

I was informed that there was no breakdown as to the acreage cleared and uncleared.

I hope this information will prove of assistance to you.

With best regards.

Sincerely,

JOHN M. MCGOWAN,
Administrative Assistant.

WHAT KIND OF VICTORY?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, 2 weeks ago our brilliant chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] journeyed to the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy in Medford, Mass., to deliver a series of significant lectures.

Since their inception 6 years ago, these speeches, known as the William L. Clayton lectures, have been delivered by some of the leading thinkers and statesmen of the Western World. I must add that this year's speaker is certainly no exception.

In his first talk, our distinguished colleague discussed the concept of "total victory" and what it means as an objective of our national policy, stating that—

Two total victories won by the West in the two total wars of the 20th century have generated many more problems than they have solved. The price of these victories was the loss of the worldwide hegemony of the Western nations. The price of a third such total victory would be the probable destruction of Western civilization as we know it.

I was delighted to see a thought-provoking editorial on this subject in the May 6 edition of the New York Times, and would like to call it to the attention of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, May 6, 1963]

WHAT KIND OF VICTORY?

In a thoughful as well as courageous speech, Senator J. W. FULBRIGHT, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has publicly challenged the advocates of total victory against communism. He points out that the total victories actually won in World Wars I and II raised more problems than they solved and certainly did not create perfect worlds. Now, he adds, an effort to win such a triumph by nuclear war would create evils outweighing any possible benefits of "victory." Instead of the chimera of "total victory," the Senator urges the West to follow the dual policy of using its strength to convince the Kremlin that its dream of world domination is unattainable, while also assuring Moscow's leaders "they can have a secure and untroubled national existence under institutions of their choice."

One major flaw in the reasoning of the advocates of "total victory" is the assumption that the only alternative to total victory is total defeat. This is simply untrue. We have managed to live on the same plane with a Communist-ruled Russia for almost a half century, and there is no necessary reason that we cannot continue to do so in freedom for the indefinite future. The Soviet Union is not all-powerful—but neither are we.

Another major fallacy is the implicit assumption that communism is something fixed and unchanging, that the Communist system must remain as evil and horrible tomorrow as it has been yesterday and today. In his recent encyclical, Pope John pointed out that the original ideas of a political movement may remain constant, but the movements themselves, "working on historical situations in constant evolution, cannot but be influenced by these latter and cannot avoid, therefore, being subject to changes, even of a profound nature."

Such leaders as Senator FULBRIGHT and the Pope speak out of the confidence that the true worth of Western traditions and ideas will be evident in the long run, as the people of all countries have the opportunity to compare and contrast the alternatives before them. We need not fear the prospect of long-term competition in peace.

RUSSIA'S FIVE FATAL MISTAKES IN AFRICA

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, in the April 28 issue of This Week magazine section of the Washington Sunday Star there appeared a fine article by William Atwood, U.S. Ambassador to Guinea. The article is entitled "Russia's Five Fatal Mistakes in Africa." As the title to the article suggests, Mr. Atwood points out how the Russians have failed in their efforts to make any significant advances among the newly independent nations of Africa.

When I toured Africa in 1959, I visited Conakry, Guinea. The Russians were very much in evidence at that time, and there was every reason to fear that Guinea might well become another Communist satellite.

It is reassuring to read Ambassador Atwood's account of what has happened in Guinea since 1959, due, in the main, to the bungling of the "Ugly Russian."

I ask unanimous consent that Ambassador Atwood's article be reprinted at length in the RECORD following these remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUSSIA'S FIVE FATAL MISTAKES IN AFRICA

(By William Attwood)

CONAKRY, GUINEA.—Most Americans have a distorted picture of Africa. It's nobody's fault. It's just because bad news always makes bigger headlines than good news.

We read about turmoil in the Congo, race riots in South Africa and Communist infiltration almost everywhere. And we wonder if there's any hope for freedom and progress on a continent that has been called an "angry young giant."

What we overlook is that in 7 short years 27 countries of 150 million people achieved independence with less bloodshed than occurs on U.S. highways in 1 year.

More important, the Soviet Union, which assumed that Africa would be wide open to Communist penetration, has so far failed to take over a single one of these young governments.

THE GLITTERING SHORTCUT

The cards seemed to be stacked in Moscow's favor: The new nations of Africa were anticolonialist—and therefore presumably anti-Western. Many of their leaders were Marxist trained. Their people were largely illiterate—and supposedly gullible. And to a continent impatient to move into the 20th century, the Soviets could offer a glittering shortcut on the Communist bandwagon.

Frustrated by the U.N. in the Congo, the Soviets concentrated even more on key sub-Saharan African nations—Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Mali, Somalia, and Sudan—to which they have by now extended $619 million mostly in credits. Other Communist states were prodded by Moscow to provide additional financial aid. Technicians from the Soviet bloc poured in and were welcomed as new-found friends in need.

Today none of these states can be counted as a real Soviet ally. And Soviet equipment, aid plans and technicians are increasingly disparaged and suspected.

Where did the Soviets go wrong?

You can find most of the answers in one African country—Guinea. This small former French colony on the west coast of Equatorial Africa is the place Moscow counted on getting a secure beachhead for spreading the Soviet gospel throughout west Africa.

Guinea was wide open to Soviet penetration when the French pulled out in 1958 after the Guineans voted for independence. Friendless and broke, the Guineans welcomed these strangers who echoed their anticolonialism and promised "disinterested" economic aid.

Just 3 years later the Guineans bluntly accused the Soviet bloc embassies of meddling in internal affairs and sent the Soviet Ambassador home; then they turned to the West for technical assistance and sought private investment as a way out of economic stagnation.

With the Africans, the Soviets and their satellites made five major mistakes:

First, they underestimated African nationalism and political sophistication. While the Russians pretend to support neutralism and national independence, their system in fact cannot tolerate deviation from the gospel according to Lenin. Sooner or later they start the hard sell for allout communism.

But the Africans are in no mood to trade one form of colonialism for another. When they realized what the Communists were up to they reacted vigorously. In Guinea, police cracked down on pro-Communist union leaders and teachers who had been working in collusion with the Soviet Embassy, and jailed their leaders.

Second, Soviet economic aid often neglects a nation's basic needs in favor of showy, politically motivated projects. Among the biggest Soviet bloc projects in Guinea are a radio transmitter, a printing plant, a sports stadium, a hotel, an outdoor theater and a citywide loudspeaker system. But the things that countries like Guinea really need are education, vocational training, agricultural development, good roads and small industries. The Soviets helped neither the country's economy nor their own popularity with the Guineans.

Third, the Soviets tried to control the economies of these young countries by means of attractive-sounding barters. It didn't take the Guineans long to find out the the Czechs and others were sending them overpriced and often shoddy equipment in exchange for Guinean products, which were then resold in the West for hard cash. And there's no better way of antagonizing an African than to appear to be taking advantage of him.

Fourth, the Soviet and other Eastern European technicians sent to Africa have had little or no experience in dealing with Africans. They don't understand their ways, they get annoyed with them—and friction follows. Their attitude—a mixture of grumbling and indifference—is resented by Africans, who like strangers to be friendly and relaxed. Word gets around that the Soviets are racists (because they don't mingle), uncultured (because they speak only Russian and their clothes are often dowdy or incompetent (because much of their equipment is inferior in quality to what the Guineans, for example, knew under the French). And when word gets around in Africa, it really gets around.

Finally, the Soviet effort to win over young Africans by giving them scholarships in Communist states has misfired. Africans in Eastern Europe have experienced racial discrimination—where they expected none; they complain about being subjected to long hours of political indoctrination. Back home, they compare notes with students who have gone to the United States, France, or Britain—and wish they had gone West.

So it's more than likely the Soviets are engaged in their own agonizing reappraisal about Africa. Here in Guinea, after 3 years and $125 million in Soviet bloc credits and grants, their record is nothing to brag about: a cluster of half-finished public buildings, a radio station and loud-speaker system that don't work, a stagnant economy, a disillusioned people, an Ambassador expelled and a government turning to the West and to private enterprise for development.

It isn't hard to imagine the uproar in Congress and the press if the United States had expended all this money and effort with similar results.

Knowing the Communists' capacity for taking the long view of history, we can't expect them to give up in Africa. The Chinese are quietly cultivating African leaders and avoiding Soviet mistakes. And the Soviets will never again take the Africans for granted.

But we should not gloat over Soviet failures, nor should we expect that the Africans will necessarily go pro-West. They are and will remain primarily concerned with independence, dignity, progress, and noninvolvement in the struggle of the major powers.

Our task now is to intensify our efforts to help Africans develop their countries in practical, useful ways. We have made a good start, but we need to remember that this is an impatient continent that wants to catch up with the rest of the world. Speed is a more important factor than size in African development programs; if the younger generations can't see signs of progress in cooperation with the West, they may yet be enticed down the Soviet path.

OUR BEST APPROACH

For the moment our best approach to Africa can be summed up in four words—we should try to be firm, friendly, frank, and fast.

We must be firm in our commitment to freedom in Africa; friendly and frank in our dealings with Africa's leaders, and fast in carrying out our promises to give desperately needed help.

Frankness has already paid off. Today most African leaders have overcome their suspicions of the United States and are beginning to realize that what we want for them is what they want for themselves: political independence and economic progress in freedom.

What the Communists want is very different—as the Africans are finding out.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S VOTING COMMISSION

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, democracy cannot exist without the voluntary participation of free citizens in the process of government. In our representative democracy, the will of the public is expressed through voting at the polls for those who are to make and carry out our laws and policies. All over the country on election day, in the smallest hamlets and the largest cities, millions of voters flock to the polls to exercise their right as a free people to select their representatives by secret ballot.

It is with great pride that I point out that Idaho has led the Nation in the last two presidential elections—1956 and 1960—in the percentage of civilians of voting age who actually cast ballots. In 1956, 77.3 percent of Idaho's eligible voters went to the polls and voted. And in 1960, this percentage rose to 80.8. I am confident that one of the major reasons for this extremely high turnout of voters in my State is the liberality of the voter-registration laws. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point tables which rank the States according to their respective voting percentages in the 1956 and 1960 general elections.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Sources: State election officials, U.S. Census Bureau.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, as indicated by the charts, every election day there is a substantial number of citizens who do not exercise their franchise. In the last presidential election, only 63.9 percent of the potential voters—less than two-thirds—actually went to the polls. In 1952 and 1956 the comparable figures were 62.7 percent and 60.4 percent. This demonstrates that there is a bloc of potential voters, making up practically 40 percent of the electorate, who do not vote. The percentage of nonvoters in State and local elections is even greater.

The existence of this large group of voters should be a source of concern to all of us who want a vital democracy. It has led President Kennedy to recently establish the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation. The purpose of the Commission is to study the causes for the failure of many Americans to exercise their right to vote. The Commission has been asked to give particular attention to laws which restrict registration on the basis of residence, economic status and for other reasons; procedures for registration of voters; absentee voting provisions; causes of nonvoting by persons otherwise qualified to vote.

The Executive order establishing the Commission specifically directs it to avoid consideration of problems involving the denial of registration and voting on the basis of racial or other discriminatory grounds which are within the jurisdiction of the Commission on Civil Rights. The President, in a statement issued at the formation of the Commission, said that "responsible Americans are increasingly concerned with the widespread failure of our citizens to exercise their right to vote and restrictions which prevent many Americans from voting."

The Chairman of the Commission is Richard M. Scammon, Director of the Bureau of the Census. The other members include Bert Bennett, chairman, North Carolina State Democratic Executive Committee, Winston Salem, N.C.; Robert A. Forsythe, State chairman, Republican Party of Minnesota, Edwina, Minn.; Evron M. Kirkpatrick, executive director, American Political Science Association, Bethesda, Md.; James Bradshaw Mintener, attorney and civic worker, Washington, D.C.; Brendan Byrne, executive director, American Heritage Foundation, New York City.

The Commission also includes John Perkins, president of the University of Delaware, Newark, Del.; Mrs. Ruth Schertz Phillips, president, League of Women Voters (national), St. Charles, Ill.; Roy Reuther, director, United Auto Workers' Citizenship-Legislative Department, Detroit, Mich.; Victoria Schuck, professor of political science, Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.; and Leon H. Washington, Jr., publisher, Los Angeles Sentinel, Los Angeles, Calif. The Commission is to report its recommendations to the President by November 30, 1963.

This bipartisan assemblage of responsible and knowledgeable citizens have an important task, which I am sure they will fulfill admirably. Their recommendations should be carefully studied by all those concerned with establishing an effective democracy. Let us look at some of the problems confronting them. The respected American Heritage Foundation, whose director is a member of the Commission, estimates that in 1956 more than 6 million citizens were disenfranchised because of moving and thereby failing to meet the residential requirement for registration. Many States make no provision for absentee ballots by the hospitalized and physically disabled. Some 5 million Americans were thus kept from the polls in 1956. It is also estimated that approximately 2,600,000 travelers were prevented from voting because they had no way of obtaining absentee ballots.

Registration requirements, one of the main areas of concern to the Commission, vary widely across the country. It is interesting to note that the 12 States which require only 6 months' residence in the State had an average of 73.5 percent of their potential voting population go to the polls in 1960. The three States, all southern, which required a 2-year residency averaged only 29.2 percent of potential, and the remainder of the States, having a 1-year requirement, averaged 63.3 percent of potential voters casting ballots.

In the 12 States with 6-month residency requirements, 85.8 percent of the potential voters are actually registered to vote. In the 2-year States and in the 1-year States, the comparable figures are 48 and 73.8 percent. There are many factors involved in the motivation of citizens to register and vote, but the above figures indicate that liberalized residency requirements are associated with greater participation in registration and voting.

One of the most difficult areas to study in voting is that of motivation. What impels a citizen to go to the polls or to stay away, aside from legal and procedural impediments? Part of the answer may be tradition and education. England and Canada, for example, have consistently higher turnouts at the polls than we do in America. In the last national election in each country, 8 out of every 10 voters went and cast ballots. Part of the answer, I think, can be found in giving a better education in the responsibilities of the democratic process to our young people. It should spur us to action to discover that Americans between the ages of 21 and 29 have the poorest voting record. I would think that the Commission would recommend programs designed to correct this problem.

Each of us has a stake in making democracy work. I think that the public-spirited citizens who have agreed to serve on the Commission on Registration and Voting Participation should be applauded for their role in formulating recommendations to make democracy work better. In summing up this discussion, I would like to append an editorial from the Washington Post entitled "Why Don't They Vote?" which outlines the necessity for a study such as that being undertaken by the Commission. An article by the well-known public opinion researcher Elmo Roper is also appended as a factual look at the state of registration and voting procedures and deficiencies. I ask unanimous consent that both of these articles be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY DON'T THEY VOTE?

President Kennedy is quite properly concerned about the 37,500,000 Americans of voting age who do not go to the polls. In the congressional elections the number of stay-at-homes is much larger. Last year only 49 percent of the potential voters actually cast ballots. What kept the majority away? Fortunately, the President's concern has prompted him to name a commission under the chairmanship of Richard M. Scammon, Director of the Census Bureau, to find out why so many avoid the polls and to recommend what should be done about it.

Many millions of Americans lose their votes each year because of changes in their places of residence. Some of this loss is unavoidable in a society on wheels, but an enormous amount of it is a direct result of voting laws carried over from the horse-and-buggy days. In many States the residence requirement for voting is unreasonably long. Others offer inadequate opportunity for registration. So much has been said in recent years about racial bars to voting (which are a special concern of the Civil Rights Commission) that other major impediments have been much neglected.

Another serious weakness is the system for absentee voting as it operates in many of the States. Why should not absentee ballots be made available to all qualified voters who are hospitalized or ill at home and to those who are away from home for any purpose as well as to the personnel of the armed services? Wider use of absentee voters' ballots could add many millions to the list of voters in a general election.

Some allowance always will have to be made for the few who "take a walk" on election day because of irritation with both parties and for those who have not sufficient interest in public affairs to go to the polls. A free country where voting is solely a matter of individual choice can never expect to equal the turnout of a totalitarian country where voting is in fact or in effect compulsory. But a vast improvement in the American voting record could be made by simply modernizing the laws so as to encourage participation instead of making it unnecessarily burdensome.

HOW TO LOSE YOUR VOTE

(By Elmo Roper)

Most people are indignant about the denial of voting rights to Negroes. Such disfranchisement is a glaring evil, an obvious contradiction of the Nation's moral principles, and as such it is easy to react against it passionately. Yet other forms of disfranchisement affecting much larger numbers of Americans arouse merely a public yawn.

There are between 2,500,000 and 4 million victims of poll tax and prejudice disfranchisement; but there are also 3 million Americans who can't vote because they are traveling in or out of the country or living abroad; 5 million who can't get to the polls because of illness or disability; and the largest group of all, 8 million otherwise eligible citizens who have moved too recently to be allowed to vote under our laws.

These victims of what might be called "accidental prejudice" lack partisans and pamphleteers; their cases are undramatic and their plight is taken for granted. But when one tries to formulate the rationale behind denying the vote to people who happen to be away from home, or who are ill, when one asks the relevance of State or local residence to voting in a presidential election, one is quickly forced to conclude that these are clear cases of "discrimination by law."

We pollsters have been complaining for years that only two-thirds of the electorate bother to vote—and that's in good years. This not only limits the democratic process but also inconveniences us by making election prediction more difficult.

Actually, we have been a bit unfair to the electorate, for a large proportion of those berated nonvoters are in that category through no fault of their own. In the 1960 presidential elections, 66 percent of voting-age citizens voted.

But of those citizens who actually met all State voting requirements, a larger 82 percent voted. Clearly, changes in those voting requirements would do more to "get out the vote" than any amount of preaching about the virtues of voting by public opinion pollsters or citizens' groups.

The proof lies in the actual voting records of the various States. In Idaho, where there is permanent tax-free registration and voters are allowed to register up to 3 days before the election, where only 6 months' residence in the State and 30 days in the county are required, where there is a liberal absentee voting law, 81 percent of the voting population voted in 1960.

In contrast, Mississippi, which requires 2 years' residence in the State and 1 year in the election district, which (except for the military) has a poll tax and no absentee voting, and which requires voters "to read, write, and interpret reasonably any section of the State constitution," had a 1960 turnout of 26 percent.

The eight States at the top of the turnout list—Idaho, New Hampshire, Utah, the Dakotas, West Virginia, Minnesota, and Connecticut—all have laws that facilitate voting.

The eight States at the bottom of the list—Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Virgina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and, finally, Mississippi—have laws that raise formidable barriers to voting. In the case of Negroes, these barriers are no doubt raised intentionally, but their effects extend farther than intended.

Around the period of any presidential election a certain amount of public feeling is aroused about such potential sources of voting injustice as the presidential primary and the electoral college.

Even the President recently wrote off any hope of doing anything about the imbedded electoral college, but perhaps enough public concern remains to provide the impetus to change some outmoded State election laws. Here are some changes suggested by experts and supported by the American Heritage Foundation, which might well be passed on to interested groups and legislators:

1. To facilitate the voting of movers in a nation increasingly on the move (a generally well-educated and thus highly qualified voting group), state residence requirements for local, State, and congressional elections should be reduced to 6 months and county requirements to 30 days. Residence requirements for voting in presidential elections should be pared to a minimum (Ohio now requires 40 days' residence), and people who move just before election day should be allowed to vote either in person or by absentee ballot—in the place they moved from.

2. All eligible voters physically unable to get to the polls should be allowed to vote—and register—by mail. Liberalization of the absentee balloting system—a measure supported by a heavy majority of the public—would solve most of the problems of travelers, people living abroad, as well as the sick, disabled and hospitalized.

3. Primaries should be held in late May or early June, instead of the summer, when many people are away on vacation.

4. Ballots should be shortened so that voters are not required to pass judgment on candidates they have never heard of for offices that logically belong under civil service or some other merit system.

5. Uncommunicative legal jargon used to describe propositions and amendments should be replaced by simple, descriptive language.

6. Registration should be permanent and registration lists should be checked annually to avoid fraud.

7. Paper ballots should be eliminated as fast as possible; voting machines or some better device should be substituted.

8. Literacy tests should be prepared by educators and should be objective and discrimination-proof.

If we can get some of the States to make some of these changes, we shall be on our way to that age-old democratic dream: universal suffrage.

FATHER DAMIEN AND THE KALAUPAPA SETTLEMENT

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, 90 years ago this month a young priest arrived at a forlorn settlement in the Hawaiian Islands to dedicate his life to the care of a colony of lepers. For 16 years, Father Joseph Damien de Veuster labored among the lepers until finally he himself became afflicted with the same disease and died a martyr's death.

The poignant story of the "Martyr of Molokai"—his life of self-sacrifice, his indomitable courage in rendering succor and solace to the outcasts in the leper colony—is related in an article which appeared in the Honolulu Star-Bulletin last week, under the byline of an able reporter, Chuck Frankel.

Father Damien's memory is held in such high esteem and affection and his work among the lepers regarded as so heroic that his many admirers have suggested a statue of the "Martyr of Molokai" be placed in Statuary Hall in this Capitol.

It is significant that the religious order of which he was a member—the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, more popularly known as the Picpus Fathers—is promoting the cause for Father Damien's beatification so that eventually he may be elevated to the rank of sainthood in the Catholic Church.

In noting the anniversary of the beginning of Father Damien's ministrations on Molokai, where a modern, efficient Hansen's disease settlement stands today, I should like to pay tribute to the

We have often heard that Americans are less interested in the voting process than any democratic citizenry in the world. As each election rolls around, "get out the vote" campaigns are cranked up and we are told endlessly what a shame it is that only about six out of ten Americans bother to vote in presidential campaigns, and are exhorted to do something about it.

Frankly, The Observer has not been given to this sort of thing. We feel that while it would be eminently desirable if the American people all felt motivated to express their political choices at the polls, the quality of the choice is not greatly enhanced by shaming those who are neither interested nor informed into voting merely for the sake of voting.

Actually, the American voter is a lot more diligent than he is given credit for being. He is often unfavorably compared with Englishmen and Canadians, who regularly turn out to vote in a ratio of eight out of ten. Yet when we subtract all the Americans who are prevented from voting in presidential elections by registration laws and other handicaps, we find that in this country, too, eight of ten adults of voting age actually do vote.

By next December, the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation, which included North Carolina's Bert Bennett, will come up with detailed findings about the things that keep 37.5 million Americans of voting age away from the polls. Hopefully, this added publicity to the problem will induce more states to improve their records.

Some reasonable generalizations and factual observations can be made on the problem in advance of the commission's report.

In the 1960 presidential election, the 11 states with the poorest turnout of civilians of voting age were the states of the old Confederacy. North Carolina led the group with 54.3 per cent and Mississippi trailed with an abysmally low 25.6 per cent.

It is obvious that to some extent, citizens in one-party states are less involved in politics. In recent southern elections where Republicans have put up strong opposition, the vote turnout has increased markedly. At the same time, this generalization can be stretched too far. The Dakotas, Maine and Vermont rank relatively high in the percentage of adults voting.

Wealth seems to have little direct bearing. While the relatively poor southern states are at the bottom, only two of the top ten voting states have per capita incomes that are higher than the national average.

It is notable that more than six million persons were disenfranchised in 1960 because they moved. The three states which have two-year residence requirements have an average adult voting participation of around 30 per cent. Fortunately, North Carolina recently corrected the situation here with a constitutional amendment.

The systematic ban against Negroes in some southern states, the poll tax (now on its way out), and lack of absentee ballot provisions have disenfranchised several millions more.

The correction of all these flaws and massive, regular participation will not guarantee good government. The fact that Massachusetts ranked 10th in voting participation and North Carolina 40th is proof enough.

But when 80 per cent of the citizenry turn out, the odds certainly go up in the public's favor.

reaction to the way that President Johnson has taken on the duties of the Presidency.

I am happy to report that Minnesotans responded with their usual intelligence and basic commonsense, with a vote of 93 percent favorable.

Only 2 percent of those polled in the State of Minnesota were unfavorably impressed.

Mr. President, this is so nearly unanimous that one can say for all practical purposes that the people of Minnesota have absolute confidence in our new President, and that when he runs for reelection this year, he will be accorded another tremendous vote of confidence at the polls.

While the Minnesota poll is perhaps the most outstanding record of the American public's confidence in our new President, I am also pleased to report, following a meeting with the political leadership of the Democratic Party from the 14 States of the Midwest Conference of the Democratic Party, that President Johnson is accorded extremely high support from all the polls taken in those 14 States. It is the considered judgment of these experienced political officers that President Johnson will carry the Midwest against any Republican candidate by a margin only comparable to that enjoyed by President Roosevelt in his first reelection in 1936.

Over and over again, the reports from the Midwest are that here is a President who is strong, who is confident, who is a leader, who has a heart. Midwesterners were deeply impressed by the way in which the President took over the reins of office after the assassination of our beloved President Kennedy with not a falter, without a tremor. From labor, from business, from the farmers, from the housewives, and from young people and old, I have received countless expressions of gratification that President Johnson is proving to be the kind of President that President Kennedy would have wished him to be.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the Minneapolis Sunday Tribune of December 22, 1963, entitled "Ninety-three Percent Like Way Johnson Took Over." It is good reading for everyone who is interested in the affairs of our Nation.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NINETY-THREE PERCENT LIKE WAY JOHNSON TOOK OVER

Minnesotans are in overwhelming agreement about President Johnson on these two points:

They like the way Mr. Johnson has taken on the duties of the Presidency since the death of John F. Kennedy.

They expect he will be nominated by the Democratic Party for President in 1964.

In a statewide survey by the Minneapolis Tribune's Minnesota poll, those two points of view are expressed by Minnesota men and women, regardless of place of residence in the State, age, education, or political affiliation.

A question which poll field reporters put to a balanced sampling of voting-age residents in December was:

"When it comes to the way Lyndon B. Johnson has taken on the duties of the Presidency, are you favorable or unfavorably impressed?"

Ninety-three percent of the people say they are favorably impressed by the manner in which Mr. Johnson assumed his Presidential responsibilities. Two percent have unfavorable reactions, and 5 percent are noncommittal.

When people with favorable reactions were asked what his impressed them most about President Johnson, they answered in these ways:

	Percent
L.B.J. is decisive, efficient, kept Government operating	38
Like his decision to continue Kennedy administration policies and personnel, provides continuity	27
L.B.J. well prepared for Presidency, experienced in politics	20
L.B.J. personal qualities: Friendly, honest,, sincere, patient, aggressive, courageous	11
Other answers	20
Don't know	6
Total	122

(The column totals more than 100 percent because many Minnesotans cited several things about President Johnson that impressed them.)

People also mention that President Johnson is trying to do his best for the whole Nation, approve of his speeches and manner of speaking, feel that he is determined to cut Government spending, and give a variety of other favorable reactions.

State residents also were asked:

"President Johnson has asked all members of the Kennedy cabinet to stay in office. In the next few months, do you expect there will be quite a few changes in the cabinet, or not very many?"

	Percent
Quite a few changes will take place in Cabinet	12
Not very many	62
None	21
Total	100

When asked what changes might take place in the President's cabinet, only 28 percent of the entire sample suggested any specific cabinet posts. Singled out most frequently were Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, the late President's brother, and Secretary of Agriculture Orville Freeman.

Another question in the survey was:

"Do you think Lyndon B. Johnson will be the Democratic Party's 1964 candidate in the Presidential race, or do you think someone else is more apt to be nominated?"

	Percent
L.B.J. will be nominated	91
Someone else will be nominated	5

REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON REGISTRATION AND VOTING PARTICIPATION

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on March 30, 1963, the late President Kennedy established by Executive order the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation. The Commission, under the chairmanship of the distinguished political scientist, Richard M. Scammon, Director, Bureau of the Census, was charged with a most critical task: to determine the reasons for low voter turnout in America and to recommend solutions for this condition.

The Commission entered upon a detailed study and analysis of the election laws and practices of the 50 States. A wide variety of expert opinion was sought and considered. The voting practices in other democracies were studied and compared with those prevalent in America. In November the Commission filed its report with President Johnson.

I have recently read this outstanding document. The Commission enumerates 21 specific standards relating to registration and voting which should serve as guides for equitable procedures in the several States. These are recommendations which every Member of Congress and every American should read carefully; moreover, the Congress and the State legislatures should be prepared to act promptly on these recommendations.

Why do I say this? I quote from the Commission's report:

> Voting in the United States is the fundamental act of self-government. It provides the citizen in our free society the right to make a judgment, to state a choice, to participate in the running of his government—in the community, the State, and the Nation. The ballot box is the medium for the expression of the consent of the governed.

Surely no citizen of America can disagree with this description of voting as the fundamental act of self-government. If this assumption is accepted, the fact that one-third of our adults do not vote in presidential elections and one-half do not vote in congressional elections is indeed deeply disturbing. The Commission has attributed this poor record of voting participation to psychological and legal factors and has outlined various procedures for attacking both these sources of nonregistration and nonvoting.

I would like to compliment the distinguished membership of the Commission and the able staff, under the direction of my good friend, Prof. Donald G. Herzberg, of the Eagleton Institute and Douglass College. It is my great privilege to know personally a number of the Commissioners; this fact only heightens my admiration for the distinct service they have rendered this Nation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the report of the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON REGISTRATION AND VOTING PARTICIPATION, NOVEMBER 1963

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON REGISTRATION AND VOTING PARTICIPATION,
Washington, D.C., November 26, 1963.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Your Executive order of March 30 creating this Commission charged it with the responsibility of studying the reasons for low voter turnout in America and of recommending solutions for this condition.

During the past 8 months, the Commission has made a detailed analysis of the election laws and practices of the 50 States and has studied the electoral systems of other democracies. It has solicited the opinions of many hundreds of citizens in the fields of National, State, and local government, politics, civic and social work and political science. Staff members of the Commission have interviewed a number of officials directly concerned with election administration at the State, county, and municipal levels.

The Commission has met regularly to discuss the implications of the information which has been compiled, and to draw up the report which we now have the honor to submit.

We are most grateful, Mr. President, both for the opportunity you have given us to make a comprehensive study of this subject, and for your continuing interest in our work.

Respectfully,

Richard M. Scammon, Chairman; Bert L. Bennett, Jr., Brendan Byrne, Robert A. Forsythe, Evron M. Kirkpatrick, J. Bradshaw Mintener, John A. Perkins, Ruth Schertz Phillips, Roy L. Reuther, Victoria Schuck, and Leon H. Washington, Jr.

SUMMARY

One-third of our adults do not vote in presidential elections, and more than half do not vote in congressional elections. The reasons for America's low voter participation are both psychological and legal.

Psychological causes of low turnout must be attacked by education and educational programs. Every citizen and group has a responsibility to join in this effort.

The Commission endorses the practice of comprehensive register-and-vote campaigns to encourage and inform potential voters. We specifically call for a new effort by our schools in the teaching of citizenship, and we underscore the great responsibility of parents in citizenship education.

The Commission strongly believes that effective two-party competition in all areas of the Nation will build and maintain interest in public affairs and lead to greater voter participation. We commend the two-party system and all efforts to strengthen that system.

Restrictive legal and administrative procedures in registration and voting disfranchise millions. To overcome such restrictions, taking into account the disparity in law and practice among the States, we recommend the following specific standards:

Standard I: Each State should create a commission on registration and voting participation, or utilize some other existing State machinery to survey in detail its election law and practices.

Standard II: Voter registration should be easily accessible to all citizens.

Standard III: State residence requirements should not exceed 6 months.

Standard IV: Local residence requirements should not exceed 30 days.

Standard V: New State residents should be allowed to vote for President.

Standard VI: Voter registration should extend as close to election day as possible, and should not end more than 3 or 4 weeks before election day.

Standard VII: Voter lists should be kept current.

Standard VIII: No citizen's registration should be canceled for failure to vote in any period less than 4 years.

Standard IX: Voter registration lists should be used only for electoral purposes.

Standard X: States should provide absentee registration for voters who cannot register in person.

Standard XI: Literacy tests should not be a requisite for voting.

Standard XII: Election day should be proclaimed a national day of dedication to our American democracy.

Standard XIII: Polling places should be so equipped as to eliminate long waiting periods.

Standard XIV: Polling places should be open throughout the day and remain open until at least 9 p.m.

Standard XV: The States should provide every possible protection against election fraud.

Standard XVI: Voting by persons 18 years of age should be considered by the States.

Standard XVII: Candidacy should be open to all.

Standard XVIII: The right to vote should be extended to those living on Federal reservations.

Standard XIX: Absentee voting by mail should be allowed for all who are absent from home on primary or general election day.

Standard XX: The poll tax as a qualification for voting should be eliminated.

Standard XXI: Each State should keep informed on other States practices, and innovations in election administration.

The implementation of these standards will guarantee the right to vote to every citizen, assuring in fact what we proclaim in theory—the supremacy of the individual in American political life.

CHAPTER 1. THE DIMENSIONS OF THE PROBLEM

Voting in the United States is the fundamental act of self-government. It provides the citizen in our free society the right to make a judgment, to state a choice, to participate in the running of his government—in the community, the State, and the Nation. The ballot box is the medium for the expression of the consent of the governed.

Those who vote do so for many reasons. To some, voting may be a patriotic duty. To others it may be the culmination of work and effort in behalf of a candidate or a political party. Still others may regard it as a serious responsibility to insure the continuation of freedoms which the right to vote protects. The citizen who does not vote relinquishes the opportunity to govern.

It is a tribute to the vitality of our Republic that since the founding of our Nation, we have never canceled or postponed an election scheduled by the Federal or State Constitutions or by statute. No civil war, world war, epidemic, or depression has halted our electoral machinery.

It is also significant that throughout our history of unhindered elections, we have maintained a system of voluntary voting. Nothing in this country makes voting mandatory—unless it is the conscience of the voter himself. The American people have always rejected, and the Commission rejects now, any system of compulsory voting.

The voluntary nature of voting is a strength in our election system. As one of the oldest democracies in the world, with a tradition of free elections and voluntary balloting, we should have one of the world's best voting records. Though our ideal is universal suffrage, a substantial number of our people cannot or do not choose to vote.

U.S. turnout has fluctuated

American elections have not always been characterized by low voter participation. Turnout was consistently high in the later 1800's, with a peak of 85.8 percent of adult enfranchised males voting in 1876. Yet in the early 1900's, voter participation declined steadily, dwindling to 44.2 percent in 1920. It never reached 60 percent in the era of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and has only slightly exceeded that percentage in the past decade.

Still fewer people vote in congressional elections. Since 1920, the national turnout in nonpresidential election years has never touched 50 percent, ranging from a low of 30.1 percent in 1926 to a high of 48.9 percent in 1962. Voter participation in congressional elections is significantly greater in years when a President is chosen.

Election systems and electoral participation vary from State to State. In the 1960 presidental election, voter participation was highest in Idaho, where 80.7 percent of the adult population went to the polls. (See app. 3 for turnout percentages for all States.) Consistently, the Southern States send the lowest proportion of their citizens to the polls. Although the development of a two-party system in several parts of the South has been accompanied by an increase in voter participation, turnout in Southern States remains relatively low, ranging in 1960 from 25.5 percent in Mississippi to 53.5 percent in North Carolina. In some Southern States, party primary elections have attracted more voters than the general election.

The Executive order establishing the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation specifically exempts it from exploring matters placed under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. Consequently, we have not dealt directly with the problems over which it has primary jurisdiction. Our Commission unanimously endorses the right of every adult citizen to vote, whatever his race, color, religion, or national origin.[1]

Other democracies do better

Voter participation in the United States is often contrasted with participation in other countries. It should be pointed out, however, that turnout figures for other countries are not strictly comparable to U.S. figures. The different basis of calculation tend somewhat to inflate foreign participation figures and deflate U.S. figures. The statistical chasm, for example, between the U.S. turnout of 63.8 percent and Denmark's 85.5 percent in 1960 would not be so wide if identical measures were used.

Even with adjusted figures, the plain fact remains that citizens of other democracies vote in greater relative numbers than Americans. The United States, leader of the free world, lags behind many other free countries in voter participation.

Voter turnout in Italy, for example, has topped 92 percent in each of the last four national elections. All Italian citizens over 21 (other than felons, bankrupts, and the mentally ill) are eligible to vote, with the exception that 25 is the minimum age for voting for Italian senators. Italy's procedure for registration and voting is direct and simple. Municipal and communal officials compile lists of electors, resulting in the automatic registration of nearly all eligible persons. A citizen whose name is inadvertently omitted from the list can easily restore it. Italians vote on Sunday and until Monday noon.

Participation in West Germany's Federal elections has almost matched Italy's performance, ranging from 78.5 to 87.8 percent during the last 15 years. Like Italy, West Germany utilizes automatic registration and imposes no literacy or property requirements for voting. Elections are held on Sunday.

Participation in Canada's last three general elections has approximated 80 percent, with voting usually on a Monday. Canadian registration law provides that enumerators must visit each dwelling in the country and register every possible voter. The statutory voting age in Canada is 21, although any member of the armed forces on active duty may vote regardless of age.

The Scandinavian countries also enjoy high voter turnout. In every recent national election in Finland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, participation has been significantly greater than in the United States. Registration procedures in the Scandinavian countries are similar to those in Italy and West Germany, with local government units taking the initiative to enroll every potential voter.

In sum, a citizen of another democracy is more likely to vote than is an American. What accounts for the widespread failure to exercise democracy's most fundamental and precious freedom? Why do so many Americans—in 1960, more than 35 million—not vote on election day? The answers to these questions fall into two main categories: psychological and legal.

Psychological causes of low voter turnout

By far the most important psychological factor affecting an individual's decision to vote is his identification with a political party. A strong Democrat or Republican, as our studies show, is much more likely to cast a ballot than a person who feels little or no allegiance to a party. When an election is expected to be close, the strong partisan is even more inclined to vote.

Of course, this is not to say that all or even most nonpartisan or independent voters have poor voting records, but the voter who identifies himself with a party seems to be more regular in his balloting. Beyond party commitment, a person is likely to vote if he has a personal interest in the candidate, campaign, or issues; if he becomes concerned about the outcome of an election; or if he feels that his vote will be fairly counted and may really make a difference.

Taken together, these variables add up to the elector's sense of political involvement. Studies of recent presidential elections show that persons whose involvement was low were less likely to vote.

Characteristics such as education, age, and sex also relate closely to voter involvement and participation. The more formal educational experience a person has had, the more likely he is to be politically involved, to feel that his vote counts, and to vote. Our research also shows that voter participation tends to increase with age until the late fifties. Young people not only vote less than older persons but are less strongly allied with political parties.

In addition, young people move most frequently. As a consequence, precisely those persons least involved in politics often must overcome an added obstacle to voting. The older person is more highly motivated to vote and less likely to have to go through the process of registration. The younger person is less involved in politics to start with, he moves more often, and he must expend more time and effort to stay on the registration books.

Voter participation among women is approximately 10 percent lower than among men. Since women are a significantly larger element in our adult population than men, their lower participation tends to reduce the national average.

Legal and administrative causes of low voter turnout

Restrictive legal and administrative procedures for registration and voting are a major reason for low participation. Many election laws and administrative practices are unreasonable, unfair, and outmoded. They obstruct the path to the ballot box, disfranchising millions who want to vote. An unexpected business trip or a broken ankle can deprive a citizen of his right to vote. He may lose his vote by moving across the street. And he may discover that because he failed to vote 2 years ago he cannot vote now.

Registration systems: The exercise of the franchise in the United States usually requires two deliberate acts on two different days: registration and voting. The finest voting system in the world is of no avail if registration inhibits participation. Registration procedures often require a visit to the county courthouse, with such attendant inconveniences as making the trip during working hours and standing in long lines. Although the great majority of States provides permanent registration, only half enable voters to register in their precincts rather than at one county office. Only 17 States allow registration by mail. (See app. 2 below for summary of State voting laws.)

Registration systems originally were established to provide up-to-date lists of eligible voters to prevent multiple voting and other electoral frauds. But often the systems used have had a quite different effect. Frequently registration has become an obstacle course for the voter rather than an assistance to voting.

A different problem is posed by registration provisions designed for the simple purpose of preventing people from voting and so keeping political power in the hands of one or another group. For example, one State is considering a plan to cut off registration many months before election day.

In too many States, registration closes more than a month before the election, when political campaigns are not in full swing and peak interest has not been achieved. Early closing dates coupled with the inconvenience of many registration procedures discourage potential voters. Unlike registration systems in other Western democracies, where the initiative is with local officials and the process is simple and direct, registration in the United States often imposes undue burdens on citizens who desire to vote.

Residence requirements: Residence qualifications serve two principal purposes: allowing the voter to become acquainted with local problems and candidates, and preventing election fraud. Yet they also prevent many citizens from voting in presidential elections. Some States have attempted to meet this problem: 15 now permit presidential voting by new residents and seven allow former residents to vote for President. Similarly, some States permit intercounty and interprecinct movers to vote by absentee ballot in the precinct where they formerly voted.

Yet such modernization has been slow and has not kept pace with hour high rate of population mobility. It has been estimated, for example, that 4 million citizens were disfranchised by residence requirements in 1950, 5 million in 1954, and 8 million in 1960. In a public opinion survey of the 1952 presidential election, 12 percent of the nonvoters cited residence requirements as their reason for not voting.

U.S. Census Bureau figures reveal that more than 20 million adults changed residence in 1961. Of these, 13 million moved within their counties, 6 million moved from county to county, and 3 million moved from State to State. Such a high rate of mobility is likely to continue, and millions of Americans will discover that change of residence— from State to State, county to county, or even street to street—may deprive them of their vote.

Absentee provisions: Absentee voting laws also disfranchise many potential voters. In 16 States, more than mere absence is required for absentee voting, with the result that businessmen, students, vacationers, and handicapped and incapacitated persons often cannot vote. Three States do not even provide for civilian absentee balloting of any kind.

All States now allow absentee voting by members of the Armed Forces, and 47 States provide a similar mechanism for civilian Federal employees. Yet civilians residing on Federal reservations under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government are denied the right to vote in all but three States. Since many of these persons have no State residence, they lose the power to exercise their franchise.

Election day problems: Many election day procedures also discourage citizens from voting. Polling places in many areas close in late afternoon or early evening and potential voters who are not allowed time off from work to vote must rush to the polls during the time of heaviest voting. The early closing hours dissuade many from making the effort. Polling places are sometimes relatively inaccessible to voters. Overpopulated precincts cause long lines which may turn away potential voters. In addition, lengthy ballots and frequent elections often cause "voter fatigue."

The act of voting—like the act of registration—often is onerous. In some States it is easier to get a hunting or fishing license or a pistol permit than to register and vote. Today, the average American must expect to go to the polls often, or if not often, to face a complicated ballot when he does. The polling place may be crowded, and he may expect to wait in line. In the face of unreasonable inconvenience, he may elect to stay home on election day.

CHAPTER 2. THE REMEDIES FOR VOLUNTARY NONVOTING

The citizen who does not bother to vote is both a source of despair and a challenge. To increase his desire to vote, many groups have made him the focus of appeal and persuasion. Their efforts have sometimes been intense and continuing, sometimes half-hearted and sporadic. In specific instances they have succeeded, and the unmotivated citizen has marked his ballot. In general they have failed, and low voter turnout persists.

Apathy, unconcern, and indifference, coupled with the notion that one vote does not count, constitute a troubling condition which no pat formula can quickly rectify. Yet certain remedies are capable of improving voter turnout.

The most obvious method of combating apathy is a register-and-vote campaign. Political parties, civic, business, and labor groups, public bodies and officials employ the techniques of publicity and persuasion to encourage citizens to register and vote.

A good example is the campaign of Philadelphia's Non-Partisan Register and Vote Committee. The work of this organization is made possible by the city's modern registration laws, which permit mobile, branch, and inplant registration.

Directed by civic and governmental leaders, the Philadelphia committee enlists the aid of practically every type of communication medium and almost all community groups. Labor and management, women's organizations, youth groups, civic, fraternal, and veterans' organizations, professional groups, editors, broadcasters, and businessmen, municipal employees, schoolchildren—all these and many others contribute to the assault on apathy. Registration week—for newly naturalized citizens, young voters, married persons, people who have moved—publicize registration requirements. Register-and-vote messages are sounded in baseball parks, theaters, and other places of public recreation. Schoolchildren bring similar messages home to their parents.

All mail of Philadelphia city agencies, as well as telephone and gas bills, contains register-and-vote reminders. Announcements are made at all city functions. A labor-management subcommittee arranges inplant registration. In the month before registration closes, boxes appear regularly in local newspapers detailing the schedule of traveling registrars and the days remaining in the registration period. Political leaders receive flyers for distribution telling citizens how and where to register.

Drives produce results

gram. The result of such effort has been a marked increase in voter participation.

In 1956, a concentrated, weeklong registration drive in Davenport, Iowa, added 2,267 names—one-third of the city's nonregistrants—to the registration rolls. Radio and television, newspapers, schools, churches, city officials, and more than 20 community organizations worked to give Davenport block-by-block coverage in the drive.

In the same year, Wausau, Wis., and Highland Park, Ill., engaged in a contest to see which city would be the first to register 100 percent of its citizens. Massive, heavily publicized campaigns, employing many of the techniques outlined above, produced impressive results in both cities. Highland Park registered 99.4 percent of its potential voters and Wausau was close behind with 99.1 percent. A followup, get-out-the-vote campaign in Wausau produced a 90.7-percent turnout on election day.

Stirring people up is in the best tradition of American politics, and we commend the practice of well-organized, comprehensive register-and-vote campaigns. Yet exhortation alone cannot do the job, and such campaigns are superficial if they consist only of admonitory slogans, however well-publicized and oft repeated. Increasing the number of citizens who journey to the polls should not be merely an exercise in coaxing.

What publicity and persuasion can and should accomplish is the nourishing of a meaningful sense of political participation. The worthwhile register-and-vote campaign transcends mere emotional appeal and strikes at the core of apathy. For while encouragement is important, information is vital, and the meaningful register-and-vote campaign both encourages and informs. It tells people whether they must register, and how, when, and where to do it. It tells people about the mechanics of voting. And it tells them about the candidates and issues.

Such an educational approach can boost a citizen's desire to vote. It can attack directly the psychological causes of low voter participation.

One vote does count

The educational register-and-vote campaign should take special aim at the citizen who thinks his vote does not count. History discredits that notion.

In 1884, less than one additional vote per precinct in one State would have elected James G. Blaine President. He lost to Grover Cleveland in New York by only 1,149 votes out of a total of 1,125,159. If he had carried New York, he would have won the election.

In 1948, President Truman won Ohio by 7,107 votes and California by 17,865. If one voter in only half the precincts in those States had changed his mind, Governor Dewey would have captured 50 more electoral votes, President Truman would have lost 50, and the election would have been thrown into the House of Representatives.

In 1960, John F. Kennedy's national plurality was less than one vote per precinct. He defeated Vice President Nixon by less than 120,000 votes out of almost 69 million votes cast.

A single vote was never more valuable than in 1962. The Governor of Massachusetts was elected by only 5,341 votes; the Governor of North Dakota was elected by only 2,007; the Governor of Vermont by 1,348; the Governor of Maine by 483; the Governor of Rhode Island by 398; and the Governor of Minnesota, after 3 months of recounting and certifying ballots, was elected by the hairline margin of 91 votes.

Also in 1962, Alabama came within 6,803 votes of electing its first Republican to the U.S. Senate. South Dakota elected a Senator by 597 votes. Minnesota's 6th Congressional District elected its U.S. Representative by 348 votes, and New York's 15th District elected its Congressman by 383.

A lone ballot has often meant victory or defeat in local elections. A mayor and a city treasurer in Ohio, a councilman in Arizona, a State legislator in Pennsylvania—all recently won office by one vote. On November 5, 1963, a candidate for councilman in a Cincinnati suburb was hospitalized for an emergency appendectomy and was unable to go to the polls. He lost by one vote.

We could fill this report with additional proof of the importance of a single ballot, but these examples make the point. We strongly urge register-and-vote committees to direct their fire at the citizen who thinks he is politically helpless. Every means of publicity and public information should be used to bury the myth that one vote does not count.

Each citizen can help

The task of informing citizens and urging them to register and vote is the responsibility of all of us. Businesses should encourage voter participation among employees by providing time off for voting. Labor unions should encourage members to take advantage of such provisions, and should seek to arrange in-plant registration. Civic and fraternal organizations should encourage members to be registered. State and local governments could designate registration weeks for young people, new citizens, and other groups. Clergymen might wish to call attention to registration and voting campaigns.

Leadership for such local efforts to improve voter participation has long been provided by the American Heritage Foundation. Through a variety of programs, this organization has stimulated citizen and group interest in public affairs, and has waged a continuing battle against low voter turnout.

Special efforts are needed by youth groups and women's organizations. Young people, the least politically active segment of the population, should be encouraged to participate in politics. Local communities, where State law permits, could designate young volunteer registrars, not only to enroll persons of the same age group but also to infuse register-and-vote drives with dynamism. Alternatively, States and communities should authorize canvassing by young people to inform citizens of their rights and obligations as voters, and of the mechanics of registration and voting. Young members of social, professional, civic, fraternal, and other groups would perform effectively in registration drives, particularly in areas where there are many young couples.

We have noted that fewer women than men vote. Women's organizations can strike a major blow against the notion that only men should be concerned with politics and government. Women, often with more time than men to devote to public affairs, have a unique opportunity to inform and encourage all citizens. The League of Women Voters in many States has taken the lead in disseminating information about the electoral system and about particular campaigns and candidates. We look forward to the continuation and expansion of the League's activities, and urge all women's organizations to engage actively in similar and cooperative programs.

We must underscore the responsibility of the mass communications media in combating voluntary nonvoting. Newspapers, radio, and television command—indeed, monopolize—the attention of the American electorate. In a sense, they are quasi-public institutions, responsible to the public. They hold the key to adult education.

We urge newspapers to cooperate with register-and-vote campaigns by printing the details of registration and voting procedures as well as campaign and candidate information. We urge radio and television to expand the public service time devoted to debates and forums, and to inform listeners when, where, and how to register and vote.

We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of the communications media. Attempts to reduce voluntary nonvoting depend in large measure on the custodians of the printed and spoken word. If information is to reach the apathetic citizen, it must reach him primarily through mass media channels.

Importance of education

These approaches to the problem of nonvoting will not in themselves create a nation of instant voters and obliterate apathy. Greater motivation and better understanding must be achieved, and that achievement depends on formal education.

It is not enough merely to transfer the problem to an abstraction called education, and confidently await a future when all citizens magically will be more learned. Education is the best hope, but that hope will die unfulfilled unless educators make a new effort. We must face the fact that our schools are not doing the job.

The teaching of citizenship in our elementary and secondary schools needs a major overhaul. A trip to the firehouse and a slide down the fireman's pole are now many times substituted for realistic instruction in government and politics. American education has failed to do justice to politics and politicians. The failure is part of a larger failure—American education has placed too little emphasis on subject matter that will provide a broad understanding of our system of government. The school child tends to be taught social studies passively. He is not shown in a meaningful way how he as a person relates to his world. His responsibilities as a citizen in a free society are not made clear.

It is small wonder that we are a nation of cynics when it comes to our politics.

Social studies courses and textbooks should be reexamined; there is an urgent need to develop new curricula.

One certain outgrowth of a successful reappraisal of our teaching will be a better understanding of government by our children. Our children can learn what citizenship in this Nation implies—both its privileges and responsibilities. And this learning can be done in ways that are meaningful to students at different age levels.

In addition, much can be done to supplement the academic effort and to stimulate student interest. Mock elections can be held; candidates and political leaders can be brought into meetings with students; significant, not just ceremonial, field trips to the city hall, the courthouse, and the State capitol can be arranged. Opportunities are limitless to awaken student interest and demonstrate to them the relationship between their vote and the operation of government.

Responsibility for education in politics rests also in the home. How many parents talk to their children about the act of voting—what it means and what it accomplishes? How many parents take their children to the polls or to election return centers on election night? Here is where children can sense that something significant is happening even though they may not be capable of understanding it fully. This type of family activity will serve to upgrade the importance of voting in young minds.

Partisanship helps

A great ally of education in the long-range fight against apathy is politics itself—the two-party system. Effective two-party competition prompts political involvement, spurs interest in politics and campaigns, and strengthens a person's feeling that his vote counts. We believe that two-party competition is essential to build and maintain interest in public affairs, and consequently leads to greater voter participation. It is no coincidence that the growth of the Republican Party in the South has impelled many more voters of both parties toward the polls.

The entirely commendable efforts of nonpartisan groups and citizens to encourage voting and interest in public affairs should receive the encouragement of every citizen and be considered complementary to, and not as the rival of, effective two-party activity. Although studies have demonstrated the committed, party-oriented voter to be better informed, more concerned about public affairs, and more likely to vote than his uncommitted neighbor, there are citizens who prefer to work on many issues with a nonpartisan group.

CHAPTER 3. INVOLUNTARY NONVOTING

To make recommendations with respect to the involuntary nonvoter, the Commission had first to consider in detail the general authority and jurisdiction exercised over elections in this country.

Under our Federal system of Government, constitutional responsibilities for elections are divided between the Nation and the State. Every election held in the United States is within the jurisdiction of both the National Government and the State governments to some degree.

Varying points of view arose within the Commission on the point of the division of authority and power between the United States and the several States in the conduct of Federal elections. These viewpoints are set forth below:

"Commissioner BYRNE. Not being a constitutional lawyer or a member of the judiciary, I don't feel qualified to try to unravel this esoteric problem. Perhaps, one practical way to make progress in this delicate area—were we to prescind from the controversial subject of bona fide literacy tests—would be to offer the following proposed constitutional amendment for study, public discussion and consideration by the Congress and the States:

" 'SECTION 1

" 'Every citizen of the United States of the age of 18 years, or older, who has resided in any State or territory 6 months and in the voting precinct 30 days, shall be entitled to vote at any election therein, in which candidates for any public office are elected (but in primary elections, only if he is an enrolled member of the party), except that the privilege of voting shall not extend to persons in confinement for crime nor to persons adjudicated unsound of mind; and no citizen of voting age shall be deprived of the right to vote for presidential and vice-presidential electors because of failure to meet State residence requirements by having changed his address before the elections.

" 'Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.'

"The proposed amendment, it is hoped, would engender further study, clarification and understanding of this vital constitutional question—the essential preliminaries to an ultimate solution."

"Commissioner FORSYTHE. This Commission was charged with studying the problem of low voter participation in both presidential and congressional elections. These two types of national elections are constitutionally dissimilar from each other and from State elections.

"Presidential elections are primarily under State control because the composition of the electoral college is a matter for State determination. Since all States today elect rather than appoint their presidential electors, national antidiscrimination powers apply to presidential elections. If the electoral college fails to elect a President, the responsibility passes to the U.S. House of Representatives.

"Under our Constitution there are lines of demarcation between the powers of the Federal Government and those of the State governments in the election of Congressmen and U.S. Senators.

"The Constitution, by article I, section 2, and the 17th amendment, states most explicitly that those persons voting for Representatives and U.S. Senators shall possess the same qualifications as those entitled to vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. It would appear clear that the qualifications prescribed by the States for electors of the most numerous branch of their legislatures are adopted by this provision of the Constitution as the qualifications for the election of Representatives and U.S. Senators.

"Article I, section 4, of the Constitution states: 'The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulation * * *.' This provision, however, does not speak of the 'qualifications' of voters.

"Congressional and senatorial elections are also subject to amendments XIV, XV, and XIX of the Federal Constitution.

"As a result of these constitutional provisions, the States occupy primary jurisdiction over elections, including elections of U.S. Representatives and U.S. Senators. The Congress itself holds to this theory of State authority in the matter of voter qualification as evidenced by the fact that throughout our history the main concerns of Congress have been to set the date for its own election and to regulate campaign expenditures and fraudulent practices. The Congress has not seen fit to challenge the basic doctrine of State responsibility in establishing voter qualification. There is no indication that the Congress today would act to change the present system.

"It is for this very reason that the Commission in this report proceeds to recommend standards for States to consider in regard to changes in voter qualification requirements rather than recommendations for congressional action."

"Commissioner KIRKPATRICK (Commissioners Bennett, Perkins, and Scammon concurred). While the question of the constitutional right of Congress to determine voter qualifications will be settled only by congressional action and judicial review, I believe that Congress does have such power. I particularly believe this is the case with respect to congressional power to correct or prevent discriminatory State action that denies the vote to Negroes. Such denial is clearly forbidden by the Constitution and I believe Congress has the power to make that prohibition effective. At the same time, with the exception of corrective congressional action in the case of the denial of the vote to Negroes, I believe the general determination or regulation of voter qualifications is best left to the several States in those matters discussed by this Commission; it is, therefore, to the several States that the recommendations of this Commission should be and are addressed."

"Commissioner SCHUCK (Commissioners Phillips, Reuther, and Washington concurred). The provisions in article I, sections 2 and 4, relating to the election of Senators and Representatives and in article II, section 2 relating to the selection of presidential electors (once the State has determined upon popular election) must be interpreted in light of the subsequent amendments to the Constitution and especially the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 19th amendments. Whatever may have been the situation before 1865, clearly thereafter and in particular in 1868, 1870, and 1920, the preexisting parts of the Constitution which concerned the electoral process, Federal or State, were profoundly altered. Those amendments made a wholly new adjustment between the State and Federal functions in a great many respects including that of electoral processes.

"The States' occupancy of the field of voter qualifications remains subject to all the provisions of the Constitution. Congress is expressly given power to enforce the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments and consequently has the power, and the duty, to eliminate denials of due process or equal protection of the laws whenever it appears that citizens are improperly denied the privilege of participating in the electoral process.

"Should the States continue to require unreasonable registration procedures, residential requirements, etc. Congress should in our opinion exercise its power to correct such unfairness.

"That Congress has such power with respect to elections, both State and Federal, has been made clear in the recent case of Baker v. Carr (369 U.S. 186, 1962) and the series of cases subsequent to it. The Supreme Court has held that equality in electoral influence is a proper right of judicial protection. The last section of the 14th amendment contains a grant of power to the Congress as wide as that granted by the amendment to the Court."

Despite the differing viewpoints represented above, it is the unanimous opinion of the Commission that recommendations for solutions to the immediate problem of low voter participation may be advanced without a resolution of the constitutional questions. It is to that practical end of getting action within the present electoral system that the Commission makes specific recommendations.

These recommendations are made for the consideration of all concerned with our electoral process. Some will affect certain authorities more than others, but the Commission would be gratified if all citizens would consider the suggestions which follow.

Standard I: Each State should create a Commission on Registration and Voting Participation, or utilize some other existing State machinery to survey in detail its election law and practices

The Commission feels that the utilization of a general review of each State's election law and practices by that State would be the most useful way to relate the specifics of this report to the problems of each jurisdiction. This standard can be met through the appointment of a special State commission within the executive branch, by the creation of a State legislative commission, or through the use of existing departments, offices, and officials. The nature of the machinery should include citizen representation and will depend on State evaluation of the best method by which to approach this problem. Some States already have begun such a review.

Local jurisdictions, such as counties and cities, are urged to review in detail their electoral practices and procedures. In many instances the Commission has found that local election administrators will be able to implement these recommended standards wtihout State action.

Standard II: Voter registration should be easily accessible to all citizens

Once a person registers, he is likely to vote. But many people are discouraged, if not barred outright, by complicated and inaccessible registration. In Idaho, where registrars are authorized to canvass house by house, and North Dakota, which has no registration at all, voter turnout is very high.

Registration policies alone did not cause 81 percent of Idaho's potential voters and 79 percent of North Dakota's to turn out for the 1960 presidential election. Other factors were at work. But the average American is far more likely to vote if few barriers stand between him and registration.

Door-to-Door Registration

A number of States and local jurisdictions have developed ways to facilitate registration. Idaho, for example, pays deputy registrars, one in each precinct of the State to keep registration rolls up to date. Door-to-door canvassing is authorized and encouraged. Canada similarly uses teams of enumerators, two in each electoral district, to canvass each residence during the seventh week before every parliamentary election, for the purpose of compiling new and accurate registers of voters. In this manner, each adult receives a personal reminder that he is eligible to vote, that an election is on the way, and that it is in the public interest for him to get on the registration books and go to the polls. Idaho, like Canada, turned out 81 percent of its potential electorate in the most recent major election. The States may learn from the voter registration systems used in Idaho and Canada, and the Commission hopes other States will adopt similar plans.

Deputy Registrars

California has approached the problem of voter registration in a similar manner. There, State law authorizes the appointment of deputy registrars and door-to-door canvassing. The election law of California provides: "County clerks, in order to promote and encourage voter registration, shall enlist the support and cooperation of interested citizens and organizations, and shall deputize as registrars qualified citizens in such a way as to cover most effectively every section of the county (1962 Election Code, p. 52)."

The effectiveness of the law in California, as in other States, depends on the local official in charge of its administration. In Alameda County, for example, the county clerk has compiled a fine instruction booklet for deputy registrars, who in addition have the benefit of instruction in special classes. In Los Angeles County, the registrar of voters has developed an outstanding training program for deputy registrars. Every effort is made to have full and fair registration.

Precinct and Mobile Registration

Another successful method for overcoming inconvenient and ineffective registration systems is precinct, neighborhood, or mobile registration. We are concerned that some States prohibit such registration, despite the wishes and ingenuity of the local officials. These States require a registrant to make what may be a lengthy trip to the county courthouse, perhaps during working hours. Such restrictive laws are the antithesis of the system in Idaho. These prohibitions against local initiative should be repealed.

The Commission recognizes the problem of rising registration and election costs. One effective and inexpensive way to meet these costs is to follow the example of Fresno County, Calif., which has had great success in registering voters at fire stations. This practice might well be broadened in urban areas to make firehouses, police stations, and libraries year-round neighborhood voter registration centers. By utilizing these existing city and county officers and their present staffs, an additional public service could be provided with minimum expenditures. Every citizen can locate these government offices in his neighborhood, and all are open around the clock or beyond normal working hours.

Standard III. State residence requirements should not exceed 6 months

Every year more than 20 million adults in this country move to new residences. Most find themselves without a vote even if they move only across town or across a city street.

Residence requirements can and should be geared realistically to the election on hand. A person who has resided anywhere in a State for 6 months ought to be allowed to vote for statewide offices. He should not have his vote taken away simply because he moves within the State shortly before election day.

Standard IV. Local residence requirements should not exceed 30 days

If a voter has satisfied the State requirements, he should be allowed to vote in county and city elections after 30 days' residence.

Standard V. New State residents should be allowed to vote for President

No American should be deprived of the right to vote for President and Vice President because he changed his address before the election and did not have time to meet State residence requirements. Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Massachusetts, Maine, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, and Wisconsin have set a good example by allowing a new arrival to cast his ballot for President if he can demonstrate that he would have qualified to vote in the place from which he moved, and that he has not voted and will not vote elsewhere.

Arizona, Connecticut, Maryland, New Jersey, Vermont, Wisconsin, and Wyoming permit absentee voting by former residents who have not met residence requirements in their new States. If all States allowed presidential voting by new residents, absentee voting by former residents would not be necessary. Meanwhile, presidential voting by new residents could be eased if States agreed, perhaps on a reciprocal basis, not to charge a fee for certifying that a former resident was qualified to vote. This fee at present amounts to a poll tax on new residents who wish to vote for President.

Standard VI. Voter registration should extend as close to election day as possible, and should not end more than 3 or 4 weeks before election day

Idaho is exemplary in this respect. The deadline for registration there is 9 p.m. on the Saturday prior to the Tuesday election. This poses no problem in the preparation of poll books, because Idaho has no last-minute rush of registrants as many other jurisdictions have, since it employs continual canvassing to keep its registers up to date.

Other States, by adopting facets of the Idaho plan, could also bring their registration deadlines closer to election day. Some States still adhere to registration cutoff dates as much as 9 months prior to election day. Three or four weeks is not an unreasonable deadline, even under the most complicated system of registration. In States with large and mobile populations, it may require 3 weeks to put central records in shape and supply current registration lists. It takes 3 weeks in New York. The Commission feels that the nearer the close of registration is to election day the better.

We urge continuing registration, with an educational campaign launched well before the deadline. Greater accessibility of registrars would allow voter registration deadlines to be moved closer to election day.

Standard VII. Voter lists should be kept current

It is important that voter registration lists be kept up to date. Rosters which exceed the number of potential voters or even the adult population of a county or municipality are an invitation to cynicism if not to fraud. The concern created this year by publication of overregistration figures in certain counties is good evidence that proper administration of voter registration systems is essential. Election officials should give constant attention to this problem. For the voters who move within the jurisdiction, simple procedures to transfer registration should be available.

Standard VIII. No citizen's registration should be canceled for failure to vote in any period less than 4 years

The Commission supports permanent, personal registration. Some registration systems force people who vote only in presidential elections to reregister every year they plan to vote. Such provisions make little sense. It is unreasonable for a would-be voter, who thinks he is still registered, to be told on election day that his name has been removed from the roster for failure to vote in the last election and that, as a result, he cannot vote.

It is important, moreover, that any voter scheduled for removal from the rolls for failure to vote be notified of that fact. He should be sent a postcard, which he could return if he desires to remain on the rolls. This procedure would insure that no citizen who still resides in the jurisdiction and who desires to remain eligible to vote would be removed against his will.

Some jurisdictions clear registration lists of all persons who have missed two consecutive elections. The Commission believes this is an unnecessary requirement. States such as Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee, Washington, and West Virginia require reregistration only after a voter has missed all elections in a 4-year period. We believe such a provision is a reasonable standard which meets the needs of fairness and efficiency.

Standard IX. Voter registration lists should be used only for electoral purposes

It has been indicated to the Commission that some persons do not register to vote because the voter registers in their counties are used for tax assessment, jury selection, and other nonvoting purposes. While the Commission is fully aware of the importance of these other civic responsibilities, we believe that registration lists should not be used for these purposes.

Standard X. States should provide absentee registration for voters who cannot register in person

We urge the replacement of restrictive statutes which prevent the registration of fully qualified Americans who cannot come in person to places of registration.

Federal personnel, military and civilian, usually must register in absentia. The Federal Voting Assistance Act of 1955 (Public Law 296) is tailored to their specific needs. Under the supervision of the Department of Defense, the act has made possible a substantial increase in the voting participation of military personnel and oversea Government workers. Each of the 50 States has adopted at least a portion of the model State law proposed by Public Law 296. Some States have adopted it in full.

The key provision of this model law authorizes the potential voter to fill out one postage-free airmail postcard for the purpose of applying to the chief election officer in his hometown or county for both absentee registration and an absentee ballot. This procedure cuts the red tape which used to impede voting by military personnel and oversea Federal workers.

In addition, each State should provide voter registration by mail for other qualified citizens living abroad.

Serious problems confront handicapped and physically incapacitated adults who wish to register. Many have a strong desire to vote, but in some areas impediments to their registration are insurmountable.

Two methods are available for the registration of these citizens—registration by mail and special canvassing. Some communities employ canvassers to visit nursing homes, hospitals, and similar institutions to seek registrants. Other jurisdictions provide registrars who respond to telephone requests to visit private homes where incapacitated adults live. Such registrars also provide absentee ballot applications for those who expect to be unable to vote in person.

Standard XI. Literacy tests should not be a requisite for voting

A minority of our States continues to impose some form of literacy test as a condition of registration. The problem posed by such tests depends on the State in question. Literacy tests in some States are unfairly administered, particularly to deprive Negroes of their right to vote. Only with rigid safeguards is a State likely to eradicate the sort of maladministration reported by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. Racial discrimination by means of unfair administration of literacy tests is a perversion of the democratic process.

A more basic question, though, is whether any literacy test can be justified today. When noncitizens could vote, literacy requirements made some sense, but today only citizens may vote, and the process of naturalization involves a test for literacy, so the original reasons for the test as a part of registration are gone.

Many media are available other than the printed word to supply information to potential voters. The Commission is not impressed by the argument that only those who can read and write or have a sixth grade education should have a voice in determining their future. This is the right of every citizen no matter what his formal education or possession of material wealth. The Commission recommends that no literacy test interfere with the basic right to suffrage.[2]

Standard XII. Election day should be proclaimed a national day of dedication to our American democracy

The President by proclamation and the Congress by resolution should proclaim the even-year general election day as a national day of dedication to our American democracy. At the same time, the States should consider declaring the day a half-day legal holiday.

If election day were a half-day holiday, the privilege of a free ballot would be underscored. A half-day holiday would also alleviate congestion at the polls. We have observed that voting tends to concentrate during certain times: before the workday begins, during lunch hours, and after 5 p.m. Because our population is presently increasing at the rate of 3 million per year, the accommodation of voters is becoming a major problem. The day is fast approaching when 100 million Americans will be voting. If election day were a half-day holiday, a more even flow through the polls undoubtedly would result.

The Commission in its deliberations noted with interest the spectacular voter turnout in several European countries which have weekend or Sunday voting. We considered the advantages and disadvantages of holding general elections on Saturday and/or Sunday in the United States, but the Commission is not prepared to recommend nationwide voting on days of religious worship.

Standard XIII. Polling places should be so equipped as to eliminate long waiting periods

An overcrowded polling place, with its congestion and long lines, creates an unhappy atmosphere. Polling places can accommodate efficiently only a certain number of voters. To eliminate congestion, States should write into law realistic maximum sizes for voting precincts. Oversized precincts should be split or sufficient facilities provided to avoid jamming the polls.

Standard XIV. Polling places should be open throughout the day and remain open until at least 9 p.m.

The original purpose of closing the polls at an early hour was to allow time to count the ballots. Most cities and many smaller communities now have voting machines, which have accelerated vote tallying. In others, officials begin the counting task early in the day.

We are convinced that late openings and early closing of the polls discourages or prevents some citizens from voting. Some people do not get time off from work to vote and often have to travel a considerable distance to the polls. Since they must vote during the rush periods, they encounter long lines. When polling hours are the same as working hours, the voter faces unreasonable inconvenience.

While the Comimssion recognizes that small, rural precincts may complete polling and close at an early hour, we find no general argument for the early closing of the polls. Keeping most voting places open until 9 p.m. would remove a real bottleneck to greater voter turnout.

Standard XV. The States should provide every possible protection against election fraud

Public confidence in the integrity of the ballot is a most important element in our elections. The more certain a voter is that his ballot will not be lost through error or fraud, the more likely he is to cast his ballot. Happily, election fraud today in America is small compared to what it was two generations ago. Indeed, the Commission has been impressed by how much has been done in past years to guarantee a full, counted vote to each citizen.

The Commission recommends that the States provide every possible protection against electoral fraud. For example, the Commission specifically recommends that the States provide effective bipartisan election boards and poll watchers representing both parties in all polling places.

Standard XVI. Voting by persons 18 years of age should be considered by the States

The Commission is concerned over the low voter participation of the age group from 21 to 30. We believe a major reason for this low turnout is that, by the time they have turned 21 (the minimum voting age in 46 of the 50 States) many young people are so far removed from the stimulation of the educational process that their interest in public affairs has waned. Some may be lost as voters for the rest of their lives.

Despite the growing enrollment in institutions of higher education, it is a fact that only a minority of Americans are still in school when they near or reach their 21st birthdays. We believe that each State should carefully consider reducing the minimum voting age to 18.

If 18 is adopted as a minimum age, we also recommend programs under which registration of students could be facilitated, perhaps through voter registration days at high schools themselves.

States might also incorporate in the curriculum of high school senior classes a three-point plan of action to inspire good citizenship:

1. Explanation of the importance of a single vote to the American way of life.
2. Information on the requirements and mechanics of registration.
3. Demonstration of the actual process of voting in the local community.

If such citizenship programs are to be developed, it is clear that teacher training must be improved also to insure that teachers have a firm grasp of the principles upon which good citizenship rests.

Standard XVII. Candidacy should be open to all

In some States, minority parties must meet unreasonable requirements to secure places on primary and general election ballots. The cost of primary elections in States where primary costs are charged to the parties is often too high to be borne by a minority party. Similarly, the required number of votes cast in a previous election for a party to secure a place on subsequent ballots discourages normal party competition. Such restrictive requirements tend to diminish party competition and consequently impede voter participation.

Individuals face similar obstacles, once their parties have qualified. High filing fees and undue petition standards undoubtedly keep some citizens from running for office. Certainly no one can object to reasonable filing fees nor to a minimum signature requirement as a prerequisite for candidacy, but it is of the essence of our democratic system that any person or party seeking office be assured every reasonable opportunity to appear on the ballot.

Standard XVIII. The right to vote should be extended to those living on Federal reservations

At this moment, several hundred thousand American citizens living on certain Federal reservations such as military posts, national parks, and veterans hospitals do not have the right to vote. Throughout the United States there are more than 5,000 pieces of land where the Federal Government exercises exclusive jurisdiction. Most residents of these enclaves do not have State residence for voting purposes.

Until 1940 these residents were exempted from all State taxes. In that year Congress enacted the Buck Act permitting the States to tax them. The result for these people is taxation without representation.

Three States, California, Utah, and West Virginia, do allow citizens on Federal enclaves to vote. The courts in these States held that for purposes of voting these persons were residents of the State. In addition, California has enacted into law a statute which permits all qualified citizens on these Federal reservations to vote as residents of the State. We recommend to the attention of each State the legislative action of California.

Standard XIX. Absentee voting by mail should be allowed for all who are absent from home on primary or general election day

Today all States except Mississippi, New Mexico, and South Carolina provide absentee balloting for at least some of their nonmilitary citizens. Of the 47 States with civilian absentee voting, 34 give voting privileges to all otherwise qualified persons who expect to be too far from home on election day to vote in person. In the other States, a person must be unavoidably absent or have special status, such as a businessman on a regular trip or a student at an accredited college or university.

Even in the States with liberal absentee voting laws, some prospective voters find it difficult and laborious to go through the steps to apply for a ballot and cast a vote either because of early deadlines, requirements that ballots be obtained in person or other complicated procedures. Persons whose absence on election day is unplanned are often disfranchised. For example, the person who becomes hospitalized after the deadline for obtaining absentee ballots has passed usually loses his vote. Similarly, citizens residing abroad are disfranchised when they must apply for an absentee ballot in person.

The Commission believes that absence, avoidable or unavoidable, is not a valid reason for disfranchisement. If a person deserves to vote, he also deserves to be able to vote when he is out of town or incapacitated; he deserves an absentee balloting system which does not make the exercise of the right to vote difficult and vexatious.

Standard XX. The poll tax as a qualification for voting should be eliminated

No American should have to buy his right to vote in any election.

Standard XXI. Each State should keep informed of other States' practices and innovations in election administration

In our studies, we have been impressed by the number of interesting and important ways some States and election officials are meeting the problems confronting them. Election laws and procedures must constantly be examined and reevaluated by the States if these laws and procedures are going to keep pace with a growing United States. Listed below are some specific areas we believe are of special importance, but the list is by no means exhaustive.

A. Training of election officials: Every State should provide special instruction for election officials as some do now. One of the surest ways to guard against fraud is to have capable, knowledgeable officials at each polling place.

B. Technical advances in the voting process: Electronic devices which speed up the voting process are now being developed and are being tested in some States. We urge all the States to be alert to these new methods of voting and ballot counting.

C. Information on candidates and issues: Several States now publish and send to each registered voter booklets containing information about the candidates and public questions which will appear on the next ballot. This procedure assures that each voter will have access to information concerning the next election. We believe all the States would do well to institute similar practices designed to improve the level of information of the electorate.

D. Data compilation: Registration and election statistics should be accessible to the general public. Our research was sometimes stifled by the lack of sufficient data. We suggest that each State provide a central location for the compilation of registration and election statistics, and follow the example of those States which publish such data in their manuals or blue books.

E. Frequency of elections: One reason for nonvoting is "voter fatigue." In one eastern community, eight elections have been held in a single year. The Commission urges that the States study this problem in conjunction with a study of ballot complexity.

F. Nature of the ballot: A recent ballot in a midwestern State measured 2,414 square inches, contained 246 names, and warned each voter that he could not stay in the voting booth longer than 1 minute. We recommend that each State examine its ballot, with an eye toward determining whether it can be shortened and simplified.

CONCLUSION

We began this report with a description of the many reasons, both psychological and institutional, why more citizens do not register and vote. We then laid out a blueprint for action to improve America's record of participation. We heartily agree with former President Eisenhower, who said in a letter to the Commission: "As our electorate becomes more knowledgeable—and in my judgment it is doing so every day—it becomes less patient with the legal hurdles and roadblocks which prevent it from exercising freedom of choice in the truest sense."

While the Commission has been charged with the responsibility of suggesting means to increase voter participation, we do not contend that every citizen must vote in order to make our democracy work. In our society the freedom to cast or not cast a ballot must remain with the individual. Our purpose has been to devise methods to guarantee that every citizen who wishes to register and vote may do so without unreasonable or unnecessary obstacles.

If our election mechanics can so guarantee the right to vote to every citizen, then we will be able to return to the responsible elector as the keystone of our democratic system. Without such guarantees, we encourage irresponsibility. With them, we offer to every American the opportunity to be a full citizen.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

Dissenting statement by Commisioner Byrne on literacy tests (standard XI)

Do you think it essential that the American voter be able to read the language in which our ballot is written? If you do, you'll probably differ with standard XI: "Literacy tests should not be a requisite for voting." If you don't, how would you vote on the following proposition:

Har A-Partiet Lovet Mer Enn Det Kan Holde?

This question in Norwegian is still Greek to me and means as much to me as an American ballot does to every illiterate. If it doesn't make any real difference whether an American voter can or cannot read the language of a ballot, why don't we print our ballots in Chinese or Swahili?

How many illiterates are there in the United States? On February 12, 1963, the Bureau of the Census stated that there were in 1960 about 3 million illiterates and about 8 million functional illiterates (14 years old and over).

The Bureau defines "illiteracy as the inability to read and write a simple message either in English or in any other language. Illiteracy in this sense, should be clearly distinguished from 'functional illiteracy,' a term used by the Army in World War II to refer to persons who were incapable of understanding the kind of written instructions that are needed for carrying out basic military functions or tasks. Since that time, the term 'functional illiterate' has been commonly used to denote a person who has completed fewer than 5 years of school."

Reasonable people entertain conflicting convictions on the wisdom of literacy tests. Some political scientists oppose all literacy tests; others approve them provided they are simple, objective and discrimination-proof.

In States with a large non-English-speaking citizenry, some favor the option of taking a literacy test in another language. For example, in Hawaii, you may take the test in English or Hawaiian.

The National Municipal League, noted for its model election laws, recommends "a reasonable literacy test to determine ability, except for physical cause, to read and write English."

The literacy test has been abused in certain areas but I am not convinced that good citizenship demands its across-the-board abolition. Isn't it a fallacy that the abuse of something is an argument against its use, the so-called Anti-Saloon League syndrome?

Shouldn't we distinguish between the literacy test as such and unfair, discriminatory requirements? The prostitution of the literacy examination as a subterfuge to exclude Negroes or any other group from the suffrage because of race, religion, or national origin, is a violation of the U.S. Constitution. I deplore the chicanery of barring voters from the polls because they do not interpret the Constitution correctly, even though erudite justices differ sharply in their interpretations. But to equate such subjective and fraud-fraught tests, which have sometimes excluded Negro Ph. D.'s from voting, with objective and fraud-proof literacy tests is unrealistic.

The rationale for the bona fide literacy test is the same as that for the minimum-age requirement. Both stem from the premise that some minimal standards in knowledge and understanding are needed to make an intelligent choice at the polls. By what subtle logic can you ban the one and retain the other?

In the future, as universal public education improves, the need for literacy tests will probably vanish. In the meantime, what is so unreasonable about a State's reserving its constitutional right (upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court as recently as 1959) to require a voter—unless he is blind—to demonstrate his ability to read the language of our ballot, a ballot upon which so much depends in this most critical and challenging period of our history?

Statement by Commissioner Forsythe on literacy tests (standard XI) (Commissioner Mintener concurred)

In my opinion certain additional information should be pointed out in regard to the use of literacy tests as a requisite for voting. At present 19 States have a literacy test. Seven of those States were among the top 20 States in voter turnout in 1960. Eleven of the States had a voter turnout of over 63 percent. Three of the States had a voter turnout between 51 and 54.5 percent. Four of the literacy test States ranked lowest in voter turnout. The evidence I have seen does not indicate that the literacy test per se is a bar to suffrage.

It is equally clear, however, that in certain States the literacy test has been used as a device to deprive people of their right to vote. The Commission was unanimous in condemnation of that type of action.

However, the U.S. Supreme Court did unanimously uphold the literacy test of North Carolina in 1959 (Lassiter v. Northampton Election Board, 360 U.S. 45). Further, the Department of Justice under the present administration and its predecessor administration has not found evidence of discriminatory use of literacy test in 15 of the 19 States which employ such tests.

In my opinion each State which has a literacy test should reevaluate the use of and the need for the test. States should evaluate their tests on the basis of whether the test constitutes a bar to voting and whether it is being used in a discriminatory manner. If a literacy test does not prohibit a high voter participation and if it is not being used as a discriminatory device, I think the State should make the determination concerning whether there will be continued use of the test.

Statement by Commissioner Kirkpatrick on literacy tests (standard XI) (Commissioners Bennett, Phillips, Reuther, Scammon, Schuck, and Washington concurred)

"I had supposed that the great fundamental principle, that all men were equal in their rights was settled, and forever settled in this country. I had supposed, sir, that there was some meaning in those words, and some importance in the benefits resulting from them. I had supposed from the blood and treasure which its attainment had cost, that there was something invaluable in it."

It is now 142 years since these words were spoken by John Cramer in the New York Constitutional Convention of 1821, and we might suppose that this great fundamental principle had long since been firmly established. Unhappily, this is not the case.

I had supposed that this Commission would be unanimous on the fundamental principle that all men are equal in their political rights, but it is not; one member has written a dissent to the recommendation of the Commission that literacy tests should be abolished. As a result, I think it important to make a more extensive statement in support of the Commission recommendation and the principles upon which it is based.

A democratic system rests ultimately on the belief that each man is the best judge of his own interests and that he should have, through the ballot box, a voice in choosing those who govern him. On what grounds should we deny to the person who has not learned to read the rights we accord to others? That he cannot read the ballot? Then shall we also disfranchise the blind? That he cannot read newspapers? Then shall we disfranchise the deaf because they cannot hear radio or television? That he will not be an informed voter? Then shall we require that each voter pass a test in current events? The arguments for a literacy requirement lack cogency. Their superficial merits vanish under scrutiny.

The assumption that the illiterate should not be permitted to vote because he cannot have informed himself about the election or the issues rests on a cluster of untenable assumptions. It assumes that information can be acquired only by way of the printed word and that knowledge gleaned from radio, television, or conversation is somehow inferior to that gained from newspapers or magazines. It assumes that persons who can read, do read—to inform themselves about election issues—though no study of voting behavior has demonstrated that knowledge follows literacy. It assumes either that the capacity to judge one's own interests is dependent upon the ability to read, or that persons who cannot read do not deserve to have their interests represented. And when advocated as the sole test for voters, it assumes that of all the differences among adult citizens, the ability to read alone has important implications for voting.

Literate men are not equally well informed, nor equally rational, nor equally moral, nor equally rich, nor equally devoted to their country. Neither are the illiterate. Who would argue that the political judgment of a literate man of doubtful morality or patriotism is better than that of an honest but illiterate patriot? Literary tests are a remnant of class discrimination. They discriminate against the poor, the aged, and rural inhabitants. It is not the wealthy who can neither read nor write. It is the poor and the dispossessed. Literacy tests have no more place in a modern democracy than property tests, which we have long since abandoned.

Democracy is built on the belief that wise decisions can emerge from the diverse and conflicting beliefs, experiences, and conditions of all the people. It affirms the still radical doctrine that each individual—by virtue of his humanity—has rights and responsibilities. Should a man be excused from obedience to a law he cannot read? Should he be denied participation in an election because he cannot read the ballot? Or should election officials assist him as they assist the blind?

Voting is the fundamental political right of citizens in a democracy. The right to vote is the right to influence officials and policy. To be denied the vote is to be denied the guarantee that one's interests will be taken into account when policy is made. There is no justifiable test of property, race, color, national origin, religion, or education for disfranchising one class of citizens.

The principles asserted here are as old as our Nation itself. In 1776 all 13 of the Original States joined unanimously in declaring:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

And from the very beginning of our history, these principles found eloquent expression in demands for extension of the suffrage. In 1829, the nonfreeholders of the city of Richmond, Va., presented to the Virginia Constitutional Convention a memorial protesting their exclusion from the suffrage. Based on the principles of the Declaration of Independence, it provides as eloquent a guide today as it did then:

"Experience has but too clearly evinced, what, indeed, reason had always foretold, by how frail a tenure they hold every other right, who are denied this (the suffrage), the highest prerogative of freemen. * * *

"A regulation which, instead of the equality nature ordains, creates an odious distinction between members of the same community; robs of all share, in the enactment of the laws, a large portion of the citizens bound by them, and whose blood and treasure are pledged to maintain them. * * *

"Surely it were much to be desired that every citizen should be qualified for the proper exercise of all his rights, and the due performance of all his duties. But the same qualifications that entitle him to assume the management of his private affairs, and claim the other privileges of citizenship, equally entitled him, in the judgment of your memorialists, to be entrusted with this, the dearest of all his privileges, the most important of all his concerns. * * *

"The enjoyment of all other rights, whether of person or property, they will not deny, may be as perfect among those deprived of the privilege of voting, as among those possessing it. It may be as great under a despotism, as under any other form of government. But they alone deserve to be called free, or have a guarantee for their rights, who participate in the formation of their political institutions, and in the control of those who make and administer the laws. To such as may be disposed to surrender this, or any other immunity, to the keeping of others, no practical mischief may ensue from its abandonment; or if any, none that will not be justly merited. Not so with him who feels as a freeman should; who would think for himself and speak what he thinks; who would not commit his conscience or his liberty to the uncontrolled direction of others. To him the privation of right, of that especially, which is the only safeguard of freedom, is practically wrong. So thought the fathers of the Republic. It was not the oppressive weight of the taxes imposed by England on America: it was the assertion of a right to impose any burdens whatever upon those who were not represented; to bind by laws those who had no share, personal or delegated, in their enactment, that roused this continent to arms."

It is wholly in accord with our American tradition to live by this eloquent statement of the case for democracy. If we do so, we will abolish literacy tests that are often discriminatory in practice and always wrong in principle; we will give meaning to the Declaration of Independence; we will bring our practices into conformity with the only legitimate basis for democratic government.

Excerpts from the 1963 report of the United States Commission on Civil Rights (inserted by request of Commissioners Byrne, Phillips, Reuther, Schuck, and Washington)

The conclusion is inevitable that present legal remedies for voter discrimination are inadequate. In many instances, litigation has not secured to qualified American citizens the right to vote.

In seven States, the right to vote—the abridgment of which is clearly forbidden by the 15th amendment to the Constitution of the United States—is still denied to many citizens solely because of their race.

The Commission now believes that the only effective method of guaranteeing the vote for all Americans is the enactment by Congress of some form of uniform voter qualification standards. The Commission further believes that the right to vote must, in many instances, be safeguarded and assured by the Federal Government. Adequate legislation must include both standards and implementation.

APPENDIX 1. EXECUTIVE ORDER ESTABLISHING THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON REGISTRATION AND VOTING PARTICIPATION

Whereas less than 65 percent of the U.S. population of voting age cast ballots for presidential electors in 1960, and

Whereas popular participation in government through elections is essential to a democratic form of government; and

Whereas the causes of nonvoting are not fully understood and more effective corrective action will be possible on the basis of a better understanding of the causes of the failure of many citizens to register and vote; Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me as President of the United States, it is ordered as follows:

SECTION 1. (a) There is hereby established the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation (hereinafter referred to as the Commission).

(b) The Commission shall be composed of not more than 11 members, each of whom shall be appointed by the President. One of the members of the Commission shall be designated by the President as the Chairman thereof.

SEC. 2. The Commission shall:

(a) Study the reasons for the failure of many citizens to register and vote in elections for selection of Members of Congress, the President, and Vice President including:

(1) Laws which restrict registration and voting on the basis of residence, economic status, or other reasons,

(2) Procedures for registration of voters,

(3) Absentee voting provisions, and

(4) Causes of nonvoting by persons who are otherwise qualified to vote.

(b) Prepare and present to the President recommendations for increasing citizen participation in Government through the exercise of the right to vote.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall not consider matters placed under the jurisdiction of the Commission on Civil Rights by the Civil Rights Act of 1957 (71 Stat. 634), as amended.

SEC. 4. All who may be in a position to do so are requested to furnish the Commission information pertinent to its work and otherwise to facilitate the Commission's work.

SEC. 5. Each member of the Commission shall receive compensation of $75 for each day such member is engaged upon the work of the Commission, except that any member who then receives other compensation from the United States shall serve as such member without compensation under this order. The Commission is authorized to appoint such personnel as may be necesary to assist the Commission in connection with the performance of its functions without regard to the civil service and classification laws, but no such personnel shall receive compensation at a rate in excess of $17,500 per annum. The Commission is authorized to obtain services in accordance with the provisions of section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U.S.C. 55a), at rates not in excess of $75 per diem for individuals.

SEC. 6. The compensation of the members and personnel of the Commission, lawful allowances therefor, and any other necessary expenses arising in connection with the work of the Commission shall be paid from the appropriation appearing under the heading "Special Projects" in title III of the Treasury-Post Office Departments and Executive Office Appropriation Act, 1963, 76 Stat. 310, and such appropriation as may be provided for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1964. Such payments shall be made without regard to the provisions of section 3681 of the Revised Statutes and section 9 of the act of March 4, 1909, 35 Stat. 1027 (31 U.S.C. 672 and 673).

SEC. 7. The General Services Administration is hereby designated as the agency which shall provide administrative services for the Commission on a reimbursable basis.

SEC. 8. The Commission in its discretion may transmit to the President such preliminary or interim report or reports as it may deem appropriate. It shall transmit its principal study and recommendations to the President not later than November 30, 1963, together with such supporting materials as it deems appropriate. The Commission shall terminate not later than 60 days after the submission of its principal report to the President.

JOHN F. KENNEDY.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to join the many Senators who today have spoken about the President's state of the Union message. This marvelous statement is a program that calls for action. It is a statement of purpose, goals, and objectives, which should send throughout the world renewed hope for peace and for the extension of freedom and security to a very unhappy and suffering mankind. It is also a message of assurance to the American people, particularly to those who are so frequently forgotten in the busy life of our Nation.

I was pleased that President Johnson saw fit to single out for particular attention the young of our country, the students, and also the elderly. Indeed, he added a third category—those who, through no fault of their own, are the victims of misfortune; physical, mental, social, or economic. The President wisely pointed out that a government that is to command respect and enjoy the confidence of its citizenry must be a government that concentrates its attention upon those who are in the dawn of life—the youth; those who are in the twilight of life—the elderly; and those whom we might call people in the shadows of life or in the storm clouds of life—the disabled, the handicapped, the needy, and the unemployed.

The message was that of a man who has a deep sense of compassion. It was the message of a President who has a big and a strong heart. It was the message of a President who understands that the purpose of democratic government is to guarantee justice for one and all. The real purpose of government, of orderly society, is to assure justice. President Johnson's message was one of social justice. It was one of strength. It was one of charity. It was one of kindness. And yet it was one of boldness.

In his message the President demonstrated that a nation does not have to prove its strength by beating upon its armor plate in order to terrify the adversary and to command the attention of the loyal and the faithful. Strength, if it is present, is quickly comprehended by friend and foe alike. True strength does not need description. It is obvious. It is so apparent that there is no need even to describe it. We have built great strength in America—military, economic, political, and moral—throughout the years of our Republic. We have added to that strength in the past few years, particularly during the administration of President Kennedy. It is that reservoir of strength which now permits President Johnson to lead from strength, to negotiate from strength, and to follow the fine admonition of President Kennedy when he said that we will never be afraid to negotiate, but we should never negotiate from fear. I only paraphrase the brilliant remarks of the late and beloved President in his inaugural address.

Today we saw and heard a President deliver a message that represents strength without being belligerent, firmness without being arrogant, and justice without being self-righteous. I wish to compliment the President. I believe that he has given us a stirring message of reassurance and dedication. He has given us a commitment of his personal life, of this Government, and of this Nation that we are going forward to complete the unfinished business of this great democracy. Since taking office as President, by his words and deeds, President Johnson has taken the initiative in showing the world that he is a man of peace. He is doing everything in his power to reach that goal.

For many years the headlines of the world's press were occupied by the men in the Kremlin as they proclaimed their so-called desires for peace. We knew that the statements were hypocritical. We knew that the statements were not true. But the propaganda of the Communist political system and the effective propaganda of the leaders of communism had millions and millions of people in the world believing that it was from Moscow that the message of peace was coming.

Now the dove of peace is on the shoulders of the President of the United States. Yet the President of the United States represents the most powerful nation in the world. In a real sense, he follows the advice of Theodore Roosevelt, who suggested that we "speak softly, but carry a big stick." The strength exists, and the soft word of conciliation, of negotiation, of understanding, is present.

I am happy to say that we live in a time in which the forces of decency have been able to claim the honors of peacemaker. The late beloved Pope John XXIII, possibly more than any other man in our lifetime—indeed, in many a century—broke through the cold war of bitterness, doubt, suspicion, and animosity to launch a great effort for understanding, peace, and social justice. He has been followed by the present Pope, Pope Paul, who in recent days has given the world renewed hope for peace.

The forces of decency, morality, and spiritual truth are on the march, and the cause of peace is in good hands, in the hands of those who are peacemakers.

I am proud of the message of our President. I am highly pleased with it. I am also very much heartened by the continuous, sincere, dedicated efforts of the President, not only in word but in deed, for the achievement of a just and enduring peace.

In his state of the Union message he has pledged his administration to another great objective, to an an unrelenting war—as he put it, unconditional war—on poverty, and upon the companions of poverty—ignorance and disease—here at home.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Let me finish this thought, then I shall yield.

I am confident that Congress will match the President's determination and will respond to his call with positive action, because he has asked for action.

I am also confident that Congress will honor the President's call for an effective, comprehensive civil rights program. This is the fulfillment of the guarantees of our Constitution. As the President has so well noted, those who could fight together and die together might very well expect to have a world in which men could walk together, travel together, work together, and live together.

That was a remarkable passage in the President's message, one that touched my heart, one that I am sure moved every person that heard it.

I now yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. The President's declaration of unconditional war on poverty appeared to me to be worthy of the standards of our greatest humanitarian Presidents. The passage in his speech to which the Senator has just referred received one of the most vigorous manifestations of applause. I was one of those who applauded it.

In the President's proposal to wage unconditional war upon poverty, he went further and identified the group who suffered this poverty, this one-fifth of our people who live either on relief or in poverty—many in abject poverty. It is for this that the social conscience of the Nation should cry out.

The distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota and the senior Senator from Tennessee may disagree with one measure or another, or upon the details of them, and disagree as to the possible effectiveness of a proposal. Both he and I may disagree with the President on occasion. But I am sure the senior Senator from Minnesota, the senior Senator from Tennessee, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, and most Senators on the Democratic side of the aisle, will applaud vigorously most of the realistic steps in the unrelenting war against poverty. It is out of poverty that much of crime comes. It is out of poverty that much of our suffering comes. It is because of poverty that most of our talents are lost, both of the young and of the old.

I congratulate the Senator on the able speech he has made. I wish to join him in many of the plaudits he has expressed.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator from Tennessee, who has always been in the forefront of the struggle to give a better break to our citizenry, to give more justice and a fair reward for their efforts.

I wish to conclude my comments on the President's speech. I mentioned the civil rights section of the speech. We all recognize that it is controversial legislation. I thought the President put the purpose of such legislation in proper perspective, in beautiful and moving words. I remind my colleagues of what the President said. He said:

> Today Americans of all races stand side by side in Berlin and in Vietnam. They died side by side in Korea. Surely they can work and eat and travel side by side in America.

That remarkable logic is compelling. There is no refutation of it. It seems to me it is this kind of direct, simple, forceful, and profound reasoning that will move the Nation and the Congress to take the action required to provide the guarantees of citizenship and equal privileges, opportunities, and immunities under the law.

I am hopeful that the party of Abraham Lincoln, the Great Emancipator, will join the party of Andrew Jackson and Thomas Jefferson to meet its moral responsibility on civil rights. As the President made crystal clear, a moral obligation is involved. A moral issue is at stake. There is no room for partisanship in this issue. Every American suffers when any other American is injured or denied equal justice; and every American profits when all Americans are treated fairly and are given the equal protection of the law.

Therefore, the Senator from Minnesota stands today not as a Democrat, but as an American, appealing for bipartisan and nonpartisan action to forward the great program of civil liberties, civil rights, and human rights which we all thought were guaranteed to us by the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, and which today need to be fortified by statute as well as the daily living of citizens.

I invite the attention of my colleagues to the fact that there were those, however, who, according to their own pronouncements, found this message somewhat disappointing.

For example, the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] called it a disappointing message insofar as the farm areas are concerned. Of course, every Senator is entitled to his own opinion. I merely wish to state for the record that President Johnson has been giving daily attention to the problems of American agriculture. I know, because I have been with him when he gave this attention to the problems of our farmers.

This morning, at the direction of the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture met with livestock producers and livestock feeders from all over America, in order to do something about the drastic drop in livestock prices.

The President spoke to the Secretary of Agriculture in the Speaker's room in the Capitol even before he delivered his state of the Union message to a joint session of Congress.

I have before me today's Washington Evening Star. An article on the front page deals with the President's concern for agriculture and the problems of the farmers:

> At his first Cabinet meeting he mentioned the problem briefly. Two days later Secretary of Agriculture Freeman was called to the White House.
> The President, the Secretary was told, wanted to discuss some problems with him.
> They sat down in the President's oval Office for a review of farm programs and, the Secretary quickly discovered, a detailed discussion of the poverty problem.
> "It was something uppermost in his mind," the Secretary said later. "He wanted to do something about it and wanted to do it at once."

This article also notes that when the President discusses the poverty problem, he is not talking about poverty in cities alone; he is talking about places where there is more poverty than anywhere else; namely, in the rural areas of America. He is talking about the rural slums of America, the shacks of the sharecroppers, and about the little farmer who ekes out a living. These problems are close to the heart of our President.

President Johnson comes from rural America. President Johnson knows rural America. President Johnson does not need the advice of his critics on rural America and its problems.

The President of the United States has asked the Secretary of Agriculture to give increased and new attention to the problems of agriculture, rural housing, farm credit, the wheat program, cotton, and other commodities. The Secretary of Agriculture is testifying this week before the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives on programs which the administration wishes to see enacted.

I come from a relatively rural State, even though in the State of Minnesota the population is becoming more and more urbanized. Approximately 30 percent of our people live in rural areas. We are proud of our rural areas. We are proud of the quality of our farmers and the character of the family life of our farm people. We are proud of our rural communities. I invite anyone who wishes to do so to come to see them. There are few places in the world which can equal them in cleanliness or wholesomeness or a basic sense of decency. But our farmers have economic problems. This administration is committed to alleviating those problems. This administration is committed to a program of parity for American agriculture. This administration is committed to finding ways and means of aiding American agriculture without unnecessary regulation or compulsion.

We are committed to finding ways and means of helping the American farmer and American producer achieve greater prosperity without too much regulation, and without too many people interfering in his operations. I say to the critics of the President's message on agriculture that deeds speak much more loudly than words, and much more effectively. President Johnson's record on agriculture, when he has had an opportunity to spend a period of time in the White House, will clearly, unequivocally, and forcefully show that he is a man who understands agriculture and is a friend of agriculture and is doing effective work for our American farmers.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I rise to commend the President of the United States on his excellent state of the Union message. It was a perfectly wonderful message. In this case brevity was the soul of clarity, conviction, and compassion.

The high priorities the President gave to the war against poverty and unemployment, the search for peace and disarmament, and the duty of the Congress to give his comprehensive program a fair test by bringing it to a vote were particularly gratifying to me.

I am completely in accord with the President's goals, and look forward to supporting his specific legislative proposals. He can count on me to do what I can to help him get his program enacted by July—from civil rights and the tax cut to urban renewal and youth employment.

Certain specifics in the President's message are within the range of my committee responsibilities and my longtime interest during the period that I have been in the Senate. I was delighted that the President referred to the American citizen's "hopes for a fair chance to make good" and "for fair play from the law"—which I take to mean civil rights legislation.

I also was delighted to have him make reference to the American citizen's "hopes for a fulltime job on fulltime pay"—which I take to mean a massive attack on unemployment—"his hopes for a decent home for his family in a decent community"—which means a continuation, on a massive scale, of housing and urban renewal programs—"his hopes for a good school for his children with good teachers"—which I take it means adequate Federal aid to education from grade to graduate school—and "his hopes for security when faced with sickness, unemployment, or old age"—which I assume means a reference to the problem of health care for the elderly people under social security.

I was delighted by the President's unconditional declaration of war on poverty in America, on his emphasis, as weapons in the attack on poverty, or better schools, better health, better homes, better training and job opportunity, to help more Americans, especially young Americans, escape from squalor and misery.

I take special pleasure in his determination to launch a special effort in the economically distressed areas of Appalachia, which includes a significant part of my own State; for an extension of the area redevelopment program; for the enactment of youth opportunity legislation; for a broadening of the food stamp plans; and for the creation of a National Service Corps to help the economically handicapped.

I commend the President for his recommendations to modernize our unemployment insurance program and establish a high level commission on automation, and for his commitment to extend the coverage of our minimum wage laws as well as for the extension of the library program and the Hill-Burton Act; also for recommending an expansion of the program for the training of more nurses; for providing hospital insurance for elderly citizens; for providing a mass transit program, and, of course, for the proposed tax cut.

Dear attendee at the SNCC conference:

With that extensive salutation and with a wish for good luck during the present stress and struggle, I'd like to invite you to attend the post-exam SDS national convention, beginning June 11, lasting until June 15 at Port Huron, Michigan.

The SDS, as you probably know, is an association of liberal and radical youth, mostly around universities, concerned with formulating our various criticisms and dissatisfactions with contemporary institutions and values in America into a more or less coherent political outlook and program. We were formed about a year ago and have worked with SNCC as an observer in the South and liaison in the North. We recently held a conference at Chapel Hill, N.C., on "Race and Politics in the South."

Our desire to have people from the Southern movement participate in our convention is part of a broader concern to cement relations between active students in the South and their counter parts in the North and, more centrally, to establish linkages between the desegregation struggle and other aspects of the movement for democracy and social justice in America.

Thus we are hopeful that a number of people can find their way to Michigan as participant-observers at our convention. (The FDR labor center where the convention is being held is, by the way, a lovely place.) While there is a cost for room and fees we can arrange deferred paykment.

Beyond the convention, though, we are looking for the development in the South of a program of discussion of political issues. We are preparing now and over the summer several pamphlets and papers including the talks from Chapel Hill. We hope in the fall and next year to have one or more people travelling and to be able to give some administrative assistance to informal groups who want to begin the building of a community of political discourse in the South.

Let us know if it is possible for you to come to Port Huron. In any case, if you'd like to participate in or be informed of our program in the South, please write.

There is a reply form on the last page of the enclosed "What is SDS?" statement. Note also the brief convention program.

We hope to hear from you soon.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Haber:

Since John Constable is no longer with the Council I have been asked to answer your letter concerning the draft statement of the Students for a Democratic Society, relative to the voter registration program.

We are happy to have this indication of your thinking and are pleased that SDC is interested in participating in this vital effort. At this point the project is very much in the formative stages. However, in time we will be in contact with you again when we have a more definite idea of what the project is likely to entail.

Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Constable:

The enclosed is a draft statement that the SDS had worked out with some of the SNCC people and NSA people regarding various ways in which we might participate in the voer registration program currently being discussed in connection with the Southern student movement.

Harlon Joye, an SDS member, will in Atlanta on Wednesday or Thursday of this week and would like to talk to you about the project. Particularly, he'd be interested in the possibility of SDS beginning some discussion groups on southern campuses. You may recall last October when several SDS people and myself spent some time in the SRC office. At that time we expressed an interest in encouraging liberal discussion activity on southern campuses on a somewhat broader theme. We would like now to put such ideas on a little firmer basis. We see the beginning being to sound out a number of people on the needs they see and the way we could best begin work in this area.

I hope Mr. Joye has a chance to speak with you and others in the SRC. We did not have a chance to rework the memo prior to the SNCC meeting and will probably not do any revision now until we have some more substantial comment.

Sincerely,

Al Haber

MEMO: Students for A Democnatic Society, and Civil Rights
Re: Proposed student project in voter registration
From: Al Haber, Sandra Cason: SDS

The SDS is an organization of students, largely in the North, concerned with the understanding of democracy and the extension of democratic values throughout the various aspects of contemporary economic, social and political affairs, both in American life and internationally. We are affiliated with the League for Industrial Democracy, a long standing liberal educational center. The SDS has followed carefully the developments in the student civil rights movement in the south, sitting in as an official observer on SNCC, attending the various conferences, and aiding the northern support effort, both through the programs of our chapters and from our national office. We have viewed with great interest the initial discussion of a coordinated and cooperative voter registration program in which the student movement would play a principal role. The SDS offers the following memorandum as a contribution to that discussion.

The organization of a voter registration, such as has been contemplated, involves at the outset a number of problems. The major civil rights organizations and agencies functioning in the south would have to commit themselves to its support; the limitations of students would have to be clearly understood as well as their role in giving support to local adult organization and the relation of the voter project to the continuing thrust of the non-violent mass movement on public facilities and employement would have to delineated. A responsible policy making and administrative group would have to be constituted, while keeping the major initiative with the students. Financial support and personnel for the program would have to be arranged and the organizational differences that have sometimes made cooperative action in civil rights difficult would have to be composed. Even so, we are hopeful that these problems can be handled; we give our strong endorsement to "voter registration" as the major new initiative in the student civil rights movement.

1. The sit-ins, jail-ins, and freedom rides have set the stage. There exists now the image of a radical mass action movement, there exists a group of committed, relatively experienced people who could give this impetus and there exists indigenous organizational structure suited to protest and radical action.

2. The issue itself is fundamental. If the non-violent movement has increasingly focused on human dignity, it is nonetheless clear that to give dignity social content, the individual must find channels through which they can have influence within the broader community. Traditionally in a democratic system, participation in the political process, and specifically the elctoral franchise, is chief among these channels. Political rights, ultimately, are the precondition for an equal footing in such areas as employement, housing, education, and welfare protection.

3. Further, Negro enfranchisemsnt is absolutely essential in order to bring about the social and economic changes necessary for themore general development of the South quite apart from any specifically civil rights struggle: trade union organization, urban redevelopment, public services and social welfare programs, the improvement of the quality of education, democratization of the political party structure.

4. We feel that the movement is prepared for the kind of shift of emphasis that a voter registration program would involve. There is an increasing feeling that action has notgotten leverage on the crucial issues of racial equality. Further, as the movement has developed an increasingly able body of leadership there is greater desire for political activity, and a knowledge that this can be successful without compromising the movement's direct non-violent character. Finally we believe that with students playing the initiating role — through the SNCC which is a non-membership body — there will be a much better base for cooperative activity among the adult groups.

In preliminary discussions, the SDS has been mentioned as the principal student group supporting and associatied with the SNCC in the project. We would be very anxious to play such a role. We see that our involvement could, potentially, follow three lines:

I. The publicizing of theproject on Northern campuses and the coordination of support activities;

II. Direct assistance for theproject operation in the South;

III. Broad support for the project through the encouragement on Southern campuses of informed discussion on social, political and economic problems.

I. We would envision a northern support effort as involving:

a) The projection of a new image of the southern movement to northern students primarily through the publication of occasional reports and the facilitation of information flow. In particular, this would entail an explanation of the need for voter registration efforts, the organization of SNCC, its role and the scope of its efforts, the cooperative nature of the project, etc. In addition it would entail the channeling of material through the SDS office, from various southern groups, such as SNCC, southern regional council, NAACP, SCLC, CORE, and other agencies (such as the Justice Department, and the labour movement) to northern campus groups such as ad hoc civil rights, student political groups, religious groups, etc.

b) The organization and facilitation of support activity: providing a center for organization of fund drives, giving service to groups wishing speakers, directing student interest to critical points in the political structure (Congress and the Justice Department), and to national bodies of voluntary organizations (churches, professional groups, labour, etc.). Beyond this there might be the organization of support demonstrations (such as a march on Washington or to some place in the south or a petition campaign) should the southern leadership feel such action necessary or useful.

c) The recruiting and training of northern students and youth to participate in the project. Just as in Rock Hill and the freedom rides, "outsiders" have shown that they can have an important impact on a "local" problem, we can foresee the need for manpower and the need for a direct expression of concern by students from all over the country on this "regional" problem. Northern students could participate in staffing the voting clinics, doing administrative work, and perhaps doing canvassing and field work. We could aid the important orientation of these students to the conditions and the character of the region inwhich they would be working that would precede their moving south.

d) Giving the project northern extension: initiating similar campaigns on a pilot basis in two or three selected northern cities where an increased registration of the Negro community could substantially alter the political character of the city. Such projects would be concentrated efforts to demonstrate the potential of political involvement and to stimulate the indigenous northern civil rights groups to take up the program and themselves develop amovement complimentary to that in the South. We would provide program resources and, in conjunction with the functioning agencies, field assistance to student groups who wanted to undertake such an initiative.

Concretely, the above points would entail SDS's assignment of one or more, likely two, staff people to the project, the compilation of an extensive mailing and contact list, the publication of resource documents on the program and the problems it would be dealing with, the serving as a clearing house and distribution center for materials and information relating to political rights and political education.

II. Direct assistance to the Southern effort: The involvement of SDS in this is a possibility if there is need for a student group that can serve as a recipient for tax-free funds. This could be particularly important in view of the discussions both of foundation support and of large individual contributions. The SDS, through its association with the L.I.D., could receive such funds on a tax-exempt basis. It might, in this way, be possible to establish a special fund for at least certain aspects of southern program. The mechanics of any such arrangement would have to be worked out so that the administration and formulation of policy by SNCC and whatever advisory group is set up would not be compromised. The program areas in which this might be possible are:

I understand that SNCC would be doing this — good!

a) Handling the financing of the educational materials that will be used in the voting clinics and in subsequent work with registrants (constitution reprints, manuals, guides for teachers, material for general distribution in the South on the problem).

b) Acting as the agency for the financing and the maintainance of clinics.

c) Serving, nominally, as the paymaster for the student field staff, and receiving various support funds that might develop.

III. Development of an SDS discussion program in the South would serve as a broad complementary action for the whole registration program. There are in the South almost no campus groups concerned with national and international social, economic and political issues. There is little opportunity within the regular college program to develop such concerns. The South has become a region set apart and isolated from any continuing current of progressive and political thought. Student governments on most white campuses have withdrawn from the United States National Student Association and have formed the Southern Student Government Association, which does not deal with questions of social consequence; local campus political discussion or action groups are non-existent; Young Democrats, where they are present, are usually the Dixiecrat variety; denominational groups, which are the chief carriers of discussion, tend to steer away from controversial issues.

Intelligent discussion and thought on these white campuses is obviously necessary if the colleges are to become a center for the kind of social and political awakening in the South which will recognize Negro registration, or the civil rights advance generally, as necessary and valuable. The Southern student civil rights movement has stirred the Southern Negro campuses, but the focus on "non-political" action has provided little incentive for discussion of the issues that face the South, or the nation as a whole, in any context save civil rights. Thus the same sort of encouragement is necessary on Negro campuses if the move toward enfranchisment is to be paralleled by an increasing understanding of the issues which are to be voted upon.

There will certainly be many sources of resistance to any organized promotional effort of campus discussion programs and groups. It will be branded communist and subversive; it will suffer harrassment by university authorities; it will be misunderstood by many students. Perhaps most significant will be the feeling, long current within southern civil rights movement, that political discussion will introduce devisive issues and disrupt the unified thrust of the action program. We think, however, that there are a significant group of students and faculty — on both white and Negro campuses — and many people prominent in the adult community who are now ready to support such an effort. Particularly within the context of political awareness produced by a voter registration drive, we think it possible to initiate campus political discussion groups which could deal with a broad range of issues and eventually be recognized as legitimate and respectable liberal centers on campuses.

If such activity is seen as an appropriate correlate to the voter programs, and could secure financial backing, the first step would be the assignment of an SDS field secretary to the South — beginning as early as possible in the Fall 1961. Principally, the person would be laying the ground work for the subsequent program, developing contacts with Southern civil rights grups, establishing communication with faculty and students on various campuses and with Southern liberal adults in various fields who could serve as informal advisors and resource persons. On the basis of these preliminaries we would prepare a project proposal, for possible foundation support, of a two year program in the South. As now conceived, we would see such a proposal involving:

a) The publication of a pamphlet and a series of discussion guides on regional social, economic and political problems for use as resource material for discussion groups and for general distribution.

b) The organization of a group of speakers and resource persons who would be willing to meet with discussion groups or address the campus in meetings planned by the groups, and generally, to aid in the development of the program. The collection of program resources in the national office — or perhaps a regional office — that would aid in setting up such forums.

c) In the spring, bringing together a number of Southern youth and adult leaders in an invitational conference to review the activity experience of the fall to define better the problems with which the program will have to deal and to plan a phased, long-term strategy.

d) A series of conferences in leadership techniques, national and international issues, and regional problems, designed primarily to overcome the isolation of individuals on campus and to increase the confidence and experience of the student leadership.

The aim of this program would be to establish on perhaps 50 southern campuses, within a two year period, political issue clubs or liberal discussion groups. These might be either SDS chapters or independent groups loosely associated with and serviced by the SDS. We would see those groups as the necessary base of political education which should properly parallel the registration of voters.

Students for a Democratic Society

New York 3, New York

What is the S.D.S.?

Students for a Democratic Society is an association of young people on the left. It seeks to create a sustained community of educational and political concern: one bringing together liberals and radicals, activists and scholars, students and faculty.

It maintains a vision of a democratic society, where at all levels the people have control of the decisions which effect them and the resources on which they are dependent. It seeks a relevance through the continual focus on realities and on the programs needed to affect change at the most basic levels of economic, political and social organization. It feels the urgency to put forth a radical, democratic program counter posed to authoritarian movements both of Communism and the domestic Right.

The S.D.S. is an organization being built; its program and structure will be formalized at a national convention, 14-17 June 1962. Broadly it represents the concern of students for a multi-issue educational and action center responsive to the needs, idealism and intellect of a new generation seeking its future in peace and social justice. It is organized as a national membership association: it looks to the formation of chapters on campuses and in high schools, to loosely affiliating independent clubs and to building an at-large membership.

A Statement of Need.

The time is one of revolution. The clash between East and West and the development of the Soviet Union, China and international communism are but overtones to that revolution. An exploding world population and a nuclear weaponry threatening to explode the world, new nationalisms seeking the readiest way to throw off economic exploitation, poverty, and political dependency; complex bureaucratic and corporate structures changing the relation of man to his work, to his government and to his community; incredible strides in technology, medicine and industrial productivity: these are the new realities. They challenge our conventional notions of freedom and democracy; the reconstruct our ideas of the possible. Yet, paradoxically, America lacks now the one force that might react constructively to this world in upheaval -- a creative, daring, and politically organized left.

What is needed is a left that is public, responsible and influential -- not one housed in garrets, lunatic and ineffectual; a left that is visionary yet ever developing concrete programs -- not empty or deluded in its goals and sterile in its action; a left that is idealistic and hopeful -- not deadened by its failures or chained by a myopic view of human possibility; a left that is both passionate and reflective -- not timid and intellectually paralytic; a left which demands that American politics be vivified by controversy -- not one that emasculates its principles before the icons of unity and bipartisanship; a left that stimulates and gives honor to the full movement of human imagination -- not one that induces sectarian rigidity or encourages stereotyped rhetoric.

The leadership for such a movement comes now too infrequently from the Democratic or Socialist parties, the trade unions, the liberal, civil rights, civil liberties and peace organizations, the writers and members of the various professions. While urging such institutions to regenerated motion for genuine reform, we look to the American University as one basis for the development of the movement we envision. We are not unseeing apologists for the numerous problems of the academic community, but we find in it the resources with which we might forge a progressive social movement, one that is relevant in its confrontation of the serious issues facing man, farsighted in its penetration, bold in its reemphasis of principle and enunciation of program.

Purposes:

1) to develop among students a concern for contemporary social, political and economic problems, looking both to immediate remedial programs and to a broader view of an humane social order where such problems would not exist.

2) to build a movement of University reform seeking to establish conditions of academic freedom and internal democracy and to make the academic community a creative and penetrating force confronting the political and moral complexities of our time.

3) to promote educated participation in movements of civil rights, civil liberties, and peace on the campus and the extension of these movements into the adult community - particularly with the view of coalesing such potentially allied interests as labor, farmer, minority group into a unified progressive force in American politics.

4) to serve as a democratic initiative against those forces of reaction that would respond to international and domestic challenge with military initiative, pseudo-patriotism, and with an anti-labor, anti-welfare defense of outmoded economic and political privilege.

Membership:

1) a commitment to democratic values and to the ideas of cooperation and planning as crucial integrating notions for the program of the left.

2) a willingness to identify yourself as one critical of contemporary society and to work others in the common exploration both of proximate alternatives and reforms and, as well, the long range re-thinking of social, economic and political philosophy.

3) a willingness to apply the same criteria of criticism and affirmation to nation-states, be they of the Sino-Soviet bloc or of the West, and to social movements, be they revolutionary movements of the left, liberal movements of reform or reactionary developments on the right.

4) the willingness, as students and faculty, to assert the full responsibility of membership in a university community, both of serious scholarship and of democratic participation in the decision making and direction of the institution.

Program and Policy:

The SDS National Convention, 14-17 June 1962, will adopt a "political manifesto" expressing the intellectual and programatic outlook of the organization. This will focus particularly on a delineation of the concept "democracy" as it applies in such varied realms as industrial organization, education, the arts, colonial revolution and economic development, the Soviet Union and international communism, etc. It is hoped that this will provide a much needed statement of conviction and program for the young left in America.

Civil Rights: We support a program of direct action and political organization which strikes at the economic and power base of the present institutions of social exploitation. This means that the civil rights movement must focus the commitment to non-violence on specific forms of social dislocation that disrupt the functioning of those institutions, that it must look for allies in the labor and liberal movements, that it must associate itself with an educational program examining the context of the race issue, the structure of established institutions, the road-blocks to change and specific political objectives. The struggle for racial equality cannot be separated from the struggles for democracy in local politics, the work place, the control of public resources, the planning of public welfare.....We work with the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee and serve as a northern liaison and participation in the Southern Student Freedom Fund.

Peace: We believe that initiatives toward disarmament and disengagement must replace "deterrence" as the central thrust of American foreign policy. Such initiatives are necessarily tied to a broader policy reform: support of anti-colonial and progressive nationalist movements, free trade and travel and expanded economic aid, etc. Essentially a viable alternative must be created to the complex of military and industrial and investment interests that derive profit or stability from the present system. Hence, we emphasize the organization of "political seminars" to conduct research pointed to influencing legislative and decision making elites on both the national and local levels, to do the detailed planning toward demobilization and economic conversion, to initiate education and action in the community toward building a base of local political support and pressure for national policy shift.....We work closely with the Student Peace Union and are a cooperating organization in the National Turn Toward Peace and the TTP youth council. We were a co-sponsor of the recent "Washington Action Project."

Higher Education: We see the university as a vital base of resources for political action in the society. Believing that the young intellectual is becoming increasingly important as an agent of social change, it is imperative that there be freedom of political thought and activity within the university. Our demands for university reform focus on the introduction of controversy and concern for major public issues into the curriculum and classroom, opposition to in loco parentis, student and faculty control of educational policy, and full freedom of inquiry, press and assembly.

Student Political and Economic Organization: We support action for the 18 year old vote and the right of students to vote and organize politically where they go to school. We support student economic organization: in unions or other associations for a minimum wage and non-discriminatory hiring, in tenant associations or cooperatives for fair rents. We support the unionization, collective bargaining, and right to strike of the university employees, both service and academic. We support campus political parties and action to make student government an effective force of student interest - in the university and in the community at large.

National Politics: As an educational organization, SDS does not engage directly in the support of candidates or particular items of legislation. It urges making demands on political candidates for both national and local office and for being organized in a way to give support to candidates that pledge themselves to progressive programs. It sees as paramount the organization of a Caucus in the Democratic party directed to expelling the Dixiecrats at the 1964 Convention. It sees making this a unifying demand through all areas of the student movement, particularly in civil rights and peace. It supports student involvement in reform political organization both as an independent radical force and representing the interests of youth. It sees the need for a national framework and meeting place and educational center for such young people in politics.

Membership

Membership is open to all young people who support the aims and purposes of the organization. Dues are $1.00 for the year. Non-members who want to receive the materials of the organization may become associates. Contributing associates ($1.00 per year or more) will receive the regular membership mailings, meeting notices and right to attend conferences and participate in local program. Non-contributing associates will be maintained on the mailing list for two months. Members receive without cost, all publications of the organization and of the LID.

Local Organization

The SDS membership is organized in chapters and associated groups. A local group carries on seminars, research, brings speakers to campus, cooperates in action programs, attends regional and national conferences. The national office provides publications, speakers, and other resource assistance. A chapter has representation on the national committee and gets priority in program service from the national office. It also sends voting delegates to the convention. An associated group, while remaining completely independent, expresses agreement with the organization and its desire to work within the general framework of SDS program. It has observer status on the national committee and participates at the convention without vote.

History

The SDS reorganization which began last Fall followed several years of slight activity. Its history, however, chronicles the course of the young left in America since the year 1905. Founded by Jack London, Upton Sinclair, Clarence Darrow and others, it has maintained a program of educational activity on the campus, publications and conferences and training institutes. Throughout it has fought (often by necessity)the battles for academic freedom, the right to assemble, to speak, to print and to promote controversy.

SDS supported labor organization--on picket lines, in campaigns for strikers relief, in organization of the unemployed; it stood against imperialism and fascism--protesting American intervention in China, Nicaragua and Mexico, giving aid to democratic underground movements; it joined in the public outrage over the Sacco and Vanzetti convictions. It played a central role in the anti-war strikes of the early '30s, supported the Oxford Peace Pledge, fought against the influence on the military in the Universities, against ROTC and patriotic oaths. It organized student employees into unions, called strikes against administration suppression of student rights, and served continually as a defender of civil rights. It is from this tradition of "agitation, Education, Organization" that SDS renews its program.

League for Industrial Democracy

A youth organization, if it strives for political relevance, must connect itself with movements in the "adult community" of labor, civil rights, civil liberties, urban reform and international world order. Throughout its history, SDS has functioned as the youth affiliate of the L.I.D., long a gathering place for radicals and progressives carrying on the struggles for democracy in America and throughout the world. At this point, with the adult left in tatters and without clear direction, a responsibility of the student movement falls heavily toward the recreation of a unifying intellectual and political center on the left.

Where Does the S.D.S Get Its Support?

The principal source of support is the L.I.D., and through it, labor unions, educational foundations and individuals in the adult community. The expansion of program requires greater reliance on direct contributions from members and friends. All contributions are deductible for income tax purposes.

Dear Mrs. Sudds:

Senator Leroy Johnson has forwarded to me your letter of December 7, in which you inquire about the procedure for organizing a voter registration campaign.

We work through organizations and at the moment we have assigned the Shreveport area to the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. SCLC has a director there in the person of Rev. Harry Blake (2834 Abbie St., Shreveport - phone 424-8044) and I would strongly urge that you get in touch with him and find out what plans are currently under way, if any, regarding registration in the Shreveport area.

Although the NAACP is not receiving any funds from us for work in the Shreveport area, I know that it is the policy of the NAACP to make some effort toward voter registration wherever they have branches and in this regard I would suggest that you get in touch with Rev. C.C. McLain, Shreveport branch president (1140 Kenneth Ave., Shreveport).

We would also be interested in knowing your own opinions regarding the status of any voter registration drives which have been conducted in Shreveport during the past year, the problems encountered, and, from your observation, the reasons for any apparent failures in getting more people registered, or not getting people to attempt registration. You may be assured that your reply will be kept in the strictest confidence in the event that you would not want to be quoted.

4-Project Proposals

We welcome your interest in voter registration and would like to hear from you further.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sir:

I would like to find out more about organizing a voter registration drive or campaign quietly and discreetly and also send information concerning this grant. I believe you called it the Branton Fund.

Again, may I commend you for the inspiring words you gave at the Citizenship Conference in New Orleans.

Dear Ms. Cohen:

Your letter of January 4 to Mr. Jack Minnis is being answered by me for the reason that Mr. Minnis is no longer connected with the Southern Regional Council.

The Voter Education Project has no particular plans for beginning projects in white communities in Georgia but will consider a request from any group for work with voter education projects anywhere in the eleven states where we are working, without regard to the racial composition of the community.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Minish:

I was told that you are investigating the possibility of beginning projects in white communities in Georgia.

I have worked with SNCC in Georgia and Mississippi and I am very interested in the idea of working with white communities. I have talked with people and read about this and also have tried canvassing in the white community in Meridian, Miss.

I would be very interested in hearing what progress you have made so far and what plans are being formed.

Thank you!

Dear Mr. Blackwell :

Upon the instructions of our branch president, Rev. Mr. F. R. Rowe, I am writing to let you know that we are interested in having you conduct a voter education program in our community.

Here in the Ben Hill County area, we have undertaken a massive drive to register every eligible Negro voter in this county. However, we find that many persons can not qualify due to the lack of certain knowledge. We would hope to overcome this obstacle by conducting a program similar to the one held most recently at Koinonia Farm near Americus, Georgia.

Enclosed you will find a clipping from one of the local newspapers which shows a fairly good count of the number of persons (900) who registered to vote January 31st and February 1st, just prior to the closing of the books for the county primary. Of these 900 registrants, Negroes constituted approximately 40%. In these two days we were able to register approximately 360 new voters and we hope to do much better in the weeks to come. Our drive will continue until the books close just prior to the September general election.

We would like to know if it is possible for you to come to this area sometime in the very near future. If you find it possible to do so, please let us know the approximate dates so we can plan along those lines. Mail your return letter either to me or to : Rev. Mr. F. R. Rowe ; 603 East Roanoke Drive ; Fitzgerald, Georgia.

Your consideration of this matter will be deeply appreciated by all of us.

Yours sincerely,

Arthur B. Haynes

Dear Mr. Keech:

It was not until Leslie Dunbar returned from the Research Conference on Negro Politics in Chapel Hill that I became aware of the fact that your letter to Jack Minnis of April 13 had never been answered. Mr. Minnis left the Voter Education Project in December of 1963.

The Voter Education Project is now in the terminal phase and we intend to withdraw support to our participating agencies in October and start writing our final report after the November Election.

Because of the limitations on the one hand and lack of staff on the other, we do not feel that your project could be completed in time to be of value to the Voter Education Project even though we think well of your proposal.

We would be pleased to share with you any information which we might have available or could obtain and would hope that you would share with us any information which might be of value to Voter Education Project. I note that your proposal was prepared in October of 1963 and I would be interested in knowing what developments have taken place regarding your project since that time.

Dear Mr. Minnis:

Enclosed is a statement of a research project I plan to carry out this fall, attempting to measure the effects of increases in Negro voter registration on Negro social and economic status.

Because the Southern Regional Council is active in encouraging Negro registration, Mr. Herbert Jacob and I thought the Council would be interested in my project and that it might be willing to help support it financially. While the University of Wisconsin is giving me a small stipend, it will not be enough to cover all my expenses.

In any case, I wonder if you can suggest any information that would be helpful in carrying out my research, whether collected by the Council or otherwise. Please let me know if you would like me to send you further information about the proposal. Thank you for your consideration.

TO: DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE October 1963
FROM: WILLIAM R. KEECH
ADVISOR: PROFESSOR AUSTIN RANNEY
SUBJECT: PROPOSED TOPIC FOR PH. D. DISSERTATION

THE EFFECTS OF INCREASES IN NEGRO VOTER REGISTRATIONS UPON NEGRO SOCIAL STATUS IN SELECTED SOUTHERN COUNTIES

How much difference has the grant of the vote to previously disfranchised Negroes in the southern United States made in terms of improving their social and economic position? The theory behind the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960, and behind considerable activity on the part of the Justice Department and certain private organizations is that political rights are basic to social and economic rights and that the vote is a major tool, if not the major tool, to be used by the Negro in achieving first-class citizenship.

Thus this question has considerable importance for current public policy if for no other reason than that extensive resources are being poured into the enterprise of getting the Negro the vote. The question has even wider implications, however, for democratic theory and the empirical study of politics. It is an item of contention between democratic theorists and Marxists whether the vote is actually an effective tool for petitioning the government and getting a response or merely a sham that does not get to the real conflicts in society. This is of course bound up with the theory that voting rights are closely connected with social and economic rights. The study would shed light on the nature of the relationship between governors and governed in the electoral process. We know far more about how interest groups and parties function as an input into the political system than we do about the slack that exists between the voters and decision makers. This project would answer some of the relevant questions and perhaps point up guidelines for further research. It would shed light on the question of how the vote can be used to further the ends of a group.

I propose to isolate a number of counties in the [redacted] southern states where registration statistics are collected by race, and in which there has been a substantial increase in Negro registration that has gone over a threshold of, say, 25-30% of the total electorate. I would visit those counties, or certain of them, and check local statistics on public services, expenditures, etc. that would indicate some of the changes that might have taken place, and interview elected public officials and both white and Negro civic leaders to ascertain their perceptions of actual concrete changes, if any, and of other less tangible changes that had taken place as a result of the change in registration. I would then try to relate the changes or lack of them to many factors such as the Negro percentage of the total population, Negro percentage of all registered voters, the nature of political cleavage in the county, the nature of Negro and white civic leadership there, etc. This way the circumstances under which the grant of the franchise to a group of relatively high cohesion with relatively common grievances and demands is most likely to get results might be isolated from those under which negligible change takes place.

Following is a list of some of the sources which have been consulted in the course of formulating this problem, all of which point in one way or another to the need for a comparative study of this sort.

Dear Dr. Morsell:

You called me several days ago to inform me that NAACP was interested in conducting registration programs in North Carolina between now and the October 24 deadline, and wanting to know what areas VEP would consider making grants to NAACP.

After reviewing our files and places where we are likely to make direct grants, I find the following: We previously made a grant to SCLC for work in certain eastern North Carolina counties and this program was completed. At the moment, there is no specific request for a new program but I expect that they will be asking for a grant. We would consider a grant to NAACP for any of those counties if you had strong reasons for wanting programs in any of those counties. I refer to the following counties in eastern North Carolina:

Bertie
Martin
Northampton
Currituck
Gates
Chowan
Tyrrell
Washington
Pitt
Pasquotank
Hertford
Perquimans

Project Program

In addition to some consideration for eastern North Carolina, we would consider making a grant to NAACP for work in any North Carolina city or county excepting the following:

Winston-Salem
Halifax County
Warren County
Wilson County

I know that some of the places in North Carolina have year-round registration, while others will be open for only a short period immediately preceding the election. If you desire grants in North Carolina, then you should submit a request to VEP, together with some budget estimate for each place requested and it would also be helpful if you would list your geographic priorities in the event that we cannot support you full request.

Dear Mr. Doyle:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter regarding a request for information on the qualifications for work under the Voter Education Project.

We have previously made a grant to the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee for voter registration work in Selma, Alabama, and it is my understanding that that work is still going on in registration. This does not mean, however, that we would not consider making a grant to another group but we probably would decline to make a grant as long as another agency is working on the problem in the same town.

If you care to submit an application for financial assistance to us then your letter should give the following information:

1. Tell something of the history of the Dallas County Voter League and give the names and addresses of its officers.

2. How many registered Negro voters are there in Dallas County at the present time?

3. What method do you intend to use in an effort to get more Negroes registered and how do you think that method differs from the method which has been used by SNCC or any other organization?

4. How long do you plan to run your program and how much is your budget?

5. What registration goal do you think you can realistically accomplish during your drive?

6. What criticism, if any, do you have of the manner in which SNCC or any other agency has been conducting a program in your county?

You may be assured that we will keep your reply confidential and we will be pleased to give consideration to any request you care to submit to us.

Dear Mrs. Clayton:

Following our telephone conversation last week, there was unanimous agreement here at the Voter Education Project that we should support a voter registration program in Warren County.

In reviewing our files, we have decided to explore the possibility of expanding the project to take in the entire Second Congressional District. A program somewhat in line with this was suggested to us in February ~~this~~ year in a letter we received from Mr. Floyd McKissick, and it appears that your husband is president of the organization known as the Multi-County Civic and Educational Association.

Because of the possibility of the expansion of this program, we have decided to defer any final action for a few days to give our Field Director, Mr. Randolph T. Blackwell, a chance to come into your community and make a field study. Mr. Blackwell very likely will be in your area March 25 or 26, and I will be getting in touch with you and several leaders in the Second Congressional District. Mr. Clarence Mitchell of the Civil Rights Commission working out of Washington was here in New Orleans and in Baton Rouge, Louisiana seeking information relative to voter registration discrimination practices against prospective Negro registrants. We were unable to furnish this information for any parish other than Orleans. This points up the fact that there is a need for us to extend our voter registration activity into other parishes of this state in order to be in a position to give such information in the future.

In talking to Mr. Mitchell about the cost of such a registration program and the problems of having insufficient funds for such programs, it was suggested that we contact you soliciting your aid and advice on how we may be able to receive some financial assistance with our voter registration program.

We have been working in this field for the past eighteen (18) years. We feel that with some financial assistance we can do much to increase Negro voter registration in our state that could prove to be of great importance in the coming presidential election. Some of our work is known to Mr. Herbert Tucker of the Civil Rights Division. He was in Washington four (4) years ago with the Kennedy administration; he now resides in the state of Massachusetts.

Dear Friends:

Thank you for sending us a copy of your July 30, 1964, report on your voter registration drive in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. We wish to commend you for your special efforts in trying to get eligible Negroes registered to vote.

VEP is now supporting some rather extensive registration efforts throughout North Carolina, but we note that Chapel Hill is not included. If you would care to submit a budget proposal to VEP in connection with your current registration campaign, then we would be pleased to examine the same immediately. This letter should not be construed as any assurancesthat we can make you a grant, but we will make every effort to see if there is not some way which we can assist your program, provided it is conducted on a non-partisan basis.

Sirs:

We hope that you will be interested in our progress report for Negro voter registration in Orange County, North Carolina. In May, 1962, we had a general reregistration in this county. Before the reregistration took place there were 15,498 persons registered in the county. Of this total 13,988 were white; 1,510 were Negroes. Now the total registration stands at 16,401. Of this total 14,091 are whites; 2,310 are Negroes. This figure for Negro registration represents about 35% of the potential Negro registration. (Negro population in Orange County is about 10,600 out of 42,400). We hope that we will be able to add to the total of registered Negro voters by about 400 every registration period.

We hope that these figures may be of some interest in your VEP program.

Dear Chapel Hillian,

In a quiet, unpublicized way the Chapel Hill Voter Registration Committee has been increasing the number of Negro citizens registered to vote in this township. We have been so successful in our work that we feel that all of our block captains, contributors, volunteers, and friends would be interested in the following progress report.

The Chapel Hill Voter Registration Committee was organized in mid-December, 1963, out of a pressing need to make Chapel Hill's Negro citizens more active politically. With a small number of hard-working, energetic Negro and white volunteers, the Committee conducted a house-to-house survey and registration drive throughout the Negro communities in this township during the December 21, 1963-January 4, 1964 registration period. The results of that first canvass were, we feel, most gratifying. Of some 1,430 Negro adults contacted twenty-one and older, some 746 were found to be registered. The registration campaign added 143 more new names to the voting lists.

Two filing cards have been made for each person contacted. One of these cards goes into a file of all Negro citizens of voting age. The other card goes into a "registered voter" or "non-registered voter" file. In this way we are able to determine exactly who is and who is not registered to vote. Continuing survey work has brought us into contact with 1,962 Negro adults through last week.

The frequency of such comments as "I don't know what I'm voting for," or "What good is my vote anyway?" prompted the Committee to organize itself into a permanent registration and education body. We have since divided the township into small units, each of which has a block captain responsible for from seven to twenty-five families. These block workers are now distributing regularly issued, non-partisan newsletters of objective abstracts of issues and platforms.

A campaign for funds in mid-February produced enough money to allow the Committee to continue in this most basic work. We were able to construct a Voter Information Booth, which was placed in a central location in the Negro community during the registration period prior to last spring's primary. There Negroes were able to determine whether they were registered, receive newsletters, or get rides to the polls. Furthermore, we have been able to purchase numerous posters, leaflets, and "Iam A Registered Voter Are You?" lapel buttons. Funds have also gone into supplies for newsletters, into postal materials, into filing and memeographing supplies, and into advertising.

We have organized a highly successful telephone pool. Prior to the beginning of the registration period all non-registered voters in the township were called and were urged to register. Then four weeks later all registered voters were called the evening before election day and were reminded to vote.

The results of our newsletters, telephoning, and block captains during the May2-May 16 registration period were overwhelming. A total of 311 Negroes registered. It is particularly pleasing to note that many of the new registrants were elderly people who had never registered before in their lives.

Another activity has been to help keep the registration books up to date. During our survey, we found 59 people who had moved from the county, had died, or had been incorrectly registered. Those incorrectly registered were re-registered, while those no longer in Chapel Hill were removed from the books. Our results in brief, therefore, are as follows:

Registered as of December 20, 1963:	746
Added Dec. 21, 1963-Jan. 4, 1964:	143)	454	Percent increase:
Added May 2-May16, 1964:	311)		61%
Challenged May 23, 1964:	- 59
GRAND TOTAL	1141

The Committee has remained independent; its volunteers are all drawn from the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area. Since our beginning we have grown to include over 110 volunteers. Faculty members, teachers, housewives, workers, ministers, students, registrars, government, and civic leaders have donated their time and talents in an effort to make the Committee as effective as possible in its work.

We have every reason to believe that the efforts of these people have generated considerable enthusiasm in the Negro community. Although Negroes do not make up a majority of the voters in any of the township's twelve precincts (Northside comes closest with 39%), the percentage of Negroes voting in the Little Federal Plan election and in the two primaries was higher in every precinct than was the white turnout. In the first primary, for example, the Negro turnout ranged from a low of 73% in North Carrboro to a high of 86% in Northside. In the run-off primary the percentages ranged from 75% (South Carrboro) to 93% (Westwood). Furthermore, Many Negro citizens use our central telephone to ask questions and discuss issues. Our block workers have done a tremendous job and have been eagerly received. Our newsletters have been extremely helpful, too. Their discussion of the candidates and the issues apparently helped inform voters to the extent that a great many people refused to take pre-marked sample ballots distributed by other groups. The charge of local bloc-voting during the recent primary has no factual basis.

This summer's activity has centered around survey work in the rural parts of the township and in preparation for the General Election in November and the Town Election in May, 1965.

If you are interested in further information or have any questions about the Committee's activity, please call one of our co-chairmen: Mr. Mason at 967-1573, Mr. Caldwell at 929-2478, or Mrs. Donnelly at 942-6723.

We hope that we may have your continued support in our future activities.

Sincerely,

W. E. Mason III

Mr. Marion A. Wright
Chairman
Penn Community Services, Inc.
Linville Falls, North Carolina

Dear Mr. Wright:

We do not feel that Penn Community Services is seeking to inject itself into our program through any selfish desires, but rather because of the interest which you have always manifested in the problems of your community. This is the kind of interest which we welcome.

We made grants to the five major agencies last week to carry on 90-day crash programs in six southern states where there is still time to register in order to vote in the summer primaries. We are now making plans for a more orderly long-range program.

Just as soon as we develop more fully the long-range programs for the major participants, then we will turn our attention to the requests from local agencies. You perhaps will be interested in knowing that CORE will be working generally throughout the Sixth Congressional District of South Carolina, and in Clarendon, Sumter and York Counties, while NAACP will be working in the areas of Beaufort, Columbia, Greenville, and Charleston. The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee plans to do some work in Orangeburg County.

With kind personal regards,

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Branton:

I have your letter of April 27th and appreciate some of the difficulties with which you are confronted in launching your important new project.

Our only desire at Penn is to have you informed that our services and facilities are available at all times and in any way in which they may be used. We are not seeking to inject ourselves into your program but would like to perform any role which lies within our competence.

In the past there have been several seminars on voter registration at Penn. It may be that Courtney Siceloff could give you some ideas as to methods and personnel. I am sure he will be glad to do so upon your suggestion.

Best regards.

Yours sincerely,

Mr. Marion A. Wright

Dear Mr. Wright:

We are trying very hard to get the five major participants in our voter registration effort off the ground and working, and it will be a few days longer before we will be in a position to give any serious consideration to the request from Penn Community Services, Inc.

We do not have the funds which we had anticipated receiving for our first year's operation, and when we reserve the amount needed for our own staff operations it will not leave the amount that we would like to have for use by the five major agencies, to say nothing of participation by local groups such as Penn. Unless we get a substantial increase in grants during the first year, then it is highly probable that we may not be able to include Penn in the program for the rest of this calendar year. This should not be considered as a decision on our part at this time, but I do want to point out to you the problems which we are encountering with reference to available money.

You may expect to hear from us at an early date regarding our decision on Penn's proposal.

Very truly yours,

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES, INC.

Penn Community Services wishes to make its facilities and organization available to Southern Regional Council in connection with the Voter Registration Project, and suggests the following as being an appropriate use of such facilities:

1. For some years, Penn has maintained a conference center for meetings of bi-racial and other groups. We are prepared to house 100 persons in our own buildings and may extend that figure to 175 by using homes in the community. We also have classrooms, conference rooms and auditorium, as well as cafeteria; and audio-visual aids are available if desired.

The cost per person, per day, for three meals and over-night, is $4.00. These facilities could be used for workshops and conferences at any time they were not occupied by other groups.

This feature would involve no costs to the project, except such as were involved by use of the facilities.

2. In addition to the tender of services set out above, we feel that Penn may render more particular and concentrated services by assuming development of the program in the five South Carolina counties of Beaufort, Colleton, Dorchester, Hampton, and Jasper. These counties are all within the orbit of Penn's influence and present much the same picture. Attached hereto is a sheet showing the percentages of non-white population, according to the 1950 census, and the racial percentages of voter registration in 1958.

It will be observed that the Negro population runs from 53.3 to 65.2, but the percentage of voter registration runs from 5.4 to 16.9.

Hence, a concentrated effort will be appropriate and may reasonably be expected to demonstrate results.

As to the five counties mentioned, Penn has served as a meeting place for groups of leaders and enjoys, we believe, favorable and helpful contacts. These have arisen from 100 years of educational activity in the area.

The suggestion is that as to these five counties, Penn employ a full-time field worker, a resident of the area, with education and capacity to conduct these programs we have in mind.

Briefly, the program contemplates eight monthly workshops in each of the five counties, at which qualified volunteer workers would be instructed as to their duties.

In addition to the monthly workshops in each of the counties, we propose a quarterly workshop, to be held on Penn's campus, and to which all of the volunteer workers would be brought. At such quarterly workshops there could be comparison of methods and techniques involved and evaluation of the results.

The field worker would not himself engage in registration of voters, but would attempt to develop in each county competent persons who could perform that task.

The volunteer workers would be furnished transportation while in the field. Once a month, transportation of registrants to places where books of registration are kept would be provided.

In addition to the personal persuasion of persons to register, use would be made of the customary devices of form letters, posters, badges, spot radio announcements, etc.

It is evident from the statistics that a vast amount of apathy must be overcome and, in some instances, official and non-official opposition.

It is our view that the effort should extend over a period of two years and that a substantial result might reasonably be expected within that period. Whatever methods prove to be successful here would logically have application in other black-belt counties and in areas of large Negro population.

A feature of the program which we think would be significant elsewhere is spot-checking those who did register, with a view to getting expressions from them of the factors which induced them to register, and from a study of such results valid conclusions may be reached as to the effectiveness of the various methods employed.

Any budget for such an effort is necessarily conjectural, but the attached budget seems to be one of a practical nature.

Without particular reference to Penn's connection with the project, we enclose for such value as it may have, a list of devices, some of which may have some merit.

A less intensive effort, using only a part-time director, and with less travel and fewer workshops, could, of course, be conducted at less cost. If it is felt that the intensive effort above outlined would absorb a disproportionate amount of the available funds, Penn will be prepared to conduct any such program as may be thought advisable, and to submit estimates based upon more modest exertions.

Respectfully submitted,

APR 9 REC'D

In connection with a possible proposal by Penn to SRC for a role in the effort to increase voter registration, these matters would seem to require decision:

1. Penn would decide upon the geographic area in which it would operate — e. g., all of South Carolina, coastal South Carolina, or certain Southeastern counties. Should cities be excluded and Penn work only in rural areas?

2. Possible methods to be followed:

a. Stickers on car bumpers carrying some such slogans as:

"Your dog may be registered but are you?"

"I'm registered to vote; are you?"

"If you want to go ahead, register now."

b. Cards to be placed in store windows, post offices and other public places.

It may be that the Post Office Department would get up its own announcement and instruct postmasters to display.

c. Billboards at important road intersections or other highway locations. The language might be changed from time to time. Probably there are billboard advertising companies who would assume this responsibility for a price.

d. Spot radio and TV announcements. Possibly President Kennedy and other national political figures might furnish a tape recording of one or two minutes for use during the campaign. Local South Carolina public figures might do the same. The radio and TV stations may be induced to furnish this service gratis.

e. Tape recordings and records from the President and others might be secured for use in any public meeting or assembly.

f. Small ads may be kept standing in local newspapers giving the date and place where books of registration are kept open and names of officials in charge of such books.

g. Buttons or badges to be worn on coat lapels reading "I'm registered. Are you?", or some such language.

h. Leaflets to be handed to drivers of school buses for delivery to pupils as they unload. This device is credited with having defeated Dr. Frank Graham for the Senate in North Carolina.

i. Secure names of registered voters by townships or precincts. I am not sure how they are kept. Secure, also, from the Bureau of the Census names of heads of families living in such townships or precincts. A comparison of the two lists will furnish a complete list of unregistered heads of families. This could be extended to all adults, unless the process is too burdensome. With such list a mailing campaign could be instituted and travel routes mapped out for personal visitation.

j. Employ intelligent persons to make personal visits in the latter stages of the campaign after the mailing effort has been fully tried.

Arrange to furnish automobile transportation to carry possible registrants to the court house or other place of registration on days when the books are open.

k. Investigate the possibility of opening books of registration on certain days at conveniently located points in the county.

l. All Negro teachers should be supplied with materials which they could place in the hands of parents of their pupils. Perhaps this might be limited to principals.

m. All Negro ministers should be asked to make announcements from their pulpits calling attention to dates and places where registration may be completed.

n. All Negro club women should be urged to see that their members are registered.

o. Penn to conduct practically continuous institutions for training of personal workers. To such institutes there would be brought at frequent intervals those who have acquired experience and who could instruct beginners about strong and weak points in the methods they have employed.

p. A questionnaire should be prepared for spot checking of those who registered during the campaign. Such persons should be asked what factors or factor had influenced them to decide to register. All of the methods used in the campaign would be listed on the questionnaire and the registrant would be asked to ~~seek~~ check the methods which he felt had operated upon him. From the answers to such questionnaires the effectiveness of the various methods could be gauged.

2. Display stickers for homes:

3. Can N. C. Mutual Life Insurance Company and other large corporations be induced to co-operate by:

a. Including leaflet urging registration with premium notices and statements of account?

b. As to N. C. Mutual, by allowing credit of $_____ if remittance covering premium is accompanied by registration certificate?

c. As to savings banks , by crediting each new account of not less than $_____ with $_____if depositor presents registration certificate at time of opening account?

4. Examine vital statistics records of 20 years ago to determine who is this year becoming eligible to register. Enroll such in 21 Club with special approach to new voter.

Organization of Plans for Voter Registration Campaign for 1962 in the State of Tennessee

I. BACKGROUND

Tennessee requires no poll tax or literacy test and the only requirements for voting in Tennessee are residence in Tennessee for twelve (12) months and three (3) months in the county, and that persons be 21 years of age or above.

In order to vote in any election, the person must be registered at least thirty (30) days prior to the date of the election in which he intends to vote.

Tennessee is comprised of a total population of 3,567,089. Of this number, approximately 2,977,753 are white and 589,336, or 16.4% are non-white. The voting age population of Tennessee is 2,092,891. Of this number, 1,799,018 are white and 313,873, or 15% are non-white.

Tennessee presents a special problem in obtaining correct data on the number of registered voters on a state-wide basis. In Tennessee there is no central source of registration figures, however, in an effort to state some basis for determining where we are in terms of the number of registered voters, we will attempt to give some estimates together with some of our opinions deduced from sources available and our own thinking on this subject.

Margaret Price, in her pamphlet, The Negro and the Ballot in the South, published in 1959, gives the following figures on Negro registration in the State of Tennessee.

1952	85,000
1956	90,000
1959	185,000

The 1961 United States Commission on Civil Rights Report entitled, "Voting", gives the following data on registration in Tennessee based on a study of 63 of Tennessee's 95 counties. There is a voting age Negro population of 235,199 of which 150,869 are registered voters. This represents 64.1% of the total Negro adult population in 63 counties. The Civil Rights Report found that they were unable to obtain any information in the remaining 32 Tennessee counties with a combined Negro adult population of 78,674.

If we project the percentage of Negro registered voters given for the 63 counties of 64.1%, over the remaining 32 counties, this would give us an additional 50,351 registered voters for the State, making a total for Tennessee's 95 counties of 202,220 or 14% of the state registered voters. However, an examination of the figures given by the United States Commission on Civil Rights, it is obvious that many of the figures given, particularly for small counties, are incorrect in as much as the total number of registered voters exceed the population figures. This is due in all probability to the failure of the county registrar to purge the voter's list and by deleting names of voters who no longer should be on the list due to death, moving to another county or state, or failing to vote in a primary or general election at least over any four (4) year period, as prescribed by law.

In Shelby County, the records on registration are kept up-to-date and reflect accurate figures. The records further reveal in Shelby County that some 10% to 15% of the voters are dropped from the registration list each year due to failure to comply with State law. This has been true over the past three (3) years. If we arbitrarily decide to drop 15% of the estimation stated above of 202,220 registered Negro voters, this would give us a total Negro registration of 161,887. This figure does not seem exaggerated if the figures given by Margaret Price for 1959 of 185,000 by the United States Commission on Civil Rights Report are approximately accurate.

II. POPULATION DISTRIBUTION OF NEGROES OVER 21 IN TENNESSEE

After taking a brief glimpse at our position in Tennessee in terms of total Negro registered voters, we have arbitrarily assumed that Negro registrations approximately 161,000, however, the problem is how to increase the registration among Negroes in Tennessee. The ideal goal, based on a 1960 Census, would be approximately 314,000, or 100% of the adult Negro population of Tennessee. The realistic goal for 1962 would be approximately 200,960 or 64% of the adult population which represents an increase of 40,000. This would bring the state to a level of the Memphis and Shelby County registration. In Memphis and Shelby County, approximately 64% of the Negro adult population is registered to vote.

In approaching a state-wide voter registration campaign, it is obvious that the location and character of the Negro popuoation becomes a factor in attempting to plan a state-wide voter registration drive, thus, we face immediately the problem of determining where Negroes live in the State, and in what kind of areas, that is, urban or rural. Thus, we have included below charts showing Negro voting population distribution in Tennessee's 95 counties according to the United States' Census of 1960.

CLASSIFICATION OF COUNTIES BY DISTRIBUTION

OF NEGROES OVER 21 IN TENNESSEE

	No. of Counties	No. of Negroes over 21
Counties of over 10,000	5	216,363
Counties of 3,500 to 9,999	10	49,882
Counties of 1,000 to 3,499	20	31,624
Counties of 500 to 999	14	9,447
Counties under 500	46	6,557
TOTAL	95	313,873

Thus, from the chart above, it is readily seen that approximately two-thirds of the Negro population (216,363) reside in five (5) urban areas over against the vast majority (90,953) of the remaining one-third who reside in approximately 44 counties; with a very small percentage (6,557) residing in the remaining 46 counties. The population analysis reveals further that this distribution is important in determining the type of registration drive to be conducted. It is readily seen that we have five (5) types of counties to be concerned with, namely: (a) counties with primarily urban populations such as:

County	County Seat	Number	Location
Shelby	Memphis	119,030	West Tenn.
Madison	Jackson	10,416	West Tenn.
Davidson	Nashville	44,984	Middle Tenn.
Hamilton	Chattanooga	28,658	East Tenn.
Knox	Knoxville	13,275	East Tenn.
TOTAL----------		216,363

(b) In the next category, counties with small cities, possessing, however, great urban influence, we have ten (10) counties and they are:

Counties	County Seat	Number	Location
Rutherford	Murfreesboro	3,960	Middle Tenn.
Maury	Columbia	4,710	Middle Tenn.
Montgomery	Clarksville	5,916	Middle Tenn.
Williamson	Franklin	3,616	Middle Tenn.
Fayette	Somerville	7,215	Middle Tenn.
Hardeman	Bolivar	4,072	West Tenn.
Gibson	Trenton	4,903	West Tenn.
Haywood	Brownsville	6,295	West Tenn.
Lauderdale	Ripley	4,137	West Tenn.
Tipton	Covington	5,058	West Tenn.
TOTAL----------		49,882

(c) In counties with small towns but completely rural in character, we have twenty (20) such counties and they are as follows:

Counties	County Seat	Number	Location
Hainblen	Morristown	1,099	East Tenn.
Sullivan	Blountville	1,438	East Tenn.
Washington	Jonesboro	1,582	East Tenn.
Anderson	Clinton	1,034	East Tenn.
Blunt	Maryville	1,520	East Tenn.
Bradley	Cleveland	1,047	Middle Tenn.
Bedford	Shelbyville	1,603	Middle Tenn.
Franklin	Winchester	1,131	Middle Tenn.
Lincoln	Fayetteville	1,673	Middle Tenn.
Marshall	Lewisburg	1,042	Middle Tenn.
Wilson	Lebanon	2,231	Middle Tenn.
Giles	Pulaski	2,161	Middle Tenn.
Robertson	Springfield	2,304	Middle Tenn.
Carroll	Hentingdon	1,787	West Tenn.
Henry	Paris	1,977	West Tenn.

County	County Seat	Number	Location
Crockett	Alamo	1,586	West Tenn.
Dyer	Dyersburg	2,456	West Tenn.
Lake	Tiptonville	1,108	West Tenn.
Obion	Union City	1,829	West Tenn.
Weakly	Dresden	1,016	West Tenn.
TOTAL----------		31,624

(d) This area can be characterized as completely rural and agricultural in nature with small towns and villages throughout. Negroes are dispersed throughout these counties in small numbers with no large concentration any place. There are fourteen (14) such counties having a total Negro population of 9,447.

(e) The balance of the Negro population, numbering approximately 6,557, can be found in the remaining 46 counties. Negroes in these counties are pretty much tied to land lords as sharecroppers and not much can be accomplished in terms of county-wide voter registration.

In analyzing the Tennessee population we have also used the phrases, West, Middle, and East Tennessee. This classification can have some significance in organizing a state-wide voter registration. Racial prejudice tends to be more intense as one moves from east to west across the state. This has historic reasons not significant to this report but it must be recognized that these racial prejudices will have a bearing on the attitude of the Negro toward registration. In analyzing population figures, the following distribution appears:

	Total Adult Pop.	White Pop.	Negro Pop.	Percentage
EAST	800,790	746,022	54,768	17.45
MIDDLE	662,801	579,852	82,949	26.43
WEST	629,300	453,144	176,156	56.12
TOTAL	2,092,891	1,779,018	313,873	100.00

III. LEADERSHIP

In organizing the voter registration drive, we feel that it is important to develop leadership in the locale or area in which the particular drive is being conducted. Obviously it is very difficult but it must be done to conduct a registration campaign state-wide using one organization as a vehicle. It appears that we would all, by force of necessity, have to conduct many, many drives in many, many locales, using various techniques and approaches designed to fit the particular geographical area selected. Thus, we must have local leadership in any area chosen. While we feel that outside talent can be very helpful and is mandatory in some areas, the success of the drive will ultimately depend on the leadership and interest in the particular coummunity selected. In other words, any outside help whether it be from Tennessee or some other state, must recognize and gear itself to the promotion of local leadership with the thought in mind of fully cooperating with local talent, moving no faster than local talent is able to grasp and produce. The job is rather one of assistance than leadership. We will not labor the point of the necessity of developing local leadership, thus a serious consideration must be the theme throughout the State of any registration drive is to succeed.

IV. BASIC APPROACH TO STATE WIDE-VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVE

Thus having made some brief remarks concerning the population distribution and the necessity for utilizing local talent for leadership rather than to import outside talent capable of leading. We come next to the question of selecting the approach for organization of voter registration across the State. In counties and cities in group (a) above, that is above 10,000 population, we recommend that budgets and organizational plans be drawn up by local leaders in the respective counties and cities and that outside help should be based on the findings of local groups and assistance should be given only when requested. As to the organizations spear-heading such local registration drives, again we recommend that this be selected by the community to be served. For example, in Memphis, the local registration drives are conducted through an organization known as the Citizens Non-Partisan Voter Registration Committee, an organization which has existed since 1948 and which has successfully held registration drives up to the present.

In Nashville, an organization known as the Davidson County Political Council was recently set up. Voter registration is one of its objectives.

It may be well to request this group to submit plans for voter registration for Nashville, Davidson County and any outside help would take the form of such assistance as may be requested by the Nashville group.

There are similar groups such as NAACP in other cities in this catagory which have voter registration as a part of the local program. These groups should be directly involved for plans on organization and operation of voter registration drives in their respective communities.

In group (b) areas that is, counties from 3,500 to 10,000, we recommend that field workers skilled in the techniques of organization of voter registration campaigns be used to attempt to inspire local people to organize themselves in some group or organization for the purpose of conducting voter registration campaigns.

In some of these areas there are active chapters of the NAACP. We recommend that an attempt be made to get the local NAACP chapters to step up the voter registration program, in these areas. We further recommend that leaders in other group "b" counties of the State be encouraged to step up voter registration efforts in their respective counties.

In group (c) areas, to increase the tempo of voter registration campaigns or to aid in the development of such campaigns where no local drive is currently being conducted, we strongly recommend the leadership from Memphis to give assistance to counties in West Tennessee; leadership from Nashville to give assistance to each area or person in Middle Tennessee; and the same pattern be followed for leaders from areas around Knoxville and Chattanooga.

In group (d) areas, from 1,000 to 3,500, we recommend that experienced field workers be used to make contact with ministers in an attempt to organize voter registration programs within their respective churches. The contact should also be made to Masters of lodges in an attempt to secure a voter registration program with the members of the lodges. Again we feel that leaders from the urban areas from West, Middle, and East Tennessee should be called upon to give assistance to those counties located in the same grand division of the State, that is, West, and Middle and East Tennessee respectively.

In the group (e) counties, we feel that any voter registration campaign must be conducted almost exclusively within the churches. The church is the only organized group capable of reaching the few Negro citizens scattered throughout the balance of our State.

IV. TENNESSEE VOTER COUNCIL

Up to this point, we have attempted to give a glimpse of the Tennessee population for the purpose of suggesting some of the geographical problems in organizing voter registration campaigns across the State. We have suggested generally, that voter registration campaigns should rely primarily upon local talent from the areas in which the campaign will be conducted. However, we recognize the advantages of having a central organization to coordinate voter registration activity across the State. At present, there are no grass-roots state-wide organizations in being. Recently, leaders from across the State met to reorganize and revitalize an organization known as the Tennessee Council on Registration and Voting. This organization was organized approximately three (3) years ago but has not been active until recently. The Board of Directors, which is composed of 100 persons, contains representatives from all of Tennessee's nine (9) Congressional Districts. One of the goals of this organization is to coordinate voter registration drives across the State for the purpose of increasing voter registration among Negro citizens. We feel that this organization can be of great assistance in coordinating such a mass voter registration drive. The Tennessee Council on Registration and Voting, being primarily a leadership organization can work in cooperation and harmony with any local group having as one of its purposes, voter registration, and it is concerned with developing local groups that can take on the primary responsibility of actually conducting voter registration campaigns in the various locations across the State. For example, we can work in complete harmony and cooperation with the 15 branches of the NAACP located throughout the State of Tennessee.

This organization's program is one primarily of attempting to inspire and give directions, guidance and information to any local group interested in attempting to conduct voter registration in its locality. A great deal of the expense of this organization would stem from traveling; sponsoring banquets; mass meetings; and attempting to seek out people of leadership in various communities throughout the State in order to encourage them to organize their own voter registration drives. Further, it seeks to give assistance in trying to secure trained field workers to go into these communities properly supported and lend what talents, suggestions, and experiences they may have to the local group.

Our program necessarily involves a tremendous amount of correspondence, some telephone calls, also we would aid local communities attempting to work budgets and assist them in making requests to groups interested in aiding voter registration drives through financial aid. The objectives being to make the best use of funds available from other groups interested in voter registration such as labor unions, etc.

We also would provide copies of the laws concerning registration and election; conduct as many work shops as time permits in order to exchange ideas and experiences in voter registration across the State as well as ideas and techniques from other areas outside the State. To this end, we submit the following budget to coordinate a State-wide voter registration drive for the year 1962.

V. EXPENSE

1.	Transportation	$2,000.00
2.	Banquets and Meetings	2,000.00
3.	Postage	600.00
4.	Three secretaries (8 wks @ $50 each)	1,200.00
5.	Literature	1,500.00
6.	Office Rent	450.00
7.	Telephone Bill	400.00
8.	Office Supplies	700.00
9.	Rental/Office Equipment	500.00
10.	Three (3) Field Secretaries (8 wks @ $100 ea)	2,400,00
11.	State Director (2 mos @ $500 ea)	1,000.00
12.	Miscellaneous	500.00
	TOTAL----------	$13,250.00

VI. INCOME

Anticipated contributions from organizations interested in voter registration ---------- $13,250.00

The estimates given in the budget does not include any intensive door-to-door campaigning in the various counties. Primarily it concerns itself with coordination and organization of voter registration campaigns in the counties indicated above. The larger communities such as Memphis, Nashville, Chattanooga, Knoxville, and Jackson will submit separate budgets and plans for conducting their own voter registration drives.

Respectfully submitted,

Dear Mrs. Spearman:

Thank you for your informative letter of April 27 relating to voter registration efforts in the State of South Carolina.

A few days ago we launched our first effort toward voter registration in South Carolina, and we are pleased to report that CORE will be working in the 6th Congressional District, Clarendon and Sumter and York Counties; NAACP in Beaufort, Columbia, Greenville, and Charleston; and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee in Orangeburg County. In addition to this, we have another program which we are not at liberty to announce at this stage, but which is more of a research program to secure information about state and local programs in operation in South Carolina, rather than an actual registration program.

We appreciate the interest of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations in the Voter Project. We cannot consider at this time giving any financial assistance to the South Carolina Council. It may be that eventually we will consider some participation in the Voter Project by various state human relations councils, but at this time we are not considering such participation. We certainly hope that this will in no way diminish your own personal interest in voter registration efforts, and we welcome any suggestions and help which you and the Council might give to us or to the participating agencies in your state in trying to accomplish something in which we are all deeply interested.

I appreciate your comments with reference to the need for coordination of the efforts by the various groups, and that will be one of the primary responsibilities of our office. We hope to send someone from our staff into each of the various states from time to time, to help in the coordination of the various programs.

Kind personal regards.

Mr. Wiley A. Branton
Director Voter Education Project
Room 206 - 5 Forsyth St. N.W.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Mr. Branton:

Thank you for your good letter of April 19 concerning my inquiry referred to you by Paul Anthony.

Of the five major agencies, the NAACP, National Urban League, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Congress of Racial Equality, and Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, the NAACP is the only one with any significant roots in South Carolina. So far as I know, there has never been an Urban League in the State. SCLC has two board members. CORE assisted the student sit-ins on a short term basis, but evidently lacked staff resources for follow-op and follow-through. SNCC formerly had one representative from South Carolina who met monthly in Atlanta. Recently, however, this contact has not existed. Doubtless there will be a few South Carolina students to participate in the meeting in Atlanta on the 28th.

The NAACP have had a full time director for the past several years who has apparently worked hard to recoup the losses which that organization suffered following the Supreme Court decision on school segregation in 1954. Members of numerous local units signed petitions to school boards in their respective communities, for which many of them suffered economic and other types of reprisals. Because of the highly prejudiced treatment by politicians and the press, the NAACP has had an uphill fight to get public identification as members, numerous persons who would doubtless like to be active.

I give you the above information in line with a suggestion received today in a newsletter from Paul Rilling. Also, it is important that you have this information in the light of considering our request for financial assistance from the Voter Education Project.

In a state where many people, both Negro and white, act conservatively and are both confused and fearful, it is possible for a bi-racial organization to play a unique and significant role. This I believe the South Carolina Council on Human Relations does in South Carolina. The Council is unique, not only in the support and prestige which it enjoys, but also in the generous behind-scenes support and cooperation it is able to get both from governmental and voluntary agencies.

SCCHR has been cooperating fully and engaging in some joint programs in voter education with SCLC, especially in assisting Mrs. Septima Clark in making contacts and in recruiting teacher trainees. Furthermore, the Council and SCLC held jointly at Dorchester Center in McIntosh, Ga., a student workshop on voter registration. Subsequently teams of Negro college students are making their services available to adult groups where such are requested. The Council is helping to motivate groups to make use of these student teams.

A chronic ailment reported by all of us who have played any role at all in citizenship education is the need for motivating participation; why should I vote, for whom shall I vote, what are the issues? It is at this point that the Council has a unique role to play. We are called upon almost daily for services in line with the above, for which we are the agency best equipped.

In many cases, securing of information about State and Federal programs being initiated in South Carolina, and getting information about them to the persons for whom they are intended, is the most delicate job. I believe that this is highly important and directly related to motivating voter participation. The opportunities and demands have increased far beyond the limited resources of the Council personnel. We are, therefore, asking that the salary of a full-time person be assigned to us who, under my directionand with my assistance may make possible the development and enlargement of the Council's significant role and through the Council the enrichment of the extensive voter registration work in South Carolina which you state SCLC, NAACP, and CORE plan.

Frankly, it would seem to me that assistance is already needed in helping to coordinate the efforts of the several groups which are launching stepped-up campaigns. Regretfully, as is too often the case, a spirit of competition rather than cooperation and correlation develops.

Please let me have your reaction to this request at as early a date as possible. We are experiencing a growing sense of movement and are overwhelmed by the positive potentialities. We need help!

Dear Mrs. Spearman:

Paul Anthony has referred to me your letter to him of April 6, 1962, in which you express interest in applying to the Voter Education Project for a grant to do voter registration work on behalf of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations.

The Voter Education Project will be working primarily with five major agencies: NAACP, National Urban League, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Congress on Racial Equality, and Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. However, we plan to reserve some funds for use in participation by local organizations where special circumstances warrant our doing this.

I note that SCLC, NAACP, and CORE plan extensive voter registration work in South Carolina, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee would like to do some work there itself. Because of the limited funds which we will have available I doubt seriously if we could consider a request from the South Carolina Council on Human Relations this year.

If your Council has in mind working all over the state in key areas, then it would seem to me that it would be best to let one of the other organizations already engaged in voter registration work do the voter registration work in South Carolina. On the other hand, if you have a specific project in mind which will not duplicate the efforts of the other organizations, we might be able to take a second look at your request. We hope, however, that the membership of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations will give all cooperation possible to the various voter registration drives which will be going on during the next several months in your state.

Dear Paul:

I have an immediate need for the names and addresses of the three Negro leaders who spoke at the dinner meeting in the graduate dormitory at Atlanta U in connection with the SRC annual meeting in November. Please provide same for us, along with identifying information, at your earliest convenience.

I have succeeded in snowing under on my desk the announcement which gives the name of the person who will be heading the Voter Registration program. Because I think we should apply for a project, I shall appreciate your referring this part of my letter to him, with the request that we be sent any written statements as to policy, basis of applications, etc., which now be available.

Ever since students took part in a voter registration workshop conducted by Jack Odell of the SCLC at Dorchester, McIntosh, Ga., there has been real interest in a crash effort during the prolonged period from April 27 through May 12, during which registration books will be open in South Carolina. Also, I am sure that this will be a continuing interest in South Carolina for some time to come, and that SCCHR will have a unique contribution to make in the type of follow-through and persistency which will be needed to accomplish maximum results.

Dear Mr. Willis:

We have carefully studied your letter of May 4 regarding your plans for a non-partisan voter registration campaign in Memphis and Shelby County, and also your letter of May 9 regarding plans for a statewide registration project by the Tennessee Voter's Council.

In view of the fact that several different organizations will be working in Tennessee toward increased voter registration, we do not see where we can contribute to the proposed plan submitted by the Tennessee Voter's Council. In order to get some work done in your state prior to the June 27 registration deadline we have made a grant to NAACP, a part of which will be used by them to support registration programs in Memphis, Fayette County, Haywood County, Knoxville, Chattanooga, and Clarksville. We have also contributed to Southern Christian Leadership Conference for programs in Knoxville and Chattanooga. Another program which will be jointly supervised and administered by the Nashville Branch NAACP and the Davidson County Independent Political Council will get under way immediately in Davidson, Giles, Maury, and Williamson Counties.

In view of the fact that we have previously approved a program for NAACP which includes Memphis, we feel that we should not make any separate contribution to the Shelby County registration drive except through NAACP. If it develops that additional assistance is needed in Shelby County, then I would suggest that this be brought to the attention of NAACP officials working with the Memphis campaign.

I feel that you are certainly to be congratulated for the very fine registration job which you have done in Memphis, where you have the highest Negro registration of any city in the South.

With every good wish for continued success, I am,

Charlotte, North Carolina

Dear Mr. Jones:

In reply to your letter of November 20, in which you inquire as to the conditions which must be met for participants in the Voter Education Project, I think you already know that we are working with five major participating agencies and that they will receive the bulk of any funds which we might have available.

VEP will, however, give consideration to applications from other organizations or agencies (but not to individuals) and in doing so we will consider the following factors (not necessarily in the order given):

a) Has the proposed geographical area already been assigned to some other agency?

b) The applicant's history or reputation for organizational stability and responsibility.

c) The applicant's history or reputation evidencing interest in voter education and/or registration efforts in a non-partisan manner.

d) The merit of the applicant's program and its probable success in achieving an enlarged registration.

Project Proposals

e) The proposed cost of the applicant's program.

We have already assigned the Charlotte area to NAACP and I am in receipt of a letter from Dr. John Morsell, dated November 20, in which he informs me that the program has already been started in Charlotte. Under the circumstances, we would not consider making a grant to any other organization in the Charlotte area at this time.

We are enclosing a carbon copy of this letter in the event that you want to mail it to Dr. Hawkins.

We appreciate your interest in the Voter Education Project and would appreciate any comments you might have regarding the program which we are supporting in Charlotte as well as in other cities in North Carolina. We mailed you a schedule of all of our programs which should indicate cities where we are working in your state.

Sincerely yours,

5 Forsyth Street - Room 206
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Brauton:

Dr. R. A. Hawkins has asked me to get for him information as to what funds are available from the Voter Education Project, and what are the conditions to be met, etc.

Dr. Hawkins is a self-appointed Negro leader who heads a Political Action Committee which he organized. He is intelligent and able, and has put out some good statements in criticism of the school board, the hospital authority and the City Council. He is at odds with the local and State NAACP. This stems in part, it seems to me, from the fact that the NAACP has not come forth with agressive leadership, but may be in part because Dr. Hawkins is not content with any organization that he is not running.

I rather think that Dr. Hawkins would make good use of funds to increase voter registration but I don't know enough about the local situation to advise as to whether it would be wise to give him funds, or to give them to the NAACP or SNCC or SCLC for work in Charlotte.

If funds are available, you might let me know what the conditions are, and if I can be of any help in seeing that the best use is made of these funds, I will be glad to help.

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 14th, in which you tell us of your current voter registration program. We are pleased to know that the Atlanta Civic Council is working so earnestly at voter registration, for we feel that this is the key to many of the gains which people in this community are seeking.

The Voter Education Project has been assisting financially in voter registration efforts in the greater Atlanta community, however, we have decided to conduct all of our efforts through the All Citizens Registration Committee. If you are not already working with the All Citizens Registration Committee, then I would strongly suggest that you get in touch with Rev. Fred Bennett, 236 Auburn Avenue, N. E., who is directing the activities of the current registration campaign in Atlanta.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Mr. Branton:

This is to inform you that the Atlanta Civic Council, which consist of several grass root communities Civic organization of the South Side Atlanta, has open a community office. We believe you share our conviction that citizens of a community wishing to create an atmosphere of dignity, decency, and respect will be in jeopardy if their community citizens is not inform. This is our reason for fogoing this tremendous task. We want to see our communities get their share of better housing, decent business, better public transporation, recreation facilities, good zoning and most of all Voter Registeration.

We are in the process of conducting a community wide Voter Registeration program. We believe the majority of the non-register voter is in the South Side Atlanta section. We are doing a good job in getting a few to register. We can and will do a better job if we had some finanical aid. If you know of anyone can be of any finanical assistance to us in this program please notify.

An immediately reply will be appreciate.

Sincerely Yours,

Dear Ms. Hortenstine:

I apologize for the delay in answering your letter of May 13 regarding your voter education program in Haywood County, Tennessee Junell through 23. Your letter was referred to one of our staff persons for comments and it has just come back to my desk.

We have previously made a grant to the National Assodation for the Advancement of Colored People for voter education programs in several areas, including Fayette and Haywood counties. I am sending a copy of your letter and of this letter to Mr. W. C. Patton who is a regional field secretary for voter registration work for NAACP and I am asking him to check with your project in Haywood county to see what assistance he can offer or suggest as he is one of the most skilled persons in voter education in the South.

In order to speed things up you might write to Mr. Patton and tell him exactly what you would like for him to do (or have someone do) and please mail a copy of your letter to me, if you do write him.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Friends,

At the suggestion of Rev. Otis Moss I am writing to ask your help in conducting some classes in voter education at a work camp which we will be holding in Haywood County, Tennessee part or all of the time from June 1-23. The enclosed material will tell more of what we have been doing in Haywood and Fayette Counties through workcamps, but the chief reason the Haywood County Civic and Welfare League wants to have a workcamp at this time is to get more of the Negroes there registered. We workcampers work with our muscles and are not skilled in voter education, and that is why we are contacting you. We expect to devote each evening to classes, probably going from district to district after an initial meeting for the entire Haywood County Civic and Welfare League. I'm sure the students will be of some help and will be willing to do all they can, but persons more skilled than they should be in charge. Do you have someone who could come to the workcamp for part or all of it?

The Haywood County League is so anxious not to be diverted from this goal of getting the people registered that it did not even furnish us with a project for manual work! So that will leave our workcampers idle in the daytime unless they find a project or unless the voter education program is such that some leg work can be done by students in the daytime when all the farmers are out in the fields. Any suggestions for the latter would be much appreciated by the Haywood County committee.

The secretary of the Workcamp Committee of the league writes: "Information furnished us a few days ago indicate that there are only 2225 Negroes registered to vote as compared with 3500 whites. We feel that if we can get another 2000 we not only will have won a battle, but we will have the major portion of the War won, and will truly be on the road to taking our rightful place as first class citizens." (They are not really as warlike as they sound).

Rev. Moss and I expect to go to consult with the League and the Workcamp Committee May 21 if possible. Please send any suggestions, material and help that you can. Thank you for your interest in this problem.

Sincerely,

Virgie Hortenstine

Fords Participate In Fayette County Trip

by Russ Stetler

Fayette County has lost its place in the news. Some people remember that there has been trouble there. Sadly few recall the nature of the trouble and still fewer realize that tension and even violence remain in Tennessee.

During the semester break six Haverford students joined fourteen others from five other colleges in a work project designed to improve the lot of oppressed Americans in Fayette County and reveal the nature of the oppression. One local man called the revelation "eyesight information". It's this which the work campers are anxious to communicate.

The Haverfordians' interest in Fayette County may be traced to a visit from Virgie Hortenstine several weeks ago. Mrs. Hortenstine, a Quaker housewife from Cincinnati, spoke here to enlist students for the works camps, which she had organized almost single-handedly. She had found support from "Operation Freedom", The Baptist Ministers Conference of Cincinnati, and the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends. Haverford civil libertarians added their support as work camp volunteers. The six who traveled the eleven hundred miles to southwestern Tennessee were Stephen Bonime, Robert Eisenberg, David Elliott, David Flaccus, Bok Read, and Russell Stetler.

Outmoded Economics

In Fayette County the group found vestiges of outmoded economics and the lingering disease of political old age. They discovered a place where 7500 people are the majority who rule a county of 28,500. These same people own most of the land and monopolize the economic power. When men with darker skins and no landed fathers tried to register to vote in 1959, national attention focused on them. Federal power was necessary to enforce their right to register. Now no one will stop a qualified person from registering in Fayette County.

Perhaps this improvement explains the current lack of national attention. But few people register anyway. They fear the economic sanctions which have been applied to all who have already registered against the white man's will. (This mythical white man has a brain which is obsolete and an education which is a sophistication of ignorance. His whiteness is the badge of the local law. His Citizens' Council meets in his church and preaches to love thy neighbor—provided he lives in an all-white neighborhood.

Dark skinned potential voters lost their credit in local stores. (Certain more active ones can't even buy for cash.) Many were evicted from their homes, refused the chance to work at the land, quietly replaced by technological farming and weeds. Their educations, separate and less equal, afforded them little hope of surviving by new employment. Many still have no work. They cannot even find day labor. These people told of their plight with bitter eloquence.

Merchants Suffer

It would seem reasonable that to refuse credit to three-fourths of a county's population would severely hurt the merchant as well as the buyer. In fact, several merchants went out of business. The White Citizens' Council left them little choice. Any one white man who failed to appreciate the difference between white and non-white money faced boycott by the whites. One merchant lamented his position to the visiting work campers with complete despair.

Others told the work campers of their hopes to abolish discrimination by drastic change in the economic system. Co-op's and home industries form the vanguard in the advance to squnder economy.

Meanwhile the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, the outstanding organization which seeks at attaining equality for the deprived and oppressed peoples of the area, is trying to build a community center which will offer adult education and recreation facilities. It will also house a doctor's and dentist's office. (Now Negroes in Somerville must drive 40 miles to Memphis for such care.) The work campers hoped to work on the center itself, but found the weather prohibitive.

Instead they worked at renovating homes the League has found for evicted farmers. (They formerly lived in tents; the League has located old, deserted homes as better protections against the elements. And to raise money for building materials for the center, work campers chopped wood to be sold as firewood. Much money is needed. The story of the work campers culminate in their relating the great need for the community center and the funds to finance it. Address all inquiries to any one of them at Haverford College.

FAYETTE COUNTY WORK CAMP

Spring Vacation - March 25 to April 14,1963 (in periods up to 7 days)

Constructing the Community Center of the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, Somerville, Tennessee.....Also moving and rebuilding a cabin in Haywood County for an evicted sharecropper onto another farmer's land which he will be able to rent and farm.

Negroes in Fayette and Haywood Counties, Tennessee, are right now in what might be called the Second Crisis Stage of their struggle for first class citizenship. And this is the crisis that can be lost the most easily. And if it is lost, the Tent City effort, which now seems like a partial victory, will be lost also.

This winter between 200 and 300 Negro sharecropper families have been put off the land in Haywood County, according to Odell Sanders of the Haywood County Civic and Welfare League. In both Fayette and Haywood Counties, Negroes are afraid to report these evictions, although offers have been made to send affidavits of the facts to the Justice Department. Negroes are told they may continue to live in the shacks. Nothing is said about voter registration. The landlord simply says he is mechanizing his farm. The sharecropper is given free government surplus food, which quiets him for the moment; last year, however, thousands were taken off government surplus food by local white authorities when they chose to do so. This sharecropper may himself be sczrcely aware that he has been evicted; he may find occasional day labor; it may be some months before he actually has to leave the county which has been his home and the farm work for which he is trained, to go to add to the unemployment problems of unskilled laborers in one of the large cities.

At the time of the first crisis two years ago, after long years when race relations had been"peaceful"because the Negro accepted his subservience, 700 Negro families in the two counties were openly given eviction notices because they registered to vote. Evictees moved into tents, Fayette and Haywood Counties were in the news; and organizations and individuals came to their aid. People helped as they felt they could, then looked forward to the establishment of justice by the U.S. District Court, which had placed some 160 white citizens under injunction. But these cases were settled out of court last summer, with little publicity and with no one found guilty of anything. Now,at the time of the second crisis, brought on by a White Citizens Council that has learned how to avoid publicity and thus be more effective, these organizations are putting all or most of their emphasis on helping other areas in the south which are in the news and which, currently, the public feels moved to support. Now, at the time of the second crisis, Negroes whose tremendous courage and spirit and vision continued to increase during these two years because of their belief that God, the nation and the world were with them even if their white neighbors were not, these Negroes now look around and find themselves essentially alone. They are poorly educated; they are poor; when they take risks in order to gain progress that risk may be the food for their own children. But they still have spirit; they still believe that, as their Vice President, Rev. June Dawdy, said, "The Lord is bread in a starving land." If we let them lose their struggle now, it will not be only they who lose. It will be others elsewhere, now receiving public aid, who will later be given the same quiet, effective evictions because they dared to register to vote.

It was to bring our moral support to these almost forgotten people that our Fayette County Work Camps Project was begun, guided by the thinking of Quakers who believe that it is only through the cherishing of "that of God" in each individual that great social problems can be solved in a way that will actually be a solution. We may never see that solution. But if we follow this principle, what we do will not have to be undone. Thus our immediate purposes are:

1. To work with local people in a project of their choosing for the betterment of their community.

2. To raise money for materials for construction.

3. To publicize the facts of the situation from firsthand experience (In an area where "justice" as we interpret it, does not exist, responsible citizens can help by exposing these conditions. The local people who are responsible sometimes "wake up" when they see themselves as others see them).

THE PROJECT IN FAYETTE COUNTY:

In Fayette County we are helping the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League to build one wing of a Community Center which will provide a place for the League to meet and offices for a doctor and a dentist for citizens who are boycotted from medical services. When completed it will provide space for adult education, recreation, and a kindergarten.

At the Thanksgiving work camp we helped pour the footing and lay the foundation of one concrete block wall for the community center. At the January work camp weather did not permit construction on the center; so workcampers renovated a 150-year-old deserted house into which an evicted minister had been forced to move; they also chopped firewood to be sold for the building fund.

FINANCIAL REPORT:

The effort to raise funds for building materials and work camp expenses brought in $917.20 between November 1 and January 25. $400.00 was given to the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League toward the building fund. $115.64 was spent for other expenditures of the work camps: postage, phone calls, travel. Thus the balance January 25 was $401.56 (A few contributions and expenditures which came after January 25 have not yet been included in these figures).

The work with which unskilled workcampers can help is (1)hauling sand to put down before the concrete floor is poured and (2) putting on the roof. Before we can put on the roof we will need an estimated $2280.50 for building materials alone, plus the cost for the labor of a skilled worker and his helper. Estimates for needed materials are:

Windows	$267.00
Doors	208.00
"I" Beams	300.00
Lumber	710.00
Felt	60.00
Roofing	128.00
Pitch	60.00
Angle Irons	260.00
Nails (various)	87.50
Concrete Blocks	200.00
	4 2280.50

THE PROJECT IN HAYWOOD COUNTY:

There will be a week-long trial work camp in Haywood County April 8-14. Until now Haywood County has not accepted a work camp. The Haywood County Civic and Welfare League has not during the past year moved forward with progressive ideas in a way comparable with the Original League in Fayette County. One Negro who understands the movement in the south said that when Negroes who are trying to better their situation do not get enough help from the outsidethey will lapse back into their old way of living rather than take the reprisals day after day alone. It is hoped that this will not happen in Haywood County although there is much indication that it is happening. While Fayette County registered around 4000 Negroes, slightly over the number of registered whites, Haywood registered only around 2000. Haywood County has had police brutality through the years, including the lynching of a Negro leader of a small voter registration movement in 1940, false arrests, a court where a Negro cannot hope to get a fair trial. Yet there are districts within the county which are moving forward. It is in one of these districts that the local people plan to work with workcampers to move the house of an evicted sharecropper and rebuild it on a five to ten acre piece of land which the farmer will rent and farm with newer methods. Discontinuing the old idea that the cotton acreage was the only important part of the land, which necessitated a large acreage, some farmers are getting contracts for raising vegetables and forming a producers' cooperative under the leadership of Art Emery, an Iowa Quaker who has gone tothis area with his family to live, to devote himself to just such problems.

RESULTS, TO DATE:

At least nine sizeable professionally-written articles have been published by the group of ten November and twenty January workcampers, exposing the situation they found.

One of the results impossible to measure has been the fellowship with the local people. In November we lived in Tent City along with the evicted Negro sharecroppers and they shared with us the best they had from their store of government surplus food. In January we lived in homes of local Negroes and experienced an unusually warm relationship as we slept in their houses and ate at their table. Although these people have no opportunity to entertain white visitors at other times, there was no indication to us that anyone felt any racial differences.

Worship together has been part of each work camp. Workcampers attended the local Negro churches and silent meditation periods were held in homes or in the back of John McFerren's store, attended about equally by workcampers and local people. The last meditation included Unitarians, Quakers, Jews and a Buddhist plus local Baptists and Methodists. These have served to deepen relationships.

One workcamper, David Brown, a teacher from Doylestown, Pa., has already given up his teaching position and has gone back to Somerville to live. He has begun adult education classes for Negroes there. Two other workcampers have volunteered to teach summer classes.

Workcampers have come from several colleges: University of Illinois, University of Southern Illinois, Western College, Ohio, Oberlin College, Ohio, Haverford College, Pa., Swarthmore College, Pa., and Sarah Laurence College, N.Y.

HOW YOU CAN HELP:

Funds for building materials are needed, for the Community Center, possibly for materials for Haywood County, for some work camp expenses. Food can be collected by a college or church group and sent along with workcampers to help provide the workcampers and the local people. Many local hostesses are in the predicament of Mrs. Puckett, who said, "I would love to have them in my home, but I haven't anything to put on the table. When we were getting Government surplus food I had rice and cornmeal, but we've been cut off from that."

DETAILS:

Travel expenses are to be shared among those travelling in a car; it is hoped that all workcampers will be able to arrange themselves in carloads. If you cannot, let us know.

Cost while in Tennessee is $10.50 for any 7-day period. Cost of meals enroute will be part of travel expenses.

Students Find Sharecroppers Still Being Evicted In Tenn.

CINCINNATI — Twenty work campers, mostly college students, have just returned from a between semesters work project to aid distressed Negroes in Fayette County, Tennessee, where they found the eviction of sharecroppers in this and neighboring Haywood County continuing at almost the same rate as two years ago, when 700 families were suddenly given eviction notices when they registered to vote. There is one marked difference: this is a quiet kind of eviction and is not making the news, as the evicted sharecroppers made news when they moved into tents two years ago.

No one is asking anyone to move out of his house; no one is starving. Landlords have told tenants they may continue to live in the shacks where they have lived for years as workers. There will simply be no land for them to farm.

The unemployed people are immediately given free government surplus food. They are quiet, and all is quiet. Between 200 and 300 Negro families have thus been cut off from their employment in Haywood County alone, the student workcampers learned from officials of the Haywood County Civic and Welfare League.

Odell Sanders, officer of that league, told work campers that there is 30% unemployment among Negroes there. No landlord speaks to his tenant about registering to vote; he simply tells him he is mechanizing his farm.

No one reminds the Negroes on surplus food that the local white officials cut off thousands from their surplus food rations last year when they choose to do so.

--::--

The twenty work campers are students of Haverford College, Pa., Saartmore College, Pa., Sarah Lawrence College, N.Y., Oberlin College, Ohio, Western College, Ohio, and the University of Illinois. They drove to Somerville, Tennessee in six carloads, some as far as 1100 miles, to help construct a community center which the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League is trying to erect in order to have a place for adult education, a kindergarten, a doctor's and a dentist's office for Negroes who are boycotted from medical services.

Their project is known as the Fayette County Work Camps Projects and was coordinated by Virgie Hortenstine, Cincinnati Quaker housewife. It is sponsored by the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Cincinnati, the Cincinnati Chapter of Operation Freedom, the Race Relations Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends (Quakers), and International Voluntary Services.

Part of the project is the raising of funds for building materials for the community center.

Since cold and icy weather prohibited construction, work campers busied themselves instead on the renovation of a 150-year-old deserted house into which an evicted minister, Rev. June Dowdy, had been forced to move when he became vice president of the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, the organization which promotes Negro voter registration.

The students also worked with local citizens to cut firewood to be sold to raise money for the building of the center. In their spare time they interviewed local citizens, including two white citizens who refused to boycott Negroes who registered and who themselves were forced out of business as a result.

They witnessed the tragic visit of a Negro sharecropper who came to the League to report that he had not only been evicted; his entire cotton crop had been taken by the landlord, leaving him not a penny, although the landlord had not furnished him the customary monthly payments for food during the spring and summer, which arrangement gave him the right to a larger share than usual.

In his hand he had an official-looking paper which League members recognized as concocted by the White Citizens Council to appear to verify the landlord's action. They saw such incidents, despite the recent Federal Court Case (settled out of court they year.)

One of the work campers was so struck by the courage of the Fayette County Negroes' attempt to improve their community even in the face of such opposition that he drove home to Pennsylvania, only to turn around and drive back two days later. He is David Brown, white, a 24-year-old Quaker, a teacher from Doylestown, Pa., who has resigned his teaching position. He is now taking up residence in Somerville, where he will devote himself, full time to work for human rights and brotherhood in Fayette County.

540½ North Farish Street
Jackson, Mississippi

Dear Miss Liddell:

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 12 to which there is attached a budget for a three-month project for the Hinds County Voter Registration and Education Council which will be directed by Dean Charles Jones.

The Voter Education Project has made grants to CORE, NAACP, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, a portion of which is to be used for work in the Jackson, Mississippi, area. Where two or more agencies are working in the same area, as is the case in Jackson, we have requested the agencies to coordinate their registration efforts as much as possible and have even suggested that they get together and plan a joint budget for local operations. Jackson is the only area where we currently have as many as three major organizations working at the same time.

Although your letter makes no mention of any request or need for financial assistance from the Voter Education Project, we think we should tell you that VEP would not contribute any additional funds to your local efforts except through the participating agencies. I note that Mr. Roy Wilkins has written us advising that Reverend Charles Jones is in charge of the NAACP efforts in Jackson, but there is no reason why he could not also serve as Coordinator of the Hinds County Voter Registration and Education Council.

Please be assured of our continuing interest in the registration and education efforts of your community and state.

Very truly yours,

Room 300, 123 West Main Street
Durham, North Carolina

Dear Mrs. Bradley:

We have given careful consideration to your inquiry of August 30 pertaining to the publication of a Handbook on State Government. We have concluded that this particular handbook is not sufficiently related to voter registration or voter education to justify a grant from our project in the amount of approximately $5000.

The Voter Education Project would be pleased to consider an application for a grant from the North Carolina League of Women Voters if you can submit something to us that deals more specifically with voter registration or education. You stated that you have in mind putting out a brochure of voter information and that this would be given away wherever possible. This sounds like something which we could very easily support. For your information, we could also support expenses which might be incurred in helping to stimulate people to register and vote.

Please feel free to communicate with us about helping you to plan a proposal to be submitted to our project and you may call us collect should you desire.

Very truly yours,

FROM: W. A. Branton

I would appreciate it if each of you would examine the attached correspondence of the League of Women Voters of North Carolina and give me your opinions regarding a possible grant for the publication of a handbook on state government.

I would like very much to see VEP make a grant to a LWV but I would much prefer that the grant be in the area of actual voter registration.

What do you think?

Wally:
I would keep at it chance. However:
1- I have no recommendation regarding amount of money assistance, or whether it would be popular or a reasonable
2- I would be glad to be given to number of copies we have or may have every VEP project we have in in North Carolina
3- I would not commit an until we they definitely asked. I don't like the last paragraph of the letter, if at implies the possibility that the Board might turn down an appl. of help from us.

Memo from JACK MINNIS

September 6, 1963

Wiley:

I am aware in a general way of our desire to secure the participation of LWV in VEP. I'M not sure I understand why we want this, but I understand that we do. If this desire is to be overriding then I suppose the actual content of the booklet is a secondary consideration. If this be the case, then I'd agree with Les in the points he makes.

However, if we are going to be concerned primarily with the content of the work--and with its utility to our projects--then I have some serious reservations about our being associated with the booklet, for the following reasons:

1) It appears to based solely upon research into the constitution and laws of North Carolina. It assumes that the prescriptions of law are a description of political and governmental reality. In my view this assumption is wholly untenable and insupportable. I suggest you examine the treatment of juries on pp. 55-56 for an example of the pitfalls of this approach to instruction in public affairs.

2) The treatment of voting, pp. 7-9, suffers, I think, from some serious deficiencies: a) it specifies the 15th and 19th amendments as restrictions on state regulation of voting, but fails to mention Sec. 4, Art. 1. This, however intended, plays into the hands of the Ervins and the Eastlands and the Thurmonds; b) the section on registration makes no mention of the extremely restricted registration times in all but eight or ten counties--these restrictions are certainly material to any consideration of N.C. registration; c) there is no more potent control of the voters over government than bond elections, yet the pamphlet all but dismisses them as unimportant.

In summary, then, if our primary consideration is to be the utility of the book for the projects we support, I think we should decline support. I should not like to be faced with the necessity of defending such a pub-

Dear Mr. Branton:

I have been working on a handbook of state government, about which there has been an exchange of letters between myself and Mr. Anthony. He informed me that you are in charge of the Voter Education Project and that the correspondence was being turned over to you. For this reason I am writing to enlarge on the information I gave in my first exploratory letter.

The original edition of our Handbook on State Government included about 4,000 copies. It was distributed through the local Leagues, to public schools and libraries, and a few to governmental bodies and individuals. During the past year the Institute of Government at the University of North Carolina indicated that they would like to be able to recommend it across the state. We have been unable to fill any orders for more than a year, although the Institute, several school systems, and individuals have sent in orders. It is extremely outdated.

We have been working this summer, in a preliminary way, on content and format. We want to limit it strictly to information on state government, cutting out extraneous information. We also want to eliminate as much current information which might be outdated. We also plan to improve the cover and format. We are also sending it to several persons in the field of education for their review and suggestions.

You can see that the number and the cost will depend on these changes, and on whether we give it away or sell it at cost. In January the state Board set up a goal of 25,000 copies. The estimated cost at that time was $5000, based on a tentative estimate of a printer in Charlotte. The estimate was on the basis of the old handbook. This goal would be unrealistic if we sell it at cost. On the other hand if we give it away there will be no possibility of setting up a revolving fund for future editions, and we would have to go through the whole thing periodically.

We also have in mind for the future a companion piece which would be a brief brochure of voter information, to be given away wherever possible. This would have to be set up as a separate project.

I would like to know a bit more about the possibility of help from the Southern Regional Council, and about the necessary process of application. I will be present the entire project to the board again in late September, and this possibility would be included along with alternative plans.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

Dear Mrs. Bradley:

Through the Voter Education Project, the Southern Regional Council does make modest grants in the field of voter education. Tax exemption is not a prerequisite, so long as the expenditure of the funds meet the requirements of exemption, as publication of the handbook would do. Therefore a grant, if made, could be given directly to the League in North Carolina with the state board having complete freedom in determining how the publication would be distributed.

Decisions on requests are made by Mr. Wiley Branton, director of the Voter Education Project, and his staff. Would you please write him, at this address, indicating the amount of money needed.

Your letter of the 30th and the handbook are being turned over to Mr. Branton. We have considerable admiration for the work of the League and I am certain your request will receive serious consideration.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Anthony:

A field worker for the American Friends Service Committee recently mentioned to me that the Southern Regional Council is concentrating on voter education in North and South Carolina. He suggested that I might contact you with regard to a handbook on state government which the North Carolina League is currently undertaking to revise. The original publication (1954) had a wide circulation, and we are anxious to bring it up to date. We continually receive orders which we cannot fill.

As is usually the case with such efforts, our problem is finding funds for the printing. You may know that contributions to the League are not deductible. The state Board is trying to decide between the alternatives of giving it away or setting up a revolving fund from sales at cost, which would ensure future revisions. We could seek foundation funds, which would go to the League of Women Voters Education Fund, which is deductible. They in turn would commission us to do the publication. In this case we would have to give it away. If we could find funds which did not require deductibility, we could set up the revolving fund.

Is there any possibility that the Council could, and would, support our project? I am sending a copy of the original handbook, under separate cover, and will be glad to answer any questions. We are just now setting up committees to consider format, contents, probable distribution, etc., and to do the research and editing.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Dear Mr. Stoerker:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 4, in which you state that the Commission on Ecumenical Voluntary Service Projects is interested in developing a summer project in 1964 in Nashville, Tennessee, even though the YWCA does not desire to co-sponsor such a grpgram as it did last year.

The Voter Education Project has limited funds, and we try to give some geographic consideration to the distribution of such funds. Prior to the grant which we made for your summer project last summer, we had made a sizable grant for voter registration work in Nashville. We now have under consideration a request for another grant to a local group for voter registration work in Nashville, and it appears probable that we will make a grant for an early spring registration program in that city.

Under the circumstances, I think it hardly likely that we would agree to make any future grants for registration work in Nashville, Tennessee, during 1964.

Gentlemen:

The Commission on Ecumenical Voluntary Service Projects was involved in Nashville, Tennessee in the summer of 1963 in a Voter Education and Registration project, co-sponsored by this office and the YWCA. While joint sponsorship in a second such project in Nashville has not seemed to be desirable for the summer of 1964, the Commission on Ecumenical Voluntary Service Projects is very much interested in developing such a project. It would be particularly grateful for your suggestions, and would also hope very much that financial assistance might again be a possibility for the summer of 1964.

I would hope that your affirmative response might lead to further correspondence and that I might be able to speak with you through a conference sometime early in 1964.

With great appreciation for the work which you are doing, I am

Dear Mr. Branton:

Your memorandum on Voter Regiatration dated January 14, was received and read with much interest and concern. I have long been interested in voter registration here in Polk County in general, and at the present time we are conducting a local registration drive here in Lake Wales where I live.
I am a Building Contractor who works out of Winter Haven, But lives here in Lake Wales and have been for the past 38 years. I am also the local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, (NAACP).
The larger towns in this county are: Lakeland, Winter Haven, Lake Wales, Haines City and Bartow. Each of these cities have on at present a local registration drive in their own towns. In order to do a good job of voter registration in the above mentioned towns we need some help to get more workers interested in doing a real good job.

But the above mentioned cities are not our real problems. Our real problems exit in the smaller towns and outlying areas where there are between twenty (20,000) and 25,000 thousand more negroes who realy need to be reached. If some one could come in here and help us or send some kind of financial help I am certain that we could get most of those people registered. Transportation is our most pressing problem. Foor we must transport registrants 15, 20, 30, and 35 miles in order to register them for the County , State and National elections.

Whatever you can do to help us in this situation please let me know at once. I am willing to serve in any capacity that I can.

Dear Mr. Long:

Both Doug Harris (who accompanied us on January 31 to the office of the chairman of the Halifax County board of elections and who got a good look at the miserable nature of the entire area) and Reggie Robinson have indicated that they have talked with you regarding the situation in the northeastern "black belt" counties of North Carolina and, in particular, Halifax County. A few developments have occurred there since I wrote Jim Forman on January 29 -- namly, they are centered around the community of Enfield which is the basic focal point of civil rights activity for that whole section of the state:

On February 3, I went with the leaders of the Enfield movement to a city council meeting where the demands of the Negro community -- originally presented to the mayor and city council on June 5, 1963 -- were to be formally answered by the political power structure. (Since June 5, there has been much direct action in the community and although, last fall, an insipid bi-racial committee was set up, it has not yet done anything -- or even pretended to do anything.)

The demands presented by the Enfield movement and discussed again at this meeting of February 3 were basically these: (1) the hiring of Negro police who can arrest white people; (2) civic improvements for the Negro neighborhoods -- improvements in lighting, sewage disposal, and garbage collections; (3) the improvement of civic recreational facilities and the opening up of such to all citizens; (4) the construction of a swimming pool which will be open to all citizens; (5) a town ordinance prohibiting segregation

The mayor and the councilmen indicated that they felt that they had made a few improvements in sewage disposal and garbage collection -- and refused to even consider the other demands. They were particularly adamant in their refusal to hire even one Negro policeman and they laughed at the idea of an anti-segregation ordinance. Their attitude was one of total recalcitrance. Police and associated elements were much in evidence in and around the meeting and the feeling in the air was quite akin indeed to, say, a rural community in the Deep South to which the freedom movement is coming.

The Negro community in Enfield is much angered, of course, by the refusal of the power structure to meet the demands. Aggravating the feelings of the people is the fact that various economic pressures of a reprisal nature -- present since the mass demonstrations of last summer and fall -- are now being stepped up, against the leaders of the movement, by the political and economic power structures. There is anger, too, at the Federal government: late last summer, following just one direct action demonstration of many, seventy-odd affidavits attesting to extreme police and vigilante brutality were filed with the Justice Department and, so far, no visible action has been taken. (In Enfield yesterday - February 11 - I talked with a leader of the movement, Mrs. Lillian Cousins Smith, who tells me that - a few hours earlier - she had talked with an FBI man and had asked him what had happened to their affidavits; she received the usual unsatisfactory answers.)

The feeling of general discontent -- stemming from poverty and repression -- is much in evidence all through Halifax County and in the other counties involved in this black-belt section: Bertie, Edgecombe, Northampton, and Warren. Most importantly, the people are ready and willing to go.

Plans are developing well with respect to the organization of Halifax County for concerted and intensive voter registration activity. We have set up a meeting in Enfield for the evening of February 21. Between fifty and one hundred key local leaders and potential leaders, from every section of the county and from every social class bracket, will be present. Moses A. Riddick, Jr., the director of the Nansemond Co., Va. Independent Voters League (a man who himself, as you probably know, has just won a post as county commissioner) has agreed to lead this meeting -- and the emphasis will be on systematic grassroots political organization.

Note! ( )

Also, considerable direct action will be developing in the county within the next few weeks. Aggressive litigation -- such as suits aimed at the rigidly segregated school systems -- will, hopefully, be instituted before too long.

Halifax County is the key to the black-belt counties of North Carolina. Once matters are really moving in Halifax, the movement will spring forth in the other counties of the section.

The people are really ready. They need -- and would appreciate mightily -- all the help that they can get.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

John R. Salter, Jr.

Dear Sir:

I should at this time like to repeat a request forwarded to you on February 26, 1964, concerning voter registration projects during the summer of 1964. In that request I outlined information which we felt would be necessary to enlist students from the University of Hawaii for the projects and asked for details concerning:

1. Dates, locations and costs
2. Qualifications of and costs to individual applicants
3. Training of chosen applicants
4. Selection criteria

We presently have sixteen (16) students who are interested in participating in the projects and are certain of more applicants once the necessary information is disseminated. We feel that it will be necessary to begin our program in Hawaii immediately if proper training for the applicants is to be effected.

I should therefore like to request that you forward definite information to me within the next week. This is absolutely necessary if we are to attempt to conduct the program. If it is impossible to forward the information within this time please inform us immediately also. If we are unable to begin the program within the next week we will find it necessary to abandon it.

Respectfully yours,

Dear Sir:

The Project Awareness committee is now conducting a recruiting campaign for voter registration projects to be held during the summer of 1964.

We understand the Southern Regional Council sponsers such projects and so would like to request any information you may have, including:

3. training and preparation of participants,
4. selection criteria for participants,
5. duration and location of specific projects.

In addition to criteria established by the Southern Regional Council, all Hawaii applicants will be subject to criteria as established by our student government of the University of Hawaii.

Project Awareness will assume the responsibility of conducting primary screening, selecting, and training of all Hawaii delegates and will submit the names and qualifications of selected applicants to the Southern Regional Council for approval.

As we are presently receiving many requests for specific information, we would greatly appreciate an immediate reply.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 5, which was addressed to the Southern Regional Council. In this letter you seek information regarding the establishment of a voter registration program in Cumberland County, New Jersey.

The Voter Education Project restricts its activities to eleven southern states and, therefore, could not consider support of a program anywhere in the state of New Jersey.

I note that you express some interest in the Democratic party and I am, therefore, sending a copy of your letter to Dr. Tinsley Spraggins of the Democratic National Committee with the suggestion that he get in touch with you regarding a voter registration program in your county. I am also sending a copy to Mr. Phil Weightman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. I feel reasonably certain that either of these gentlemen will be able to offer some assistance in advising you on how to get a registration program going in your county.

Gentlemen:

We, the undersigned, are very much interested in the registration program for our people as outlined by your conference.

We are concerned about the approaching presidential election, primarily expressing interest in the successful accomplishments of the Democratic Party.

We therefore have completed a survey of Cumberland County, in the state of New Jersey. We discovered there is not one clinic established anywhere to instruct people on voter registration, neither is there any oustanding Negro leadership to harness the Negro vote in this area.

When a Negro candidate is presented by one party, the opposing party enters an opponent of color to split the strength of the first candidate thus barring the possible entrance of a Negro into political positions.

We were advised to contact your office to determine through your guidance how to establish a voter registration program in Cumberland County.

Hoping for an early reply from your office, we beg to remain,

Yours truly,

Dear Mr. Doyle:

I regret to inform you that the Voter Education Project cannot, at this time, make any grant to the Dallas County Voters Leage, as we do not see any reasonable expectation of substantial Negro registration in Dallas County until the Justice Department is able to win a court decree against your Board of Registrars and it appears that Judge Thomas has recently denied the government's application for an injunction.

As you probably know, we have been giving some help to voter registration work in Dallas County through the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and it is my understanding that they are still working to some extent in Selma.

We try to take a realistic approach to voter registration in every community where we are involved and I cannot helpt but note that your statement that "we can accomplish 10,000 in this drive" sounds very farfetched to me where you have only 450 registered Negro voters and your organization has been in operation for 20 years or more. I would be very much interesting in knowing what it is that $210 per month for the next eight months will enable you to do in Dallas County that has not been possible in the past. Perhaps we are wrong in our decision and we are always willing to reconsider our action but we must have meaningful facts and proposals to work with.

This will acknowledge the receipt of your letter regarding a request for information of qualification for work going on here in Selma, Alabama.

The Dallas County Voter League has been in operation here for about twenty years or more, it's action is to improve Negroes for Registration, also the Dallas County Voter League has promote a containation of mass meeting for the last several month.

Officers:

Mr. Ulysses Blackmon-- Secretary--1803 Sylvan Street, Selma, Ala.
Mr. John H. Bunkley--- Treasure--- 172[illegible] Green Street, Selma, Ala.

There are 450 Registered Negroes Voters in Dallas County according to the record published by the Selma Times Journal.

The method I had plan to use was to set up Citizenship School, block system and clinic, I think this will be more effective because of the personal contact with the people, on a fellow through system.

I plan to run this program for eight month, my budget is ~~$310.00~~ $210.00 a month.

I think we can accomplish 10,000 in this drive, I can not give criticism about other Organization conducting program but I can get around it, I hope to hear from you soon.

Dear Mr. Wrighten:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 10 in which you express interest in our Voter Education Project on behalf of the Citizens Committee of Charleston County.

We will be working primarily with five major agencies, but we are reserving some funds for use with local organizations where special circumstances require that we take such action. In South Carolina we know that several organizations plan extensive registration campaigns in many parts of the state, and we have already seen the plans of NAACP, CORE, SCLC, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

In view of the fact that we will have limited funds with which to work and the fact that the other organizations appear to plan a concerted campaign in South Carolina, we probably would not be able to make a separate grant to the Citizens Committee of Charleston County at this time. We hope that your organization can coordinate its efforts with the other agencies which will be working in your area.

PROSPECTUS FOR FLORIDA: SUMMER, 1964

Outlined herein is a tentative summer program for Florida. It includes several types of activities in which we feel CORE could engage most efficiently and most profitably. Ingeneral these activities can be divided into three catagories: (1) a combination of voter education and direct action in certain specific counties discussed in detail below; (2) a program for involving college and university students in CORE activities plus a more extensive servicing of existing chapters in the state; (3) a full time fund raising program for Florida.

In the first section then, a statistical profile of 16 North Florida Counties will be presented with recommendations for program in those counties. In section two we will discuss the extent of the need for a college program and recommend the necessary staff and materials for such a program. Finally, we want to show the existing untapped resources which CORE can utilize in the way of financial support in Florida and suggest a suitable program for obtaining these funds.

FLORIDA: County areas indicated

(1) Voter Education Project and Direct Action Project For 16 North Florida Counties.

The map preceeding indicates the state of Florida with the 16 counties in question outlined in red. These counties fall into two geographic areas, separated by Leon County. All things considered, we are of the opinion that these 16 counties are most appropriate forr a combination voter education--direct action program in North Florida.

There are a number of reasons for the particular choices indicated herein. First, North Florida constitutes the "Porkchop" area of Florida. Due to the third worst apportionment system in the country, Florida contains some fantastic malapportionment situat ions. For example, Jefferson County, which is one of the sixteen under consideration, with a population of 9,543 has the same state senatorial representation as Dade County, with a population of 935,047. Thus the state senate election finds a Jefferson County voter with 100 times the power of the Dade Countian. Despite consistent efforts by many groups in Florida, this poor apportionment system seems doomed to long-life. Thus the registered Negro in North Florida is relatively quite important for some time. A second reason for choosing these counties is that they are felt to be among the most backward and most oppressive racially in the state. As we will show later, six of the sixteen counties are among the 11 worst in the state with regard to per capita income. Further, a large potential of unregistered Negroes exists in this area. Although the percentage of Negro voters seems high, a recent FSU study indicates that these percentages are probably more easily correlated to lack of purging than actual registratation. Finally, most of these counties are 100% segregated.

REGISTRATION

The number of Negro registrants in Florida increased in the period from 1946 to 1960 from 48, 157 to 163, 128. The percentage of Negroes registered (as a percentage of potential Negro registrants) rose from 14.1% in 1946 to 34.7% in 1960. In 1960 non-whites of voting age constituted 15.2% of the state's voting age population.

The numbrr of Florida counties with over one-fifth of the non-white population of voting age registered rose to 58 in 1960. In 27 of these counties over 50% of the eligible Negro population has registered.

As of 1960, the average percentage registration among whites was 60.5 for all Florida Counties.

It should also be noted that two of the above counties have obvious excess registration as of 1960 figures. Thus Calhoun had a total of 4,680 registered voters and a voting age population of 4,016. Washington County was similarly over-registered. This is due to a failure to purge the books.

INCOME

The per capita income of Florida's counties in 1960 varied from $3,136 (in Hendry County) to $783 (in Calhoun County). Most of the 15 counties listed below are poor counties. Six of the below listed counties are among Florida's 11 poorest counties. Every county is below the state average.

EDUCATION

With the exceptions of Bay and Escambia Counties where very insignificant and token school integration has occured, schools in the other 14 counties remain totally segregated. The Biennial Report of the State Department of Education stopped reporting certain important statistics by race after 1956. Thus it is impossible here to offer a meaninful comparative study of education with regard to these sixteen counties as compared with the rest of the state.

The only hint as to the situation lies in a 1957-58 record of percent of students failing to be promoted to the next grade by race. In general, these counties showed twice as many non-white children failing to be promoted as white children. The average for the state is slightly less that 2/1.

PROGRAM

For these sixteen counties we would like to propose a combaination voter education and direct action project. By combination, the following is meant. A direct action program would in some way affect every county, that is, there would be a direct action project either in a county or in a county near enough to affect the attitudes of those nearby. In counties with large registration potentials, concentrated drives would be established to carry through to the October 3 closing of the books.

The two areas, as indicated on the map of Florida, are separated by Leon County. We would suggest that at least five persons work in the Eastern county complex--some in direct action programs and some in voter registration, and at least 7 in the Western area. Where feasible, community offices could be set up. Persons assigned to areas would, of course, live in central points in their areas.

For these areas a number of cars would probably be necessary--this number depending on the people actually available for the project and the areas assigned to them.

Among the goals of this 16 county drive would be increased registration, the setting up of self-sufficient community registration and action units, the opening of registration offices all-day five days a week and one night or Saturday, the purging of books where necessary, and an understanding of non-violent direct action philosophy.

OTHER NEEDED PROGRAMS

COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITY WORK: Florida has a number of colleges and universities which are, for the most part, untapped resources for CORE projects. We feel that at least two persons, either an interracial team or one white and one Negro should devote full time this summer to developing CORE groups on or off campus' in the state. There are a number of groups for civil rights in existence at some schools--for example, the Student Group for Equal Rights at the University of Florida, almost all-white, is a recognized campus group. For a time it functioned quite effectively. At Florida A. & M. University, the NAACP College chapter is a recognized group, although the off-campus CORE group has been the active group representing the school. We feel that every college, junior college and university has a great potential, and we feel this potenial should be utilized.

FUND RAISING: A full time CORE fund raiser should be assigned to the state of Florida. We feel that untapped resources more than justify this assignment, and that such a program would more than justify one person working in this area. As the number of CORE chapters grows this summer, counsel will be needed in fund raising. Areas such as Miami will provide unlimited funds for national CORE, for example.

Dear Vernon:

Mr. Branton asked that I let you know that we cannot provide assistance to your registration program at this time. He indicated that possibly consideration for a campaign, prior to the September 15 deadline, could be given if a satisfactory program can be developed.

Best wishes for success in your current activity.

Very truly yours,

Vernon Mitchell called — about 50 teen-agers working — Registered over 100 today. Biggest problem is providing transportation. Requests decision on proposal. He indicated that he had difficulty getting reimbursed from SCLC before when campaign was conducted through that agency.

Andy Young also called — from St. Augustine. Is returning tonight. Will call you tomorrow.

Please write Vernon Mitchell & tell him that we can not consider his program at this time. We may be able to do something before the Sept 15 deadline IF we can develop a satisfactory program.

Wiley,

Vernon Mitchell called on Monday about VEP support for a crash registration programme for Muscogee County and an adjoining county, Talbot. I encouraged him to submit a budget to you, which is attached. He indicates that he has had extensive contact with someone, who name I don't recall, in Talbot County. Upon consultation with this person, he will submit a proposal for Talbot County.

Dear Mrs. Whittaker:

I didn't think I would be involved in another Voter Registration Campagin this year, but as it stands, I have no choice.

Under the new Georgia Code, the books will be opened again until July, 21: We are going to try and take advantage of it. Our goal is set for three thousand additional voters to boast our total to 12,000.

We are appealing to your organization for financial aid in our campaign.

You will receive a copy of the Talbot County budget in the very near future.

We shall sincerely appreciate your kindness.

Dear Mr. Thureson:

In reply to your letter of July 28, 1964, I regret to inform you that we would have no interest in supporting a photographic documentation of the social problems of the South as we are not set up to publish or distribute pictures. The Voter Education Project is in the final phase of its activity, and it is much too late for us to consider photographic documentation.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Branton:

According to Bernard LaFayette of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, the Southern Regional Council is engaged (at least in part) in documenting and researching the social problems of the South. I have the impression that you rely on the written word in this work. Would you be interested in photographic documentation of these problems and (where applicable) the remedies in progress?

My wife and I (with our new baby) have been invited to participate in the "totebag project" in Brownsville, Tennessee this fall. I am interested in doing a photographic study of that area. However, the subsistence level salaries we will receive from the project will not permit the purchase of photographic supplies. I am therefore seeking cost-basis financial assistance from the Southern Regional Council in the belief that this would be a mutually rewarding arrangement.

I intend to visit briefly in Atlanta sometime between August 10 and 21 to speak with people at Mennonite House and at the Southern Christian Leadership Conference office. If you would be willing to discuss this matter further, I would appreciate your notifying me of the most convenient date. I will have a portfolio of my work with me.

Very sincerely,

Before we could take action on your proposal of July 27 for a grant to support your program in the Eighth Congressional District of Virginia, we learned that you had abandoned your proposed program, and had returned some of the money which you had previously received.

We now understand that most of your co-workers will be working in the Third Congressional District, and we are about to make a grant to the Crusade for Voters to support their program in the Third District, which proposes to use the services of most of your co-workers.

Mr. Wiley Branton
Director, Voter Education Project
5 Forsythe Street

Dear Mr. Branton:

This letter and the enclosed prospectuses are the formal presentation that you asked me to make to the Voter Education Project pursuant to our conversation during the NAACP Convention recently. The campaign prospectus is enclosed for background information. I am sorry that the prospectuses have not reached you sooner but we have been busy setting up our field operations.

The project has meshed very well with Virginia NAACP. Wesley Burroughs, our project director, has developed a good working relationship with Lester Banks and the project has Mr. Bank's support and the support of S. W. Tucker. Last Saturday a meeting was arranged for our project staff to get acquainted with the local chapter presidents of the NAACP in the Eighth Congressional District. The registration drive started in Fredericksburg last Friday and we are expecting to help register most of the Negroes in that city.

The Northern Virginia Voter Education Project has a minimum goal of 10,000 voters. The Project hopes to register 15,000. The only problem we can see at this time is that in some localities the registrars will be unwilling to abide by the new registration requirements. When we find recalcitrant registrars we will have the assistance of NAACP lawyers in obtaining writs of mandamus to force these registrars into accepting any properly qualified citizen. The project is being informally advised by Earl W. Davis, a field director for COPE and we have received encouragement from Dr. Tinsley L. Spraggins, now with the Democratic National Committee and Phillip Weightman, Acting Director for Minorities of National COPE.

The Northern Virginia Voter Education Project is not being publicized and is going about its task quietly. The Project will have no connection with partisan politics and the project's staff will engage solely in voter registration activities.

It is the hope of the Northern Virginia Voter Education Project that the Voter Education Project will see its way clear to contribute $5,000 to our fund drive. We hope you share our view that the success of the project and electorial campaign to replace Judge Smith with a moderate liberal will have far-reaching effects on the South and the Nation.

PROSPECTUS OF THE NORTHERN VIRGINIA VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

N.V.V.E.P.

Washington, D.C. 20036

THE CIVIL RIGHTS PROBLEM

While each passing year has seen the civil rights movement spread and grow stronger, still the movement is failing in its attempt to create basic, as opposed to superficial, changes in our society. Since the Supreme Court's decision in Brown vs. Board of Education in 1954, only .4% of the Negro students in five of the hard core Southern states have been sent to integrated schools. Jobs for Negroes have not yet been found and housing for minority groups still leaves a great deal to be desired.

It is time that the civil rights struggle be taken to the heart of the problem. The heart of the problem is the South's political power to veto national legislation. The civil rights movement has been long criticized for resorting to extra-legal means to achieve its programs. Now is the time to develop legitimate programs to solidify the gains made by extra-legal methods. Intensive voter registration programs should be developed in Congressiional districts where the South's representation is disproportionally high because of the seniority system.

WHAT CAN BE DONE

While nationally most of the civil rights movement has been centered on Mississippi, there are other struggles which will be of equal importance. These are the efforts to register Negro voters. The Northern Virginia Voter Registration Project is one of these very critical projects.

Between Richmond and Washington, D.C., west of the Blue Ridge Mountains, lie twenty counties in North Central Virginia, Virginia's 8th Congressional District. This district has a total population of 400,000---88,000 of which are Negroes. In 1962, 11,255 Negroes were registered to vote in this district, leaving 33,151 eligible Negroes unregistered. With the abolition of the poll tax and the voiding of the Certificate of Residency, registration is, legally speaking, a simple matter. It must also be noted that the registration books will be open until thirty days before this election.

When the Virginia legislature meets this fall, new restrictions on registration will be enacted. This means that for the immediate future, it is critical that an intensive registration drive be conducted this summer and fall to take advantage of a very unique situation.

The 8th Congressional District has been controlled by the Byrd machine and its predecessors for at least 40 years. The prime method the machine has used to stay in power is to exclude from the registration books the majority of potentially eligible voters. In 1960, which was the last time Congressman Howard Smith had opposition, 56,583 votes were cast in the Congressional race. Almost 150,000 citizens who could have voted in an election in another state did not vote in this election. It might also be noted that for Virginia as a whole, 19% of the adults in the state voted in the Presidential election in 1960.

The Northern Virginia Voter Education Project has sent six field workers into the 8th Congressional district to assist local citizens and indifenous organizations in a massive registration drive. Working as an integral part of the ongoing activities of local NAACP groups, the Northern Virginia Voter Education project has a minimum registration goal of 10,000. The staff will be expanded in the near future to eight and each member of the staff has had extensive civil rights experience. The sole task of the field staff is voter registration and education. The project will not conduct or participate in any other form of civil rights activity.

The Northern Virginia Voter Registration Project has the endorsement of Emile Benoit, the economist, Dr. Michael Harrington of the Community Church of New York City, Harold Taylor, the educator, and Bayard Rustin, civil rights leader. It also has the endorsement of Northern Virginia CORE, National CORE, and the support of the National COPE.

ORGANIZATION OF THE NORTHERN VIRGINIA VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

The project organization is:

The Washington office will supervise finances and develop financial support for the project. The treasurer of the project is Linda Johnson and the fund-raiser is Paul Goodberg. No formal expenses are incured by the Washington office.

The Fredericksburg office will be field headquarters for the project and will be responsible for the overall conduct of the effort. The office will be supervised by Project Director Wesley Burroughs and his assistant, Frank MacDougal. (All field staff for this project are from the middle South.) The field staff is being distributed thusly:

1. Fredericksburg office supervised by the project director.
2. Assistant to the project director who will hold regular office hours and will run the office.
3. Staff member responsible for Charlottesville and the counties of Albemarle and Orange. This involves about 12,671 people.
4. Staff member responsible for Caroline, Hanover, Louisa, Goochland, Spotsylvania, King William, and Fluvanna Counties. A total of 31,367 people live in this area.
5. Assistant to staff member described in #4.
6. Staff member responsible for Fauquier, Culpeper, Prince William, and Loudoun Counties. Involving 20,234 people, the area is predominantly white but has large numbers of Negroes.
7. Staff member responsible for Westmoreland, Northumberland, Richmond, Lancaster, and King George Counties. There are 17,797 people living in this area.
8. Assistant to be assigned to an area determined by the need and problems encountered. This man will also have the responsibility of organizing Fredericksburg which has 2,593 Negroes.

WHAT THE DISTRICT IS LIKE

The district can be divided into four general areas:

1. The three northern counties. Of these three, Prince William is the largest. Prince William has had a 160% increase in population growth since 1950, and has the lowest voting turn out - 18% of any county in the district. This area which was once rural farmland and is now becoming part of suburban Washington.

2. & 3. The blue counties have 20-30% Negro population. The red counties have between 30-49% Negro population. There are more Negroes in these two areas than there have been white voters in recent elections.

4. Albemarle County and Charlottesville are again predominantly white. The University of Virginia is located in Charlottesville.

Dear Mr. DeMott:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 19 in which you express your interest in organizing a voter registration project in Southside Virginia. We congratulate you on your interest, but at such a late date, we would suggest that you try and work with some organization in one of the many areas where active registration programs are now going on.

We have recently made a grant to CORE's national office for a project now being sponsored by Northern Virginia CORE in the Tenth Congressional District of Virginia. Mr. John Robinson is the full-time director, and Mr. Ira Lechner is the registration coordinator. Mr. Lechner can be reached at 2901 N. John Marshall Drive, Arlington 7, Virginia.

We will also have programs going on in Southside Virginia through the Virginia State Conference NAACP and through the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. For work in the Richmond area or Southside Virginia, I would suggest that you talk with Mr. Lester Banks, NAACP Executive Director, 3001 E. Clay Street, Richmond, Virginia (MIlton 4-5678). NAACP will be conducting some programs closer to Washington which you might find of interest.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

AUG 19 1964

Dear Mr. Branton:

I am trying to organize a voter registration ~~in~~ project in Southside Virginia, to be operated by Washington CORE. I have not yet gotten approval of the membership of CORE, but I have gotten enough expression of interest to make me hopeful that I can get the membership to adopt the project. One member of CORE has suggested that you might be able to give me some helpful advice when and if the project is approved. Since the deadline for registration in Virginia is October 3, we will have to move fast, and I am therefore writing you in advance.

For background, we (a committee of three approved by CORE) feel that the end of the poll tax in Federal elections offers real opportunity for increasing the registration of Negroes this year. However, in many Southside counties, the blank sheet form of registration is still used to keep down the number of voters. (There is no printed registration form provided. The ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ registrant must provide the required information in the proper form without any aid from the Registrar. The slightest error can be used to invalidate the registration.) A project involving both knocking on doors and holding classes to teach registrants ~~XX~~ how to make their registrations letter-perfect would seem to offer a real contribution.

My basic plan is to pick an ~~x~~ area in which at least a few local people ~~xxx~~ honestly want such a project. I would not consider ~~xxx~~ starting a project without at least a minimum of local sponsorship, both because it would be futile, and because it might well leave the local people worse off than if we ~~xxx~~ had not meddled. This is particularly important, since Washington CORE does not have any members in a position to live in the community, and the project would have to be handled on a weekend basis (with people going down on Friday nights and returning on Sunday afternoon). I would plan to go next weekend to whatever place we pick, for the purpose of making contacts and preliminary plans. I would expect to meet particularly with sypathetic ministers, and I ~~x~~ would to get a local sponsor to take me around to beer halls and lunch counters, where I could get acquainted with the local people and, perhaps more important, give them a chance to look me over and decide whether they wanted to trust me. The following weekend would be spent in detailed planning, and I would hope to have the project really moving on Labor Day weekend, giving us a month for the hard work.

In addition to actual voter registration work, I would hope to be able to train local leadership, and perhaps organize a CORE chapter. These last would be secondary, and would depend on the local situation and the way in which events moved. In any event, it would be essential to keep the project basically local in leadership as well as workers. The role of the Washington people, I think, would be primarily as catalysts and as sources of information and supplies. In view of the distance involved the number of participants would undoubtedly be small, although I would hope to be able to get a fairly large group of doorbell ringers for at least one weekend. (Or rather door knockers -- I doubt people in the areas I have in mind normally have doorbells.)

My own background is, frankly, not the best as far as experience is concerned. I did, however, spend July and August in Cambridge last year, and have a fairly good picture of what the Negro community in a small southern town in like, and the kind of people they respond to. I have also had a little experience in voter registration, both in Washington last spring and in Rochester, N. Y. a few years ago.

I realize my need for advice, and I would appreciate any help you can give. The project could be either extremely fruitful or disastrous, depending on how it is handled.

Very truly yours

Dear Mr. Guyot:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 6 requesting a grant for voter registration programs in the Fifth Congressional District of Mississippi. We have delayed replying to your request in the hope that we could give some support to your cause.

Upon careful review of our entire Mississippi program, we have concluded that we cannot make a grant at this time in support of any of your projects. As you know, we have invested rather large sums for voter registration in Mississippi since we were first organized, and we decided several months ago to terminate support in that state and concentrate our activities for the remainder of our program where meaningful results could be expected.

The deadline for registration for voting in the November general election was July 3 for Mississippi, and this means that any person who was not registered at that time cannot vote in November. It is possible that VEP might give some support for registration activity in Mississippi after the November election, but this is something which has not been worked out.

I would appreciate it if you would bring us up-to-date on what the registration results have been during the past six months in Hattiesburg.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Branton:

This is request the finanical support of the Voter Education Project for a voter registration campaign in four counties, in which we feel that we can in fact register a large number of applicants. These counties are Jones, Forrest, Jackson, and Harrison All of which are in the fifth district.

The Summer Project conducted by COFO will limited itself to Voter Registration and Community Education. This will in fact assist in the overall Voter Registration Project that we have planned.

Our relationship with the local chapters of the N.A.A.C.P. has been one of complete cooperation with the exception of Jones County.

We feel that we can operate in Gulfport, Biloxi, Laurel, Pass Christian, Pasagoula Moss Point and Hattiesburg.

We intend to operate on the assumption that we will not have to face the usual degree of intimidations.

We are requesting $2,500 in order to operate as effectively as possible on these seven projects for the next two months.

Mrs. Shelia Miachels will be responsible for receipts, vouchers, and etc. I have attempt to make her aware of the policy of the Voter Education Project. Pre haps more information is necessary.

I think that I need not express the need for money with which to operate. I think both of our experience in Greenwood bears this out.

Dear Mr. Lawrence:

Thank you for your letter of August 7 in which you enclose a copy of the proposal which you had previously sent to Dr. Tinsley Spraggins.

I explained to you on the phone that we had received a request earlier from Mr. Thornhill in Lynchburg, and in order not to delay that program any longer, we have decided to make a direct grant to his organization for work in that city.

Before VEP can consider your proposal further, we need to know what organization you would be representing, as we can only make a grant to an agency or organization. If the organization wants to work out something to use your services as director, then we would have no objection to this, but we would not be in the position to make a grant to an individual.

I am out of the city at the moment, and I am dictating this letter to you on the phone, but expect to be back in Atlanta by Friday of this week. Please let me hear from you.

Mr. Tinsley Spraggins
Deputy Director
Voter Registration
Democratic National Committee
1730 K Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Spraggins:

As promised, I am writing you concerning a projected plan to recruit mainly Negro voter registrants in the 6th Congressional District of Virginia.

To clear the air, I wish tosay that I have been well known in the 6th District as a leading Republican.

The recent events in San Francisco and the tactics of the last few years to insure the coronation of Barry Goldwater, has sickened me; particularly, because of the short sightedness of the so-called moderate wing of Republican Party.

I do not like to drift from pillow to post politically, but I feel your project is worthy of notice and action b our people - and it is sorely needed.

I can in all good conscience strive my utmost to get a real project in this district, to increase the Negro electorate.

However at this time I feel no desire to enter partisan politics.

Now to the business at hand.

Attached hereto is OPERATION THE SIXTH.

This is how the job can be done, with a good chance of success.

Please remember I am thinking in terms of an entire Congressional District, which includes eight counties and five cities.

As you will see through the plan I am contemplating an assistant, a Mr. A. Byron Smith, a prominent Negro Democrat of Roanoke, Virginia.

We must travel to these strategic areas set up organizations, conduct workers schools and establish a record keep-system.

We must have office space (preferably in a church) with part time personnel for secretarial service.

Thus time, travel, housekeeping expense and registration drive paraphernalia will be our principal expense.

It is estimated that in the remaining working six (6) weeks to deadline October 3rd the following expenses will be incurred.

- Budget -

Paraphernalia:
Rental typewriter as needed
Mimeograph service
Paper, postage, letterheads, etc.	$1,000.00
Housekeeping expense:
Part rental office space
Part time secretarial help
Incentive prizes	$1,500.00
Travel Expense	500.00
Per Diem Compensation:
For two persons (2)	$3,750.00
Total	$6,750.00

Paradoxically if we had more time the costs could be less but remember these projected costs are to execute a crash program.

Please study our attached proposed plan, and let me know your wishes in this matter.

Very truly yours,

George P. Lawrence

Enclosure: As stated

OPERATION THE SIXTH

I. Mission:

To increase the Negro electorate of the Sixth Congressional District of Virginia

II. Need:

Our Negro registrants are woefully low in every community due in part to lack of personal interest and prior reluctance of the major political parties to aid such a cause.

We have eight counties and five cities with a Negro population of ..... 51,248.

III. General Plan:

A. To establish in each city and county seat a non-partisan voter registration drive committee. The base of the committee must be broadened from the regular political hacks -(my knowledge of this area particularly with P.T.A. workers can be most helpful) and social, civic and church clubs should be encouraged to work.

B. No big mass meetings are contemplated in the beginning to prevent a white backlash counter-drive - but a Victory celebration is a must.

C. We must establish in each area headquarter an office to secure the names from the registrars of non registrants. These offices are to be manned in the main by volunteers with one or two, as size of activity dictates, part time secretaries.

D. We will establish forms and record keeping systems to avoid duplication of effort. We must be able to use local committee names and persons,in each area we will act as coordinators and trainors.

E. Each area must establish in centives - simple scrolls of recognition to new voters, valuable household appliance type prizes for best workers. No money must be passed except to part time workers, rentals and to an occassional helpful ministers - and that for some church fund.

IV. Method:

A. Broadside:

As soon as we establish a steering committee in any locality, we will give certain ones prepared letters to local editor or radio and TV statement citing the need to increase voter registration. We want a new face even if we have to create one. No mention of contemplated drive.

B. Doorbell:

Divide community into area, cities into blocks and workers will personally visit families to encourage them to vote. We must have a "Mobile Squad", that will transport people to registrars office. This should be financed locally. Each area office should give workers names of non registrants only.

C. Telephone Call:

Housewives can be given prepared names lists and conversations to either follow up on Doorbell visits or if by necessity to act instead of a personal visit. This is not the best method and must not be used alone - We will time it's introduction to workers to insure this so-called gossipy approach will not be used.

V. Misscellaneous:

A. Table of organization:

This will be set up in each area tailored for that area, the assigned responsibilities will be carefully supervised and we will make weekly confidential reports as to efficiency of workers and/or officers. These tables will be furnished you for compaign purposes.

B. Workers Schools:

We will personnally conduct workers. Schools, we will prepare our own visual aids and if you have some of your own, if suitable we will be glad to use them.

We will assemble worker kits, eiq. containing duplicate non registrant lists, copy of registration sheet, tally cards to show contacts and progress report cards.

C. Victory mass meeting we should honor the youngest, oldest and latest resident and largest family registerd in area.

D. CAUTION:

Any outside agency helping us must understand that they should not initially take any credit for this drive, as I will not either, this must appear to be a spontaneous act of local citizens.

This will acknowledge receipt of your letters of September 22 and 25 together with the attachments regarding your political race for Probate Judge of Macon County, Alabama.

I wish to congratulate you on offering yourself as a candidate for public office and regret to inform you that the Voter Education Project cannot contribute or assist in political campaigns in any manner whatsoever.

We have been contributing to the voter registration and education program of the Tuskegee Civic Association for more than a year, and I note that you claim membership with that group. We are very proud of the leadership of TCA and of the results which they have brought in the area of voter registration and education in Macon County. We will continue our support to TCA for the remainder of the VEP program, but we cannot contribute to a partisan political campaign.

With best wishes for a successful campaign.

Dear Mr. Branton:

Your immediate attention is invited to the enclosures herewith.

In view of the letter enclosed, dated September 15th from the National Association For The Advancement of Colored People, if only you could come to Tuskegee on a speaking engagement or send someone from your office should be of much help to us.

On our September 15th, City run-off election, we managed to get two of our Negro councilmen elected but still with only about one-half of our citizens eligible to vote voted. Therefore, for our November 3rd election we still see the need of encouragement and guidance for our voters who are eligible to come out and vote to do so. As you so well know that ballots not used or used unwisely are synonymous to ballots casted for our enemy.

Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience.

September 7, 1964

Dr. Roy Wilkins, President
National Association For The Advancement of Colored People
New York, N. Y.

Dear Dr. Wilkins:

Your consideration is called to the information enclosed.

Your records should indicate that I was the organizer and first president of the Tuskegee Institute Branch of the N.A.A.C.P. I further plan to aid in the revitalization of our local branch here just as soon as the courts finish the case and return a favorable verdict for us to continue our operation in Ala.

What can you, your organization or friends do or will do to help US in our Campaign funds and vote appeal? Can or will you send funds and/or resource personnel, speakers, etc. to help US accomplish our goal in the interest of our community and nation?

We need more available, professional knowledge to understand what is happening to the power structure, white and black, in Tuskegee. We need an accurate appraisal of our situation so that we may do the best thing for our people and lay an example for other communities similarly situated. We need this help especially in time for our November 3, 1964 general election when we have five (5) Negro candidates opposing white candidates.

We are on the threshold of victory but as the children in the wilderness we could wander another unnecessary, span of time. There are some of us, many of us, who do not agree in toto with this power structure who apparently wants more time and believes in tokenism. There are those of us who feel that we should cross over into the Promise Land NOW. But some of our people need encouragement and guidance.

With a two to one majority of Negro voters in the August 11th City election all of our eight (8) Negro candidates in the field almost lost out in the first election. Only two of the Negro candidates barely won through to a run-off for September 15th. There were several reason for this situation. One reason was due mostly to our power structure endorsing at the last moment, Monday night, before the election on Tuesday, white candidates who did not meet the approval of the masses. Some of the white candidates were endorsed against our Negro candidates where most of our Negro candidates were much more qualified for the positions than the white candidates. This seems to have brought confusion and consternation among our Negro voters and less than half of them did not bother to vote at all and stayed away from the polls. Therefore, we are not too sure that our two remaining Negro candidates who are not our best, will win in the run-off. We think this blunder will be a tragic one.

Approximately ninety-five (95%) of the white voters voted solid for the white candidates and had it not been for our poll watchers who insured a fairer count of the ballots the white candidates most likely would have swept the entire election on the first run.

There is much work to be done to relieve the Negro voters of their apathy, confusion and consternation with our old power structure. Therefore, we think outside help, so to speak, is needed to help us get over the hump.

Please let me have a favorable reply from you at your earliest convenience.

Yours very truly,

Detroit Lee

Dear Mr. Lee:

This will acknowledge your letter of September 7, which was referred to me in Mr. Wilkins' absence.

Unfortunately, the Association is not in a position to offer any financial or other direct assistance to the voter registration campaign. This does not mean that we do not appreciate the urgency of this project. Our inability to assist is due primarily to legal restrictions still placed upon us. Although we hope in the very near future to be able to reorganize in the state, we have not received this clearance yet.

In view of the importance of this voter registration campaign, I suggest that you write directly to:

Dear Mr. Branton:

Thank you for your letter of August 11. I have written to Mr. Patton as you suggested, and have asked him for advice and materials.

At the present time, the Opelousas NAACP is devoting all its efforts to a voter registration drive which is being carried on by volunteer workers, individual contributions, and our very limited NAACP funds.

However, we are interested not only in getting out the vote, but in the long-range goal of educating the voter. Ten teachers in the community have pledged their assistance in a program of voter-education which would include classes in the structure of government, the legislative process, the Constitution, political parties, the rights and duties of citizens, and literacy instruction for those who need it.

To carry on such a program we will need financial aid. The facilities of the community civic center will be available to us for classroom space, free of charge. We would like to offer our teachers a small salary of $5 per night, for one night a week. In a six week course, then, it would cost us $300 to pay the ten teachers. We would approximate the cost of materials (books for the literacy instruction, charts and pamphlets for the other classes) at $200.

I would like to apply to the "Voter Education Project" of the Southern Regional Council for a grant of $500 to carry on this program of voter education.

Mr. Alexander Marshall will take charge of this program. All correspondence should be sent to him at the above address: c/o Marion O. White, 1520 N. Market St., Opelousas, La..

Dear Ms. Jamieson:

We wish to congratulate you and your co-workers for starting a voter registration drive as indicated in your letter of July 20.

I would suggest that you direct all inquiries in regard to voter registration to Mr. W. C. Patton, Field Director for voter registration for NAACP, 234 Hernando Street, Memphis, Tennessee, as he works very closely with us and supervises NAACP registration programs in your area.

I understand that the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) has been active in your city, and I would like to know what they have been doing in registration, if you know.

With every good wish for a successful drive, I am

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Hill:

This will acknowledge receipt of your proposal of October 15, 1964, in which you seek a grant in support of a "Get-Out-The-Vote" project for hospital patients and handicapped people.

This will also confirm our telephone conversation of this date, in which I informed you that VEP cannot support this proposal, even though we think that it has considerable merit.

To: Voter Education Project, Attorney Wiley Branton, Director

From: All-Citizens Registration Committee, Jesse Hill, Jr., Chairman

Subject: Special Get Out The Vote Project For Hospital Patients And Other Handicap.

Atlanta, Georgia is considered one of the most progressive cities in our nation. However, in the exercise of the important citizenship right and privilege of voting, in recent years this city has left a lot to be desired. In recent bond elections that were promoted and advertised 15% of the citizens controlled the bond decision. In primaries this year less than 40% of the total registered voters went to the polls. In these same primaries 55% of the Negro registered voters went to the polls and only 35% of the white voters casted their votes. Note that Negroes had a 20% higher voting percentage than whites. Normally, the Negro voting percentage is only 10% higher than whites. (based on elections of 1960, 1961 and 1962)

We feel that more citizens will be inspired to vote if we can bring into sharper and more dramatic focus the urgency and importance of voting in November.

This project will enable us to survey local Hospitals, Clinics, Physicians and Convalescing Homes in order to make arrangements to transport wheelchair patients and persons confined to bed to the polls on election day. We also intend to help process "absentee ballots" for those patients doctors will not permit to leave their beds.

We also intend to publish in advance of November 3rd, pictures of wheelchair and other hospital patients making reservations for their trips to the polls. We hope that this great effort on the part of the ill and handicap will stir or motivate healthy citizens and raise the percentage of voter turnout. We hereby request that you approve our proposed budget attached and make grant accordingly.

Jesse Hill, Jr., Chairman of the Committee, will personally coordinate the project with no salary or compensation.

Subject: Proposed Southwide Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign and Budget for the November, 1964 General Election

For 12 Southern states (Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Lousiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, we have contacts with:

- 225 active voter registration organizations
- 560 inactive voter registration groups
- 216 active affiliates of S.C.L.C.
- 219 active adult citizenship schools (averaging 15 students each)
- 1060 inactive (temporarily) adult citizenship school classes (trained 12,271 students)
- 5 state bi-partisan political organizations and 4 non-partisan political organizations.

This gives us 669 active, 1,060 inactive (temporarily) and 560 inactive - a total of 2,289 organizational or group contacts across the south to carry out an effective, productive Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign.

Staff-wise, we have the experienced services of 34 full-time paid workers (3executive staff members, 10 state field secretaries, 16 field assistants, 3 field workers and 3 office secretaries).

The proposed Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign includes:

1. First, corresponding by mail with the President, Chairman, Minister or Head of each of the 2,289 organizational or group contacts. This correspondence will include:

-A brief, strongly worded, personal letter to the effect that unless you and your organization see to it that every Negro and right-thinking white person in your community go to the polls and vote on Election Day, all of our freedom will be set back 50 years and our living standards will be ruined because Goldwater will be elected as President of our country;

-Two folding brochures (one explaining why we must turn out the largest percentage of our registered voters in the history of this country and the other brochure will explain how to carry out an effective Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign;

-A kit containing a leaflet that should be distributed the night before the election; a citizenship sermon for local ministers;

-A handbill explaining how to promote and conduct a community mass meeting, suggesting how to promote political awareness (citizenship movies, television and radio programs, fish fries or weiner roasts, mothers' march for peace and freedom;

-A memorandum explaining how you can effectively be used in a Get-Out-To-Vote Campaign and a stamped, self-addressed envelope accompanied by a blank. By checking this blank, one will be able to express his or her interests in participating in the Southwide Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign and will also be able to request the services of our paid staff (personally), speakers bulk amounts of leaflets, citizenship movies and financial help.

The cost of the above operation (first correspondence) would be $1,243.35 (mailing $343.35, material $900.00).

2. A personal visit will be made by one of the staff members to each of the leadership receiving the first correspondence. Due to complacency and apathy, each of the leaders on the mailing list will be visited at least once by a staff member. If the visited group accepts the program by return mail, the visiting staff member will personally deliver all requested materials, discuss the program and offer to help in any possible way. In cases where the program has not been accepted, the staff member will take likely needed materials but his main responsibility will be to sell the program.

This part of the program (first personal visits) will cost $9,700.00 (travel $6,800 materials $2,900).

3. Directing state, area or community Get-Out-The-Vote Campaigns by our paid staff members will be done upone request by state, area or community organizations after I evaluate the necessity and need for such arrangements.

This operation will allow $10,780.00 (room and board $1,787.00, telephones $1,200.00, transportation $3,800.00, materials $1,500.00 and entertainment $2,500.00).

4. One of the mail services our paid staff will perform for every community will be mass meeting speakers. Not only will our paid staff speak at mass meetings all over the south, but speakers from other organizations and other walks of life will be used.

This operation will allow $2,900.00 (honoraria for mass meeting speakers other than our paid staff $1,700.00, travel $1,200.00).

5. The political structure of South Carolina necessitates three full-time paid staff workers. Each worker will be responsible for 2 congressional districts each. These workers will coordinate the political abilities of the already established political organizations and 27 adult citizenship schools operating in South Carolina's 49 counties.

6. One state-wide meeting will be called in each state for the respective leaders of that particular state. These meetings will be used to explain the way the Southwide Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign functions to stimulate activity, distribute material, explain whatever services are available and to make sure all persons concerned fully understand the one and only one objective (to assure maximum defeat of Goldwater) of the Southwide Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign. The state meetings will also explain that this total operation (SOUTHWIDE GET-OUT-THE-VOTE CAMPAIGN) has no other object than to get the total vote to fight a common enemy (GOLDWATER).

The total proposed budget for the above proposed program is $24,630.35.

A PROPOSED PROGRAM FOR A FIFTEEN MONTH
INTENSIFIED VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVE IN PEACH
COUNTY, BEGINNING NOVEMBER, 1964

PERSONNEL

The personnel for this drive will consist of a program coordinator, adult leaders, and student block workers.

STUDENT BLOCK WORKERS

Experience has shown that college students of the Fort Valley community can be highly effective in voter registration. Interest among students in working with voter registration is high. Therefore, a sufficient number of students might be selected on the basis of interest, enthusiasm, tactfulness, expression, dedication, and knowledge of the importance of registration and voting to make the individual contact with citizens. These selected block workers will then be taught special techniques and approaches by persons well qualified to teach methods which have proved most successful in voter registration.

ADULT LEADERS

One to three persons in each section of the city and outlying areas will supervise student workers. These adult leaders will have the necessary motivation, interest in, and acquaintance with problems in voter registration. They will offer "on the spot" supervision and counsel to student block workers, and will arrange transportation for those citizens needing this service. The adult leaders will also work very closely with the program coordinator to insure uniformity of the program throughout the county.

PROGRAM COORDINATOR

The program coordinator will have supervision over all activities in voter education and registration. He will check periodically with adult leaders on success and problems, offer suggestions and personal assistance where needed, and receive and compile information gathered by block workers on each individual citizen.

Such information will be filed alphabetically by section and street, by the coordinator. In short, it will be largely the responsibility of the program coordinator to see to it that this drive does not lag, and that its goals are achieved. The coordinator will meet regularly with the Executive Council and keep it informed of the progress being made.

GENERAL PROCEDURE

Block workers will contact citizens individually or in family groups in a house to house canvass in an attempt to develop through tactful, yet dynamic means and understanding, and an appreciation for the importance of voting in our Democratic Society. They will, in as far as possible, dispell fogyish ideas relative to voting, answer questions, and offer explanations to show the values of voting to the individual, the community, the nation, and posterity.

The following list is indicative of the kind of information to be obtained from each citizen:

1. Name_____ 2. Address_____

3. Telephone NUmber_____ 4. Approximate Age_____

5. Vocation or Profession_____

6. Employment Status_____

7. Registration Status_____

8. Last election in which he voted_____

Dear Mr. Stallworth:

I have read with interest your letter and proposal of October 23 in which you outline a proposed fifteen-month voter registration and education drive in Peach County, Georgia. I wish to commend you and your co-workers for your interest in continuing such a vitally needed activity.

As presently contemplated, the VEP will not be making any more grants for voter registration or education, as that part of our program ended on October 24, 1964. We are now in the process of writing our final report which will take us a few months, and we expect to be completely out of business by early spring.

Thank you for inviting us to your dinner on November 1, but it will not be possible for any one from our staff to come down on that date.

I note that I am to be the Omega Achievement Day speaker at your college on Sunday, November 8, and perhaps I will get a chance to talk with you personally at that time.

INTRODUCTION

Howard W. Smith is the 81-year-old chairman of the House Rules Committee and a corner stone of the Dixiecrat coalition in Congress. In Smith's 34 years in the House he has earned a national reputation for his remarkable ability to weaken and kill liberal legislation and bring the Executive Branch to its knees. Smith's chairmanship gives him control over the flow of legislation to the floor of the House and on many occasions has used his position with brilliant tactical success.

Smith has not had a serious challenge for his seat in 20 years and the myth of his invincibility has grown to absurd proportions. Until now moderates and liberals have been content to sit around waiting for his death. Fortunately the climate in Virginia is changing and a young moderately liberal lawyer named F. Cauldwell Bagley is running as an Independent against Smith in the general election in November.

Smith is a symbol and key figure in the Byrd machine's control over Virginia and is undoubtedly a major symbol of the South's refusal to grant basic human rights to all citizens. By building a coalition of Negroes, labor and moderate and liberal whites, Smith can be replaced--with a Congressman who represents the New South--through a campaign that dramatically points the way to meaningful political activity and alliances in the South.

VIRGINIA'S POLITICS

The Byrd machine, which was preceded by the Glass machine, is one of the oldest and most thoroughly controlled oligarchies in America. The machine shows a sense of honor, avoids open venality, and has a degree of sensitivity to public opinion.

The machine's power rests on a restricted electorate, competent management of the state government, control of the mass media and banking institutions, and the political advantages gained by almost half a century of dominance over Virginia.

Virginia has an efficient machine which is staffed by highly respected citizens. The machine abhors scandal and takes pride in its honesty and respectability. Consequently, opposition has had little political hay.

Virginia has had a smaller percentage of voter turnout than any other state in the union. On the average between the years of 1925-45, only 11.5% of those over 21 voted. In the 1960 Presidential election, 19% of the adults voted, or 764,312 votes were cast from a total population of 3,966,949.

Byrd's power partly rests in his control of Virginia's Compensation Board. The Board fixes the salaries of principal county officials and makes allowances for their expenses. The board has power over Byrd's county officials who are Commonwealth Attorney, Treasurer, Commissioner of Revenue, Clerk of the Circuit Court and Sheriff. The Clerk of the Circuit Court is an eight-year tenure and he normally is the kingpin of the county machine.

Byrd's other hold on the state is his control of appointments to the courts, especially the circuit court. The Judge of the Circuit Court appoints the electoral board which assumes organizational control over electorial machinery; the local School Trustee Electoral Board which appoints the local school board; and the local board of public welfare. The Circuit Judge also exercises other important administrative functions. Local leaders are thus bound to the state machine by the Compensation Board's control of the pursestrings, by the tie they have via the Circuit Judge with both Richmond and the local government and by Senator Byrd's own leadership. Extensive state patronage cements the machine's strength.

The machine has been challenged in the past and has lost. The most notable case was that of Representative John W. Flannagan, Jr., of the 9th Congressional District. Flannagan won because of personal popularity and his union following from the mines and railroads in his district.

ATTEMPTS TO DILUTE SMITH'S POWER

In the past, attempts have been made to reduce Smith's power in the House Rules Committee or bypass his obstructionism. After 1948 liberals in the House compromised their attempt to weaken Smith's influence by trying to circumvent his committee with the 21 Day Rule. The rule was repealed in 1951 after Republican gains in the House.

After failing to dump Colmer in 1961 President Kennedy had the Rules Committee enlarged from 12 to 15. Smith thwarted this attempt to pack his committee and is still able to come up with 8 to 7 majorities.

The discharge petition has proven to be an awkward way to bring legislation to the floor and Calendar Wednesday is honored for its lack of use.

HOW SMITH CAN BE BEATEN

The 8th District traditionally has been considered a bastion of conservatism and an area that the Byrd machine can always count on for support. Most of the district is still typical of rural Virginia. Caroline County, the most underpopulated county in the district, has 23 people per square mile. In Green County, 51.5% of the families earn under $3,000 per year. Unemployment in Lancaster, Northumberland and Westmoreland Counties is consistently over 10%.

A casual survey of the area will indicate that most of the lower part of the district is a depressed area. The county school systems which, in some cases have token integration, have standards far from acceptable, and Government figures do not start to tell the story of poverty and underemployment. Most counties in the district discourage economic development and most aspects of local governmental activity are geared toward aiding the oligarchy. Federal aid has been offered to the district but in most cases Smith has effectively opposed it.

The upper part of the district (Prince William, Loudoun and Stafford Counties) is different from most of the rest of the district. In this area there is a high population concentration, economic activity and moderate and liberal sentiment. Prince William County now has roughly 70,000 people--or a 160% increase in population since 1950--making it the most populous county in the district. There, building permits increased from $7,493,212 in 1959 to $22,234,087 in 1963 and Prince William was the only important county in which Kennedy did well. Loudoun and Stafford Counties parallel the situation in Prince William.

The rapid pace of development in these three counties is a result of the Government installations in and around this area and an overflow from the Virginia suburbs of Washington. Approximately half of the population in this area is from North of the Mason-Dixon line and most of the new residents are living in suburban housing.

The Bagley campaign will concentrate in these three key counties and in Charlottesville and Fredericksburg. In these places Smith is weakest and Bagley will find his most receptive audiences. Through a massive voter registration drive we expect to add over 10,000 new white voters there with about 80% voting for Bagley.

Bagley will have a hard-hitting grass roots campaign around the general theme: time for a change. He will emphasize the need for economic development and will make specific proposals to increase tourism in this very historic part of Virginia. He will emphasize the machine's control, Smith's age and voting record, the need for better schools and employment opportunities, and will urge that every citizen be given the right to vote and equal treatment under the law.

It must be pointed out that Goldwater will run very strongly in Virginia and the intense political battle in the Presidential race will help overcome some of the apathy in the district. This is also the first year in memory in which every Byrd congressman will have opposition.

At this time there are over 11,000 Negroes on the books and we expect to add at least another 10,000 through an intense registration campaign. Probably 95% of the Negro vote will be for Bagley. We also expect 2,000-4,000 labor votes after a registration drive in the more liberal locals.

On the basis of past elections Bagley is starting off with an anti-Smith vote of approximately 10,000. Smith has never polled over 42,809; his district now has 200,000 potentially eligible voters. Through massive white and Negro registration drives, the protest vote, the Negro vote, and the union vote, Smith will be beaten this fall.

Smith is famous for his back porch campaigns and he is now to old to campaign if he wanted to. In all these years, Smith has sent out one mailing to his constituents and his machine is old and dormant. The young vigorous challenger has real voter appeal--Bagley can articulate the issues, excite large numbers of voters and bring a creative approach to campaigning.

A: BASIC PROGRAM

July 24 to Oct.12	Extensive grass roots contact with voters. In this stage of the campaign Bagley will try mot to alert the machine to the seriousness of his challenge.
Oct. 12 to Nov. 3	Intensified tours by Bagley supplemented by advertising on radio and in the local press. Many people in the district know the machine is dying. These fence sitters will respond to the national attention we will help focus on the campaign.

B: BASIC ORGANIZATION

Part I

July 30 - October 3

As mentioned earlier, in the 1960 Presidential election 19% of Virginia's adult population voted. In the district's most populated county, Prince William, 18.4% voted in the 1960 Presidential election. Prince William now has a population of roughly 70,000. Loudoun County, which now has roughly 30,000, had a 33.1% turnout and Stafford County, now with roughly 20,000 had a 28.9% turnout in the 1960 Presidential election.

Since the Supreme Court's recent action on Virginia's Certificate of Residency and the abolition of the poll tax the only requirement to register is a one-year residency in the State. In some cases local registrars will refuse to enroll voters but writs of mandamus can be obtained easily.

The Virginia Registration Project is working intensely in Prince William, Stafford and Loudoun Counties and in Charlottesville and Fredericksburg to register white citizens. Headquarters for the project is Manassas, Prince William County. The project has an initial staff of five and is setting up local, broadly based registration committees which will stimulate the public to register. The staff will work closely with these local committees and will assist civic and fraternal groups in registering their members. A mailing is being prepared for all registered box holders in the district giving the following information:

Voter's Guide

1. Qualifications for voting
2. Registration: How; Where (A map for getting to the registrar's house)
3. Certificate of residency
4. Poll tax--Its end

Voter's Guide (continued)

5. Deadline
6. Moving and your registration
7. Voting: Time - place - how (ballot, machine, absentee voting)

Issued by League of Women Voters
(Approval pending)

After the mailing will be a follow-up door-to-door canvassing of key areas. When registration ends on October 3 the momentum and organization developed by the Virginia Registration Project will be meshed with the Bagley campaign.

Part II

In the red and blue areas on the enclosed map there is a heavy concentration of Negro citizens. The district has 88,000 Negroes and, as of 1962, 11,255 were registered to vote. There are roughly 33,000 additional Negro votes that could be obtained through a massive voter registration drive.

The Northern Virginia Voter Education Project has been formed to register a minimum of 10,000 Negroes in the 8th District. We expect that the project, which will have no formal contact with the Bagley campaign, will be able to register approximately 13,000-15,000. The project is meant to supplement and aid the indigenous civil rights activity that has been conducted for many years in this area by the NAACP.

The Northern Virginia Voter Education Project now has six field workers. The staff, which is from the middle South, will be expanded to eight by August 1. (A detailed prospectus on the project is available from Northern Virginia Voter Education Project, P.O. Box 19188, Washington, D.C. 20036.)

Part III

The 8th District comprises 20 counties and two incorporated cities, Charlottesville and Fredericksburg. In each of these counties and cities and in the major towns a committe for Bagley will be formed. These committees will have local officers and the assistance of our full-time staff.

Campaign headquarters is in Dumfries, Prince William County. The headquarters is directed by the campaign manager, the staff coordinator, and a female administrative assistant who will assist Mrs. Bagley with Women for Bagley. The campaign manager, who is yet to be named, will be from Virginia aristocracy and will handle Virginia fund raising, advise on political problems and travel with the candidate.

A full-time office is being set up in Manassas, Prince William County. This office will coordinate the campaign in the three key counties of Loudoun, Prince William and Stafford. Similar offices are being set up in Fredericksburg, Charlottesville, Warrenton, Ashland and Heathsville. A Washington office is being maintained on an informal basis to handle fund raising and national press contacts.

At the height of the campaign, Bagley will have a field staff of ten. The staff is to stay in the background giving professional advice and assistance to local Bagley committees and local campaign workers. Moderate and moderate-liberal organizational development is at an early stage in most areas of the district and the staff will concentrate on building long-term local organizations.

To contact the public Bagley will employ standard methods: teas, advertising, rallies, mailings, etc. The campaign, which is emphasizing grass roots campaigning, will also use:

A. A traveling bluegrass band to create a crowd for an informal speech, and

B. A non-partisan slide show, "Virginia, America's Commonwealth," that will be shown to civic and fraternal groups. The presentation will discuss Virginia's historic place in the Nation and the present state of affairs in Virginia.

Part IV

The district as of 1963, has 3,563 members of the AFL-CIO concentrated in Fredericksburg, Charlottesville, and West Point. A full-time staff worker with prior trade union experience has been assigned to work with the liberal locals. Office space is being provided by the 2,000-man textile local (TWUA) in Fredericksburg and close coordination is being developed with local COPE committees. Union locals are being assisted with voter registration and it is hoped that union members will go out into their communities as volunteer voter registration and campaign workers.

Seven colleges are in or near the district. In selected areas, students will be called on to do voter registration canvassing and poll watching.

COLONIAL WILLIAMSBURG

An authentic glimpse of life in Colonial America is provided in a visit to restored Williamsburg, Virginia's capital from 1699 to 1779.

At the Information Center films depicting 18th-century life are shown throughout the day. Here tickets, 50c-$3, are sold for the principal exhibition buildings: Capitol, Governor's Palace, Raleigh Tavern, Public Gaol, Magazine and Guardhouse, Wythe House and Brush-Everard House. All are open 9-5 summer, 10-5 winter. Most imposing of the restored or reconstructed buildings are the Governor's Palace (1706-1720) and the Capitol. Also of note are Bruton Parish Church, the Old Court House and the Wren Building.

Eleven craft shops are open free weekdays; seven on Sundays. The Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Folk Art Collection is open free Tues.-Sun. noon-9.

From mid-March to No-

LEGEND

Counties marked in blue had between 20 & 30 % Negro population in 1960.

Counties marked in red had between 30 & 49% Negro population in 1960.

Caroline County, outlined in black, had over 50% Negro population in 1960.

Counties marked with crosshatch have more than 5.7% unemployed. Lancaster, Northumberland and Westmoreland had nearly 10% or over.

SMITH'S OPPONENT

Running against Smith will be Floyd Caldwell Bagley, a criminal lawyer in Dumfries, Prince William County. He is a member of the Dumfries TB Association, Little League, PTA, belongs to fraternal organizations and is a member of the Board of his Methodist Church. In 1961 he ran for the Virginia House of Delegates from Prince William and Stafford counties as a Republican and won 40% of the votes. In 1963 he ran as an Independent for Commonwealth Attorney for Prince William County and lost by only 14 votes.

The 42 year old son of an automobile mechanic, F. Caldwell Bagley is a combat veteran of both World War II and Korea. He is a charter member of the Triangle and Stafford Lodges, Loyal Order of Moose; a Mason; a member of the American Legion; the Lions Club; and belongs to the Eastern Prince William Civic Association. Mr. Wiley A. Branton, Director
Voter Education Project
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Branton:

SCLC has contributed toward registering quite a few Negro voters throughout Georgia during the past three years and as we approach an election period we are quite concerned that some program in voter education be conducted on a statewide basis.

We propose to conduct a two day statewide conference for leaders from approximately 70 of Georgia's 159 counties. The purpose of this conference is to familiarize these leaders with techniques of getting out the vote, of interviewing candidates, of teaching the duties of election officials, and of establishing county political guidance and patronage committees which will unite the Negro community and avoid the corrupt politics which has been practiced in the past in many of these areas.

The specific content of this workshop would be worked out with the VEP Staff, and we would hope that the entire VEP staff would serve as faculty for this occasion. SCLC would also provide the services of our staff in training and follow-up. However, Mr. John Calhoun has worked on a per diem basis during the past year and we would hope that his salary would be included in the grant. SCLC finds itself in dire financial straights and can barely maintain those persons who are on full-time staff.

The full time staff who are available for follow-up to this conference are: Mr. Hosea Williams, Rev. Samuel Wells, Mr. Willie Bolden, Rev. Fred Bennette, and Miss Laverne Graham. In addition to this some of the funds requested for office and staff would be used to give a stipend to persons such as Bill Randall, Toombs McLendon and or A. C. Touchstone who might meet with counties in their areas to aid them in carrying out the plans proceeding from the conference. We feel justified in asking this of VEP since we have supported VEP projects with staff through the year and have even neglected to deduct the 15% allowed in VEP grants for administrative overhead this past year.

In the event that it is necessary to cut this request, I would think that the addition of fund raising techniques into the workshops would perhaps compensate for the $5,000 (item no. II - Travel and Expenses for 100 counties). This would enable each county to raise the necessary funds within her borders and not excessively tax the state program.

Again let me specify that we are asking VEP staff to develop with us the type of Voter Education Conference which imparts much needed information to citizens of this state. There are many examples such as Liberty and Peach Counties where just a minimum of information might have made a significant difference in the lives of the Negro citizens. It is our hope that we might together share this type of information across Georgia.

Sincerely yours,

Andy

Re: Proposed Workshop in Political Education

In a period when Negro voting strength in the state of Georgia is estimated at 275,000 or 21.1 per cent of an estimated total of 1,300,000, it seems appropriate that there be some effort made to engage in widespread political education. If the objectives of freedom from racial discrimination and equality under law and the Constitution are to be achieved, Negroes must exercise the balance of political power which they hold. It appears that the SCLC has recognized this need as evidenced by the proposal recently presented to VEP through its Statewide Registration Committee. The intent of this memo is to comment on the proposal as submitted.

As this program is perceived by the writer, its objectives would be four-fold:

1. To develop a working program which can be used, with modification, in every voting district in the state.

2. To help participants develop an awareness and appreciation for practical politics, the ability to analyze public issues, and a willingness to undertake responsible leadership roles in public affairs.

3. To provide instruction in use of various voting devices (machines, ballots).

4. To instruct in methods and techniques useful in promoting participation on election day.

It would appear that at least one representative should be invited from each county, with urban communities also sending representation. The U. S. Congressional District chairmen would be included in this listing. (See attached list for possible invitees.)

Methods used to achieve these goals would include lectures, discussion groups, audio-visual aids, panel discussions, and demonstrations. Additionally, a kit of materials might be prepared for the conferees. Most importantly, there would be follow-up visits by the district coordinators and field workers.

I would recommend financing the political education program as proposed by the Statewide Registration Committee of SCLC.

Dear Chairman:

You will find enclosed a copy of a letter planned to be addressed to specified leaders in your district regarding a political education program. There is also attached a list of these persons whom we propose to invite to participate as workshop leaders if the program is approved. Please make the necessary contacts and recommend one person from each county.

The idea is to have the person to participate in the Atlanta Clinic. He or she would then be responsible for conducting the program at the county-wide, as well as, the precinct or voting district level. In this way we would hope to reach every possible voter before we become involved in the 1964 political campaigns.

Kindly communicate to us at once any suggestions or recommendations you have in regard to the selections or the program. Certainly we would hope that you would also participate in the Atlanta Clinic June 5-6. Please fill out and return the enclosed form by May 28, so that we may have your recommendations before making final selections.

May 21, 1964

Dear Fellow Citizen:

The present political situation and lack of benefits received in the past, make it almost imperative that we launch upon a statewide program of political education.

You are therefore invited to attend a non-partisan workshop on:

1. How to mark ballots, as well as, how to use voting machines.
2. How to vote for a "write-in" candidate.
3. How to vote an "absentee" ballot.
4. How to vote in referendums and on bond issues.
5. How to participate in a two-party primary.
6. How to get out the largest possible vote in a county.
7. How to make and use job and other opportunities for our people.

These sessions will be held from 3:00 P. M. Friday, June 5, thru Saturday, June 6, at the Waluhaje Apartments, 239 West Lake Ave., N. W., Atlanta. All expenses to and from the Clinic, as well as, living expenses here, will be paid for one person from each county on a selective basis from those who respond promptly.

The plan is to train one hundred persons from various sections of the state, who will return to their sections and conduct similar workshops, on a voluntary basis, county by county, during the coming weeks. The number of new registered voters, the importance of all voters being able to vote intelligently and getting results from our votes, warrant your participation, if you should be named for your county.

If you cannot attend in person, please get together with other leaders and designate a person who is qualified and will sacrifice the time to help in educating the voters. Inasmuch as the number of participants must be limited to 100, and we hope, from 100 counties, please fill out and return the form below at once.

Sincerely yours,

J. H. Calhoun, Chairman

PRECINCT WORKER'S MANUAL

STATEWIDE REGISTRATION COMMITTEE - SCLC

How to Become a Successful Precinct Leader

I To win, the precinct or, voting district, leader must organize to:

A. Intelligently, the year round, sell potential voters on the importance of voting and at every opportunity.
B. Get the right people registered.
C. See that they vote - Primaries, elections, referendums, bond elections.
D. See to it that benefits come from voting - Jobs, services, etc.
E. Keep active all the year round - Work on community problems.

II The leader must have helpers in every city block and every rural section - PUT EVERYONE TO WORK! - How? By giving everybody something to do:

A. Getting acquainted with every person.
B. Registering favorable potential voters.
C. Asking neighbors to meet candidates.
D. Getting voters to the polls.
E. Getting absentee voters voted.
F. Baby-sitting for voters.
G. Serving at the polls as watchers.
H. Becoming working members of civic and political clubs.
I. Helping to sell the idea of donating money.
J. Writing letters to editors.
K. Arranging neighborhood, coffees, teas, study groups, action committees, etc.
L. Doing telephoning, systematically for attendance at meetings, rallies, etc.
M. Participating in rallies, fund raising events, political forums.

B. Know the affiliation or "leanings" of every potential voter in every house.
C. Arrange this information for handy use.

V Build and maintain a card file

A. File by streets and numbers.

B. Keep it up to date.

2. Give them minor responsibilities over others as block workers, committee chairmen, etc.

C. Let the best one take your place when you move up or reach the peak of effectiveness.

D. You keep on being a worker.

VII Help build candidates

A. Help pick them and help get them around.

1. Candidates are most effective as they talk to PTA's, Boy Scouts, Service Clubs in off season months.
2. Candidates need strong boosters in every precinct. Help find candidates, get them to run, get them active, get them elected.

B. Keep in touch with them after election.

1. Help the elected onces keep campaign promises, they may be candidates for reelection.

C. Most elections are won or lost by a 5% margin.

X Now you are ready for election day - Do these things on that most important day:

A. Establish a watcher in (or near) the polling place with your card file.
B. Have watcher "Pull the Card" of each voter as he votes; mark "voted" for future reference.
C. About 3:00 P. M. pick up part of cards who have not voted.
D. Call them by phone-remind and help them vote.
E. Return cards to polling place, exchange for others not voted and call them.
F. Repeat the process until every voter has voted. There is no other way to win.
G. Watch the counting of votes.
H. See "Get Out the Vote" instructions for auxiliary activities.

XI Celebrate your victory

A. If your candidates are successful.
B. If you gained a dozen or more votes this time in your precinct, over last time - YOU WON!
C. Have a victory party for workers every time.
D. Visit other headquarters on election night, accompanied by workers.

XII Coordinate these suggestions with our:

A. "Get Out the Vote" Instructions.
B. "Bread and Meat" Objectives.
C. Roles of Public Officials.
D. Public Relations - Voter Registration Program.

STATEWIDE REGISTRATION COMMITTEE - S. C. L. C.

"GETTING OUT THE VOTE"

The Voter-Registration Program in your area will be as dead as a doornail if the Qualified Voters STAY AT HOME on election day. Don't take it for granted that people are going to vote. Act Now!! After election day will be too late.

Don't use the shotgun technique, find out who is qualified to vote and aim all of our efforts straight at the qualified VOTER.

A. Secure a list of registered voters from the registrar's office; Look up telephone numbers.

1. Prepare a personal contact card and a poll watcher's card for each qualified Voter. By use of carbon paper they can be prepared at one time from the Voter's List.

a. The contact card is the card used by volunteer block leaders to make personnal contact with each voter.

b. On this card, in the following order, put the voter's address, name (last name first), and phone number.

CONTACT CARD
201 Smith St.
Doe, John
PL 3-9184

3" X 5"

2. Now divide these cards according to addresses into units of no more than eight (8) each. (ex. if eight (8) voters live in the 200 block of Smith Street, take these persons' cards and wrap a rubber band around them. Now you have a unit of cards).

3. Find a volunteer voter in this unit who will contact the other seven (7) voters in the 200 block Smith St. (You will be suprised to find out that a simple phone call is all that is needed sometimes to secure a good volunteer.)

B. Select enough poll watchers to cover every voting place all day. The poll watcher's card is used by the poll watchers at each voting place.

1. This card (carbon copy of contact card) should contain, in the following order: address, name (last name first), and phone number.

3" X 5"

POLL WATCHERS CARD
201 Smith St.
Doe, John
PL 3-9184

2. These cards should be filed in alphabetical order according to precinct of voting districts (A shoe box makes a good file).

3. These cards will be used at the polls by the poll watchers. They will pull the Voters' cards as they come to the polls and notify their headquarters about tardy voters.

C. Divide the voters list into groups of 25 to 50 voters, assign one list to each telephone worker to call twice, once the week before election, and a second time the day before election.

ORGANIZATION

I. VOTING DISTRICT HEADQUARTERS AND CHAIRMAN

Each precinct or voting district should have a headquarters (someone's home will do) and a Precinct or District Chairman.

1. Headquarters --- a base for the "get out the vote project."

2. Headquarters Chairman --- it is duty of the Headquarters Chairman to direct operations.

3. Plan to give voting instructions at headquarters and in meetings.

II. WORKERS NEEDED ON ELECTION DAY

1. Cars for transportation (2 cars on call at the Voting District Headquarters).

2. Baby sitters (2 each on call at the Baby Sitters Headquarters).

3. Poll watchers (2 watchers each on two hour shifts). It will be the duty of these workers to report to headquarters the names of tardy voters. Headquarters in turn will contact these voters and get them to the polls. (Use your block workers).

4. Telephone workers, one for every 25 numbers, to call mostly in the evening.

5. Refreshment Committee -- this committee will furnish punch, cold drinks, cookies, coffee, donuts, etc., to the workers.

III. Time is short, adapt this information to fit your needs, but above all, it is important that you GET STATRED. No alibis after election, put ACTION into your Voter Registration Program.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Be sure to notify all voters as to the opening and closing hours of the polls. Urge voters to cast their ballots before foing to work. TOO EARLY is better than TOO LATE.

Dear Chairman:

You will find enclosed a copy of a letter addressed to specified leaders in your district regarding a political education program. There is also attached a list of these persons, from which workshop leaders will be selected. Please make the necessary contacts and recommend one person from each county.

The idea is to have the person to participate in the Atlanta Clinic. He or she would then be responsible for conducting the program at the county-wide, as well as, the precinct or voting district level. In this way we would hope to reach every possible voter before we become involved in the 1964 political campaigns.

Kindly communicate to us at once any suggestions or recommendations you have in regard to the selections or the program. Certainly we would hope that you would also participate in the Atlanta Clinic, June 12-14. Please fill out and return the enclosed form by June 9, 1964 so that we may have your recommendations before making final selections.

Sincerely yours,

5. How to participate in a two-party primary.
6. How to make an use job and other opportunities for our people.

These sessions will be held from 3:00 P. M. Friday, June 12, thru Sunday morning, June 14, at the Waluhaje Apartments, 239 West Lake Ave., NW, Atlanta. All expenses to and from the Clinic, as well as, living expenses here, will be paid for one person from each county on a selective basis from those who respond promptly.

The plan is to train one hundred persons from various sections of the state, who will return to their sections and conduct similar workshops, on a voluntary basis, county by county, during the coming weeks. The number of new registered voters, the importance of all voters being able to vote intelligently and getting results from our votes, warrant your participation, if you should be named for your county.

If you cannot attend in person, please get together with other leaders and designate a person who is qualified and will sacrifice the time to help in educating the voters. Inasmuch as the number of participants must be limited to 100, and we hope, from 100 counties, please fill out and return the form below at once.

Georgia Voter
RE: Registration Program

Dear Mr. Calhoun:

In order that there will be no misunderstanding regarding the position of the Voter Education Project with reference to the proposed statewide registration program, I decided to put my views into writing.

When VEP was established, it was the intention of all concerned that VEP funds would be used to supplement the programs of participating agencies. While many agencies have continued to raise money locally for registration programs, it appears that there has been almost no effort at fund raising in the Atlanta community, or in the state of Georgia. The Statewide Registration Committee had been operating for quite some time when VEP was organized, and they were getting money from various organizations to support the program. It now appears that nothing is being done unless funds come directly or indirectly from VEP. This is tragic, and does not speak well for the idea of an ongoing continuing program when VEP ends this year.

VEP must, at all times, maintain a non-partisan program in order to protect our tax exemption, and we must scrutinize much more closely a voter education program than we would a registration program, as the latter is more easily susceptible to partisan influence. This is the reason that we should have as detailed a proposal as possible in considering any request for a strictly voter education program, and we need to know exactly what is going to be done, and who is going to participate. Obviously, we need this information in sufficient time to reach a decision concerning a grant.

By way of review of your proposal, our files reflect the following:

On May 8, 1964, there was hand delivered to the VEP office, a budget seeking $11,000 for a voter education project, $ 4,000 of which was earmarked for a May 22-23 meeting in Atlanta, involving approximately 100 persons. There was no program, or any other information included with the budget other than a copy of the invitational letter to people over the state. On May 13, we received a copy of your program for the first time, but since this request came from you rather from SCLC, we informed you immediately that we wanted to know the attitude of SCLC regarding this request. On May 15, I received a letter from the Rev. Andrew Young supporting your request generally, and in a telephone conversation, he agreed that the actual details of the program needed to be worked out, and that you should not attempt to have a program as early as May 22, and that you should seek to have it at a later date after the details had been worked out. On May 20, we received a list from you of the prospective participants for the Atlanta conference, and I then asked Mrs. Whitaker, our Research Assistant, to study the entire proposal and make some recommendations. On June 2, Mrs. Whitaker made a recommendation that we generally support a political education program, and I conferred with her about the matter and suggested to her that your item for transportation seemed to me to be too high; that you should attempt to get ITC or old Gammon for your meeting so as to reduce the housing cost, and that you try to arrange your meetings so that we would only have to house the participants one night.

On June 5, we received a copy of your letter of June 4 to the district chairmen inviting people to attend an Atlanta clinic on June 12-14. Since VEP had not approved any budget for such a meeting, and you appeared to allow only a week for your county leaders to find out who could attend and get the information back to you, we concluded that this was something that you were not asking VEP to support. I had further reason to think that this was a non-VEP program because of the fact that another letter was attached inviting key people to attend a leadership conference in Atlanta on June 10 at which time travel expenses were to be paid, and there was also included a copy of, "The Republican Southern Challenge" which clearly is partisan. I was in New York on June 8 when your letter of June 6 arrived, and upon my return the next day, I discovered for the first time that you were asking VEP to pay for your statewide clinic scheduled for June 12-14. At this time, I did not know what had happened to my suggestion regarding the use of ITC or some other place, and I noted that the program would require participants to arrive on Friday and leave on Sunday, which would involve two nights lodging. I immediately called you and was informed that ITC and the other places were not available, and the Waluhaje and Morris Brown were the best housing arrangements you could make. Your program called for dinner speakers on Friday and Saturday, a luncheon speaker on Saturday, and breakfast speakers on Saturday and Sunday, and when I talked with you on the phone on June 10, I learned not a single one of these speakers had at that time been invited, even though the meeting was just a couple of days off. Mrs. Whitaker tells me that she agreed to write letters in support of this invitation to the proposed speakers (particularly the out-of-state ones), but she did not learn of your plans for a June 12 meeting until June 5. You apparently had agreed when we were talking last Wednesday that sufficient planning had not gone into the program, and informed me that you would cancel it.

We still feel that this could be a good program, but it will require careful planning and thought. In order that you and SCLC will know what you can expect from VEP, I can tell you now that we are willing to approve a tentative grant in an amount not to exceed $3,000 in support of a statewide conference in Atlanta to train leaders from seventy to one hundred counties who agree to go back to their respective communities and train others in political education on a non-partisan basis. The program which you have previously outlined is all right to use with the exception of the fact that it should involve only two days, rather than a period of three days. Effort should still be made to secure less costly housing, and these participants and speakers should have more than a one-week notice, particularly your speakers. Upon satisfactory assurances to me that this kind of program is being planned, we can issue our check to SCLC.

The last phase of your proposal has to do with travel and expense money for county leaders, and while we have not reached any decision regarding this phase of your program, I want to make it clear that our approval of the first phase as described above in no way implies any commitment that we will support the second phase. VEP is primarily a research program, and if the performance of your district chairmen in failing to give us the two progress reports which were required following the "Citizenship Clinics" is any indication of what we can expect in the way of progress reports if we support Phase Two, I can tell you now that we will not support it. I would hope that I can have sufficient notice of your statewide conferences so that I can arrange my own schedule to be present and make a personal plea and explanation regarding the reports which we would want.

The other problem as I see it in connection with Phase Two is the fact that we must have some clear understanding of who is going to be in charge of this part of the program. Since the program has already been delayed several weeks, it is obvious that you will be involved in partisan politics very shortly, and there will be no one supervising the program, unless SCLC is going to designate someone who will really get the job done. I have strong feelings at the moment that such follow-up work as might be done by the people who will participate in the Atlanta conference ought to be supported by the local community, or from funds other than VEP's, but I am completely open-minded regarding a grant if I can be assured of some effective direction of the program.

This letter has been unusually lenghhy, but I consider it more in the nature of a memo for our research files, that is why it is perhaps more than I normally insert in a letter. Let me assure you of my personal admiration for your great contribution to the cause of voter registration in the state of Georgia, and any criticism which I have offered has come from a deep sense of obligation to protect and maintain the objectives of VEP, and I must consider these objectives as paramount to the specific plans and objectives of our participating agencies.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

FOR RELEASE UPON RECEIPT

Organization is Key to Victory

"Party organization is about nine-tenths of the battle . . . So, when you ask on what grounds I predict a Republican victory this fall, I reply that we have the organization—the organization we didn't have in 1960."

That was the key to a talk by Republican National Committee Chairman William E. Miller in a recent appearance before the National Press Club. The chairman went on to state that "In the House of Representatives and in state and local contests, I also anticipate a strong Repubican upsurge this year. We will be trying in more areas, especially in the South."

After suffering a one-vote-a-precinct loss in 1960, Republicans have concentrated on building stronger precinct organizations. Much has been accomplished, but more work remains and more helpers are needed. "Challenge" this month is a "precinct leader's handbook," to help accomplish that job.

With the 1960 results still fresh in mind, few persons need to be convinced of the importance of precinct organization. But the lesson is retaught every campaign. Just last month, in heavily Democratic Bowie, Md., a Republican was elected mayor —by one vote.

Perhaps the most repeated question in politics is the query of the concerned citizen who asks, "How can I help?" The answer is contained in these pages. Only two things remain: Pick up the telephone and notify your local GO-Party leader that you want to help, and get a comfortable pair of walking shoes.

CITIZENS NON-PARTISAN VOTER REGISTRATION COMMITTEE NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

March 22, 1960

Dear Citizen:

In connection with recent developments in our community VOTER REGISTRATION has a very important role to play. At a mass meeting held at Bethel A.M.E. Church on March 14, I was appointed by the body of people present to convene respresentive individuals from across the community for the purpose of organizing a CITY-WIDE NON-PARTISAN VOTER REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN.

It is not necessary for me to comment upon the merits of a crusade for Voter Registration. The simple fact that less than 25% of the Nashvillians eligible to vote are registered is indicative of the great need for our campaign.

You are requested, therefore, to attend our organizational meeting along with another representative from your organization to be held at the 18th Avenue Community Center, Tuesday Evening March 29, at 7:30 P.M. The Key citizens from all of Nashville will be present. We are looking forward to you and your organizational representative being there.

Yours in the spirit of greater Voter Registration,

Dear Mr. Weingarten:

I am glad you were able to reach the Amsterdam News and to effect the agreement you have. As I understand it this means a Friday release. This has not usually been a good day for us but in this case, where we are not eager for space, it is all right.

I believe I told you, the plan is that our announcement of the project will be fairly brief and unexciting. This would be followed two or three days later by a joint announcement from the other agencies; for this, the hope would be to get as much attention as possible and I believe that a Sunday or Monday release, probably Monday, would be best. I assume that your agreement with the Amsterdam News does not affect this.

This would seem to me to be so because after SRC's announcement, the story is out and a paper can do as much as it wants. The joint announcement from the other agencies will be a follow-up, a call, a statement of intentions.

Best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

WE HAVE BEEN HAVING A TRYING TIME HERE WITH THE AMSTERDAM NEWS, WHICH HAS PIECED TOGETHER, FROM A VARIETY OF SOURCES, THE BULK OF THE VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT AND THE FOUNDATION'S ROLE IN IT.

FINALLY, AFTER MUCH CONVERSATION WITH JAMES BOOKER, THEIR REPORTER, AND JAMES HICKS, THEIR EDITOR, WE HAVE WORKED OUT AN AGREEMENT THAT THEY WOULD NOT BREAK THEIR STORY PREMATURELY AND WOULD ALSO KEEP THE DONOR'S NAME ANONYMOUS.

IN RETURN FOR THIS AGREEMENT, I TOLD THEM THAT THE STORY, WHEN RELEASED, WOULD COME FROM YOUR OFFICE AND THAT I WOULD ASK YOU TO MAKE CERTAIN THAT THEY WERE NOT BEATEN ON THEIR OWN STORY.

WHEN YOU ARE READY TO RELEASE THE STORY,THEREFORE, WOULD YOU PLEASE BEAR MR. BOOKER AND HIS PAPER IN MIND. THEIR DEADLINE IS TUESDAY FOR FRIDAY PUBLICATION. WHEN THE STORY IS RELEASED, THEREFORE, WILL YOU PLEASE SEE THAT THEY HAVE IT IN AMPLE TIME TO MAKE THEIR FRIDAY EDITION. THEY ARE NOT SEEKING AN EXCLUSIVE FOR IT. I BELIEVE THIS IS FAIR AND REASONABLE INASMUCH AS THEY COULD HAVE PRINTED THE STORY-VIRTUALLY 100% CORRECTLY-THIS PAST WEEK.

I WOULD APPRECIATE ANY STEPS YOU AND YOUR COLLEAGUES CAN TAKE TO ASSURE THIS. IF, FOR ANY REASON, YOU BELIEVE YOU CANNOT DO SO, PLEASE LET ME KNOW SO THAT I CAN TALK WITH THEM AGAIN, AND EXPLAIN ANY DIFFICULTIES THIS MIGHT MEAN FOR YOU WHICH WOULD PREVENT COMPLIANCE. Dear Jim:

First, let me tell you that Wiley A. Branton has accepted the job of Project Director. He has already begun work, on a part time basis, and as soon as he can close down his law office in Pine Bluff will be here full time. He expects that this will be before February.

Second, Wiley will be grateful for your suggestions of qualified persons to fill the two Field Consultant positions we had planned. If you have names to suggest, please communicate directly with him at his present address: 119 East Barraque Street, Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

Third, George Barrett, of Nashville, will during the next 6-8 weeks assist Wiley in getting the program started.

Fourth, I have to apologize to you for being slow in sending out the draft of the public announcement. A number of problems, however, had to be thought out. The draft is enclosed now, and we would appreciate your comments as soon as you conveniently can consider and respond to the draft.

There are several points which should be noted. One is that we have decided that our original plan of issuing an announcement will not work. We now think that your joint announcement should be the first public word, and that we shall make no separate announcement.

I believe you were wise in deciding that there should be no press conference. That decision creates, however, a mechanical problem which has to be solved. The announcement has to come from some place - there has to be an office which reporters can call for further information. We think there is value in the announcement coming out of the South.

Will you please let us know your views? Our recommendation to you is that the announcement be released from the Southern Field Division of the National Urban League. If this were done, it would be desirable for Whitney Young to come down at the time of the release.

We shall follow our earlier plan, and hold an on-the-record discussion with the press, at the time of the announcement, in order to background interested reporters on our role.

In the draft we have listed your and the other organizations in order of age. In the last paragraph we have listed your and the other names alphabetically.

The statement of principles was hard to compose. I hope you will study it carefully.

After your criticisms, suggestions, etc. are received, we'll get on the phone with each of you until there is common agreement.

The lawyers seem to think that Treasury will have ruled by mid-January. Hopefully, the announcement can be issued before the end of this month. In the meantime, we should all do what we can to keep the story from spreading.

Happy New Year!

Sincerely yours,

FROM: Leslie W. Dunbar

The same letter as enclosed was sent to N.A.A.C.P., National Urban League, C.O.R.E., the S.C.L.C., and S.N.C.C.

I would be very grateful to have frank criticisms or suggestions from you.

(Draft)

The Voter Education Project has been established by the Southern Regional Council to study voter registration in southern states.

The Project, which is expected to continue for two years, will be devoted to a study of the factors which cause southern voting participation to lag behind national levels. It will give major emphasis to analyzing the most effective means for enlarging the southern electorate.

The Voter Education Project is designed to use the experience of various persons and groups concerned with low voting in the South. Assurances of support and cooperation have, therefore, been obtained from several agencies, and funds will be made available to them to cover the costs of their contributions. These agencies will conduct registration drives, and the methods and results will be analyzed and evaluated by the Project. The Council expects to publish ~~review~~ conclusions of the study in 1964. The Voter Project also aims to become a non-partisan clearing house for ideas and information, and will serve in this way all those agencies and groups working for a more democratic franchise in the South.

Director of the Project will be Mr. Wiley A. Branton. In order to head the Project, Mr. Branton will leave his law practice in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, where he has also served as attorney for the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund. Mr. Branton graduated from Arkansas A.M. & N. College and the school of Law of the University of Arkansas.

Dear Mr. Lucas:

As you know, a united drive to increase voter registration in the South is about to get underway. There is now being circulated among the five agencies most directly involved drafts of a news release and a statement of aims. For obvious reasons, these are confidential at this point but copies are enclosed for your information.

Through the Voter Education Project the Southern Regional Council will participate in this effort. We do so because we are convinced that one of the most vital potentials for change lies within the area of increased registration and voting on the part of all of the region's citizens. We also feel that this will, if successfully executed, greatly enrich the whole of American life.

It has occurred to us that these five agencies would be greatly strengthened by having the aims of this voter registration program endorsed by those national agencies whose commitment and interest in the general field of human relations is well known. Such an endorsement very likely should be a part of the news release announcing the drive. Certainly, we number the American Jewish Committee among that group and would like with this letter to invite your consideration of this suggestion.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Leslie:

I have read with much interest your letter of January 2nd and the draft of the public announcement which you enclosed. We approve of the draft as prepared by you. We also approve of your recommendation that the announcement be released from the Southern Field Division of the National Urban League, and that Whitney Young come down at the time of the release. The statement of principles also meets with our approval. I think it is a good statement.

I am pleased to know that Wiley A. Branton has accepted the job of Project Director. Attorney Branton helped to defend the first Freedom Riders arrested in Mississippi, of which I was one, and I was much impressed with his grasp of the total struggle.

I hope that the Project gets under way very shortly. We are anxiously awaiting its launching, and look forward with much pleasure to our participation in it.

Dear Whitney:

Thank you for your letter of January 12, and the attached program statement of the Urban League. The latter I have passed on to Wiley Branton, with the comment that the plans outlined appeared to me both carefully conceived and realistic.

Your news about Hekman Sweatt is interesting. I have heard good things of him.

Much as I personally want to agree with you, I don't think a public announcement can be delayed much longer. The latest issue of Jet reminds us again that there is public interest which has to be satisfied and should be accurately informed.

As to your handling the announcement, I think this idea, attractive as it might be, can be dropped, especially in view of your reluctance. Both you by letter and the SCLC and the SNCC orally have suggested that Branton's office release the statement, and we have no objection. In fact, this may be the only practical plan. CORE, incidentally, approved of your role; I have not heard from the NAACP.

On the other hand, Martin King has discussed with me the possible value of reversing the earlier decision and holding a press conference. He has some interesting reasons, and I asked that he write me a letter setting them forth. If Martin decides to do this I shall share his letter with you and the others.

To: Mr. Whitney M. Young, Jr.
January 18, 1962

I think your point about emphasizing in the announcement that each agency would play a role consistent with its traditional methods is a good one. I am sure this will make sense to the other agencies, and will therefore amend the announcement.

Regarding the statement of aims, SCLC and SNCC orally have expressed general satisfaction, and CORE has written approval. You may be right that it is not needed. I believe still that there would be value in some such statement, issued at the time of the announcement, hopefully designed to put the campaign on an elevated plane in popular opinion and to put its critics on the defensive. As to the particular draft, we have no pride of authorship.

I'll be in touch with you again.

Dear Leslie:

This is my attempt to put into writing my suggestion made to you a few days ago in conversation.

It is my sincere feeling that my earlier comment that a press conference, held in conjunction with the public announcement of the Southwide Drive, might be beneficial in some way. I am more persuaded now due to the reports in the various news media that there is 'division' and 'disunity' among the agencies. This coordinated effort could get off to a tremendous start. At the same moment, the visual impact of the titular heads of the major civil rights organizations assembled for such an announcement would do much to dispel any doubt in the minds of our supporters and counter-act the indictments of our detractors.

My finhl suggestion would be in the vein of suggesting that if a press conference is held, Roy Wilkins should be the spokesman for the agencies since he is the head of the senior organization involved.

I trust that this matter will be given the studied concern of all those involved.

Very truly yours,

Martin Luther King, Jr.

I HAVE TALKED TO STEPHEN CURRIER, JANE LEE EDDY AND MR. DE WIND ABOUT OUR TELEPHONE CONVERSATION, AND ALSO ABOUT THE LEAK IN "JET" MAGAZINE.

MR. DE WIND'S OPINION IS THAT WE STILL HAVE TO AWAIT THE IRS RULING. HE SAYS THAT HE BELIEVES THAT WILEY BLANTON SPOKE TO BURKE MARSHALL ABOUT SPEEDING UP THE PROCESSING LAST WEEK, AND HE WILL SPEAK AGAIN TO MITCHELL ROGOSIN, BUT IT IS STILL HIS OPINION THAT THE ANNOUNCEMENT SHOULD AWAIT IRS APPROVAL.

I KNOW THE PROBLEM YOU ARE UP AGAINST, BUT I DO THINK WE HAVE TO BE GUIDED BY MR. DE WIND'S ADVICE.

A united drive to increase voter registration in the South was announced today by the heads of five civil rights organizations.

Joining in the announcement were Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Whitney M. Young, Jr., Executive Director of the National Urban League; James Farmer, National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality; the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; and Charles McDew, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee. ~~The announcement was released by from~~

The five organizations stated that they would coordinate their programs in a greatly enlarged campaign. The drive, which will be non-partisan, will be launched immediately and will be conducted simultaneously on two planes. One effort will be directed at overcoming voter indifference and apathy. A second will be aimed at securing the registration of Negroes in those areas of the South where racial discrimination exists.

The five organizations said further that they would co-operate with the Voter Education Project, established by the Southern Regional Council, and directed by Mr. Wiley A. Branton.

In addition to the announcement and accompanying it, Messrs. Farmer, McDew, Wilkins, Young, and Dr. King issued a statement of principles which they said motivated and would guide the registration drive.

WHAT IS OUR AIM?

The agencies we represent have announced today their plans to campaign for a large increase in voter registration in the South. Each of our organizations is already working in this field. Each will now do more.

The United States strives to be a democracy. It falls short of being one when one-third of our adults do not or may not vote.

Voting in the South is low, even by our shamefully low national standards. One result is that unrepresentative men are chosen for local, state, and national offices. Another is that small electorates dominated by rural voters breed callous discrimination against city-dwellers, regardless of race, throughout the South.

An enlarged electorate is necessary if the South finally is to become a democracy, and the people of the South are to enjoy the dignity of members of a democracy. Civil rights will continue to be either denied or restricted. Until the Gordian knot of political privilege is cut, the South's preoccupation with race and racial prejudice will continue.

This generation of America will have shirked its historic summons unless, both at home and abroad, it gives strength and enrichment to freedom and free men. At home, our great unfinished business is the rescue of one-tenth of our people from prejudice and discrimination, and the rescue of America from the moral, economic, and political costs of racial injustice.

encouraged." The Project, Mr. Brunton said, would, to further its research, ~~allocate~~ give financial support to voter registration programs other groups & agencies, ~~if they proved~~ which it would then observe & evaluate. Only ~~if~~ programs which accord with the Project's research interest will be aided.

Mr. Brunton said the Project had already received pledges of cooperation from the NAACP — — —

In his Inaugural Address, the President told Americans to ask themselves what they can do for their country. We believe and we know that in working for the right of all to exercise the duties of citizenship we work in our country's service, when and where it needs us most.

The great discovery of America, the great tradition of America, is this: a people re-dedicates itself to old ideals by setting itself new purposes. From one generation to another, our country has renewed its vigor by releasing the energies of more of its people. This has been the American way.

In our time, America encounters its old ideals in the struggle to create equal opportunities for its Negro citizens. Our cause is the nation's.

We say this without false pride, yet with firm conviction. We say it without reference to injustices and indignities of the past. We say it with thought only of America's need for talents, for spiritual courage, for self-respect and the good opinion of free men everywhere. The past was America's dilemma. The future is its opportunity.

To fight for justice is, therefore, to fight for America. We are not deterred by those who complain that the struggle for Negro rights has broken down "communications between the races", or is endangering national unity in time of crisis. There can be in a democracy no real communication except among men and women of equal dignity and rights. There can be no national unity maintained on the quicksand of injustice.

(some lofty sentiment) — — — — , said Tom Wiley B Brantley, director of the Project, — — —

Prior to accepting his present position, Tom Brantley — — —

Tom Brantley said that the Project will work cooperatively with any responsible group ~~that~~ which carries on the registration program. "The ~~chief~~ largest group of non-voters in the South are Negroes, especially in the deep South. There will be no true democracy in the South until they become active citizens. ~~We want, however, that the South shows a need to~~ Voting participation of whites also is low, ~~+ we want~~ + need to be

Let us be clear about this. The times are too serious, the threat of Communist power and ideology too vicious, for America not to be true to itself, to its Constitution, to its old faith in the free and responsible individual.

Among the duties of citizenship, none is as great as that of serving the public by voting and holding office. This is a duty of all citizens, regardless of color.

We intend to work, and to work hard, for a wider acceptance and fulfillment of that duty. Whether the cause of non-voting be indifference, disillusion, ignorance, or oppression, we shall combat the cause.

We have no partisanship. We are, in this venture, neither Democrats nor Republicans. We shall concentrate our efforts in the South only because that is where the problems are most acute.

The Southern P C announced today that it will undertake ~~establishment~~ a special ~~project to~~ study of the causes of low voter registration in the South, & the means of overcoming them. The ~~study~~ Council has set up a separate office, which will be known as the V EP, to plan & carry out the work.

During a two year period, the Voter Education Project will collect & analyze data on southern voting pattern. ~~It will be particularly interested in studying the methods used to overcome~~ Voting Registration & voting participation have traditionally been lower in the South than other parts of the country. The particular interest of the Project will be a study of the most ~~success~~ effective methods of bringing more Southerners into voting participation.

Dear Mr. Thompson:

I am in receipt of a memorandum from Paul Rilling of the Southern Regional Council informing me of your interest in a coordinating voter registration effort in the New Orleans area.

We are now in the process of getting our Voter Education Project set up, but at this time we do not have the necessary clearance from Internal Revenue regarding our request for tax exemption and therefore we will be somewhat at a standstill until we get this ruling.

As you probably know, several major organisations will be working with us in our efforts to increase the number of registered voters in the South, and while we have not committed ourselves as to the role which each agency will play or the areas in which they will operate, I am confident that at least one or more of the cooperating agencies will be working in the New Orleans area. As soon as we feel that we are in a position to move forward with our project, we will see to it that the New Orleans situation is brought to the attention of the cooperating agencies to the end that immediate assistance can be given to your Coordinating Council.

FOR RELEASE: ALL PAPERS
THURSDAY,

Phone: 522-8764

The Voter Education Project, a new program to study the causes of low voter registration in the South, and to ascertain the most effective methods for increasing the southern electorate, was announced here today by the Southern Regional Council.

The Project, with headquarters in Atlanta, is headed by Wiley A. Branton, formerly of Pine Bluff, Arkansas. Mr. Branton has been in private law practice and has also been active in civil rights cases for a number of years.

The special interest of the Project, according to Mr. Branton, will be "to study the most effective methods of bringing more Southerners into voter participation. Over a two-year period we shall observe and analyze the voter registration programs of other agencies in order to collect our data. When necessary, we shall grant funds to other agencies to make possible programs which we believe will advance the study."

Mr. Branton pointed out that discussions had already been held with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League, the Congress of Racial Equality, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. "Each of these agencies," he said, "is now planning greatly enlarged registration programs in the South. These organizations have pledged their cooperation with our Project."

The Project will also work cooperatively with other responsible groups carrying on voter registration programs.

"The largest group of non-voters in the South," said Branton, "are Negroes, especially in the Deep South. There will be no true democracy in the South until they become active citizens. But voting participation of all Southerners is low, and needs to be encouraged. The Project will support, within the limits of its ability, any voter registration programs which accord with our research interest."

The Southern Regional Council reported also that the aims of the Voter Education Project have been endorsed by the Chairmen of the Democratic and Republican National Committees, as well as by a number of private organizations interested in a more democratic franchise. These endorsers include the American Friends Service Committee, the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress, the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, the National Council of the Churches of Christ, and the Negro American Labor Council.

The Southern Regional Council is an organization of white and Negro Southerners formed in 1944 to advance "equal opportunity for all the South's people."

- To increase Negro participation in the main stream of American politics.

Pertinent Information:

The NAACP's Voter Registration Committee's program covers the entire country. However, for obvious reasons, the Committee's work is concentrated in the South.

The Washington Bureau, along with its other functions, acts as our clearing house for the various problems involving the denial of voting rights to Negroes. This Bureau also publishes the voting records of our United States Senators and Representatives.

Results:

The impact of the NAACP's Crusade for Voters, which began in 1909, can best be gained from impartial newspaper and other periodical reports. Mr. Paul Duke, in an article in the Wall Street Journal, JUNE 12, 1962, reveals the impact of the Negro vote in the South. Since we are concentrating our efforts in the South, we give you this article on the inside page as our convention report.

Courting Negroes

Politicians in South Step Up Efforts to Win Votes of Growing Force

Some Whites Soften Line On Segregation; Negroes Are Seeking More Offices

Impact on Southern Politics

By PAUL DUKE
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

RICHMOND, Va. — Here in this long-ago capital of the Confederacy, a majority of the 25 candidates for the city council in today's municipal election are openly supporting an anti-discrimination clause recently added to the local government charter. The provision is designed to assure Negroes of fair and equal treatment in the hiring of city employes.

In Memphis, Tenn., college professor Ross Pritchart is vigorously seeking the Democratic nomination for Congress on a platform that includes a civil rights plank. Young Mr. Pritchart, who hopes to sidetrack veteran Rep. Clifford Davis, advocates stepped-up Federal action if local authorities don't move more swiftly to erase racial barriers.

In Atlanta, Georgia's Republican leaders trumpeted with considerable fanfare a special invitation extended to Negroes to participate in a recent GOP workshop conference. Their aim: To contrast the party's open-door policy with a previous Democratic dinner at which Negroes were barred.

These events herald a significant trend slowly spreading in the South. As Negroes by the thousands sign up to vote, their power at the polls is assuming unprecedented importance. And white politicians are starting to court the Dixie Negro electorate as never before—quite openly in some cases.

Some Unusual Changes

Politicians' preparation for the day of mass Negro voting is bringing some strange changes, not all of them out in the open. Veteran politicians who have ridden the racial issue for years are taking a softer line on segregation and even quietly trying to build Negro machines. Georgia's Sen. Herman Talmadge has moved to smooth relations with Negro leaders and he assures them his office door is always open. Six Southern Senators including Louisiana's Sen. Russell Long, voted this year for a Constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax.

"The white man is coming on the run for our vote now because he knows it may mean the difference between winning and losing," claims a Negro voting-drive leader in Virginia. Observes a Southern Democratic chieftain: "The days when you could sneak down into shantytown and buy most of the Negro vote are gone. You've got to deliver on issues now."

While present efforts to court the South's Negro voters often amount to little more than a friendly gesture, they may well be the prelude to an intensive campaign whenever Negro voting becomes really heavy in Dixie. Such a prospect bodes vast political changes for the South in years to come. At the least, the outlook is for a fading away of the segregation issue as more and more candidates cater to Negro demands; at the most, the end could come for the conservative Democratic leadership which has long dominated the South.

Growing Impact at Polls

In any event, the swelling tide of Negro votes already is playing an increasingly crucial part in elections in the 11 states of the old Confederacy. It may even decide the victor in today's Democratic Senatorial primary in South Carolina between moderate Sen. Olin Johnston and conservative Gov. Ernest Hollings. Johnston supporters are counting on substantial backing from the state's 80,000 Negro voters and this could be the difference in a close contest; Negro support gave President Kennedy his 9,561-vote victory over Richard Nixon in the Palmetto State in 1960.

Similarly, the votes of a majority of Georgia's 185,000 qualified Negro voters could give the edge to moderate Democrat Carl Sanders in his September gubernatorial primary with diehard segregationist ex-Gov. Marvin Griffin now that the state's famed county voting system has been discarded and rural domination of Democraic primary balloting has ended. For the same reason, the re-election bid of ultra-conservative Democratic Rep. James C. Davis of Atlanta may be doomed.

But Negroes no longer are content just to elect whites. They also are using their growing ballot-box power to gain office for themselves. Though these office-holders are still a tiny minority, Negroes are winning more seats on local governing bodies, school boards, planning commissions and similar units, either through elections or by appointment from white officials. A Negro serves on the North Carolina State Welfare Board. Six Negroes, the first of their race, won election to the 106-man Birmingham, Ala., Democratic Executive Committee last month. And in Mississippi, there were two Negro candidates for Congress in last week's Democratic primaries; though defeated, they were the first to try since Reconstruction Days.

Not only do these developments reflect a growing acuity for politics, but they also testify to the success of the Negro voting registration drives now under way across the Southland. While Negroes still represent only 20% of the voting-age population in the 11 states, their registration is increasing faster than white registration. More than 100,000 Negroes have been signed up in the last year alone and there are now about 1.5 million on the poll books. The whites, with some 13 million voters, still constitute a top-heavy majority of course.

Voting Barriers Crumble

Long-standing barriers devised to discourage Negro voting are beginning to crumble before Uncle Sam's legal offensives. The Justice Department has brought 27 cases designed to enfranchise Negroes under civil rights laws enacted in 1957 and 1960. In Haywood County, Tenn., where Negroes make up 61% of the population, no Negroes had voted before 1960; now 2,000 are on the rolls. In Bullock County, Ala., 800 have been signed up since the Justice Department got an injunction last fall to force registration; only five had been registered before then.

A far-reaching by-product of this parade to the polls may be a spread of the two-party system all through the South and a major regrouping of Dixie's political forces.

Assuming that Southern Negroes cling to their traditional Democratic ties and that Democratic politicians cater increasingly to them, disgruntled conservatives might well flee in droves to the Republican party, which already harvests a sizable vote from conservative Southern Democrats in Presidential elections. The upshot: A new liberal-controlled Democratic Party comprised chiefly of Negroes, blue-collar workers, small farmers and intellectuals; and an enlarged conservative-run Republican Party made up of businessmen, white-collar workers, large farmers and descendants of the old Southern aristocracy.

"The Harry Byrd Democrat is a goner," despairs a Virginia conservative Democratic Congressman. "We're headed into an era when the South will be run by either Tower-type Republicans or Humphrey-type Democrats." The Tower he refers to is the conservative young Texan elected last year as his state's first GOP Senator since Reconstruction; the Humphrey is the liberal Minnesotan, an ardent civil rights advocate, who is the Senate Democratic Whip.

Generally speaking, the Southern Negro vote has traditionally gone to the Democratic candidate for President in the national elections and to the "least conservative" Democratic candidate in local and state races. Thus, in Alabama's May 29 primary for governor, the 66,000 Negro vote went solid for state senator Ryan deGraffenried, who firmly proclaimed a belief in segregation and yet was moderate when compared with the outspoken racism of winning candidate George Wallace.

Kinship With Democrats

Though Republican leaders in Georgia, Virginia and a few other states are soliciting Negro support, chances are Democrats will go right on being a big beneficiary. Most Negroes feel a closer kinship with the Democratic Party because of its sponsorship of welfare legislation and through inheritance. And as long as Negroes remain at the bottom of the economic scale, they're likely to vote Democratic.

But the new, more demanding breed of Southern Negro voter is looking for a new breed of candidate to support. Instead of lining up behind men whose major qualification is that they soft-pedal the segregation theme, Negroes are searching for candidates who'll stand up for the things they desire—more laws against discrimination, better jobs for their race and increased unemployment compensation. This burgeoning electorate is beginning to encourage Southern liberals and moderates to seek office in greater numbers.

In time, the Negro vote, plus that of union labor forces, could be powerful enough to permit liberal Democratic factions to wrest control from the conservative governors, Congressmen and state leaders who hold sway in most of Dixie. "An alliance between Negroes and labor is only natural because both want a better standard of living," contends a Southern AFL-CIO official.

If truly effective, such an alliance could mean the ouster of such vocal segregationist Congressmen as Alabama's George Andrews, Mississippi's Jamie Whitten and Virginia's Watkins Abbitt. Candidates such as Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett, who rode into office waving the flag of white supremacy, would stand less hope of landing Democratic nomination. And there probably would be some Negroes elected to state legislatures and even to Congress from heavily Negro areas. Indeed, Negro leaders already have launched a drive to capture Rep. Abbitt's black belt district of Southern Virginia in 1964.

"It's inevitable that Negroes will take over some of the counties in our state," is the frank admission of an Alabama Congressman.

Powerful Force in Richmond

While any major regrouping may be years away, the Negro vote already is bringing significant changes. Consider what's happened in Richmond, a stronghold of conservatism and capital of a state which only a few years ago endeavored unsuccessfully to chart a "massive resistance" course to school integration. The well-organized Negro electorate of 14,000, constituting roughly 25% of total vote enrollment, has become the most powerful single force in city elections; seven of the nine candidates endorsed by the Negro-operated Crusade for Voters won city council seats two years ago. Result: A scramble for Crusade backing this year.

In Memphis, where young Professor Pritchart is endorsing civil rights laws, he is given some chance of winning his Congressional race; at any rate Congressman Davis is running scared in their battle for the Shelby County district. The reason is clear: 35,000 Negro votes and 15,000 labor votes that Mr. Pritchart is expected to get could provide a base for possible upset of the conservative incumbent.

For the most part, though, Southern candidates are courting Negroes more subtly, to avoid the wrath of their white followers. Thus, the three candidates vying for the gubernatorial nomination in Tennessee's Democratic primary Aug. 2 have appeared at Negro rallies, but have steered clear of promises and commitments. In a recent Democratic primary tiff for a North Carolina House seat, candidate John P. Kennedy, (no relative of the President) cited the endorsement of a prominent Charlotte Negro in his campaign literature—a way of pleasing the Negroes without offending many whites. Mr. Kennedy came within an eyelash of upsetting conservative Rep. Paul Kitchin, thanks largely to overwhelming Negro backing.

Segregation Issue Abates

While the segregation issue continues to roil Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, it has abated nearly everywhere else. Two race-baiting candidates were snowed under last month in bids for Democratic Congressional nomination in two new Florida districts. The issue has been dormant in the Johnston-Hollings tiff and even Orval Faubus, darling of the diehards, has avoided it thus far in his try for a fifth trip to the Arkansas' governor's mansion.

To be sure, many candidates still profess their belief in segregation, but their statements frequently are more for "the record" than to corral votes. The Negro vote is not yet so important that politicians can overlook the preference of white constituents for the South's traditional ways. Hence, Dixie Senators filibustered to death a few weeks ago a bill designed to prevent abuse of literacy tests as a requirement for voting.

Despite the steady increase in Negro registration, only about 28% of those of voting age are registered in the 11 Southern states; 56% of eligible whites are signed up. While there have been few reports of voter discrimination in Virginia, Florida, North Carolina and Texas, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other groups complain that arbitrary administration of voting laws and various restrictions still hinder the registration drive in many small towns and rural areas.

The outlawing of the NAACP by state law is keeping vote-recruiting to a minimum in Alabama. Mississippi, with the highest percentage of Negro residents of any state and the lowest percentage of registrants, recently passed a series of laws to cut down the number of applicants; one act would bar any person who is not of "good moral character," another specifies that a person's intention to register must be announced in a newspaper before it can be considered.

Bloc Voting--An Evil Or Wisdom?

"MUCH OF the gratuitous advice being offered to Norfolk's Negro citizens about "bloc voting" is tainted and ought to be carefully scrutinized before it is accepted.

It is a natural and instinctive thing for people to be influenced by "selfish" considerations, in voting as in other matters. Why, then, are some people so disturbed when Negroes vote for their basic interests?

These advisers tell the Negro to forget that he is a Negro and vote like a full-fledged, first-class member of the American society. Yet they will not treat him like a first-class citizen, nor accord him the elemental rights and privileges readily granted all other elements of the population, including enemy aliens of a few years ago. Paradoxically, a Russian spy in this country for the purpose of sabotaging our defense establishment can enjoy privileges which American Negroes would be thrown in jail for if they attempted to exercise them in many parts of these United States, including Virginia, and specifically, the City of Norfolk.

As long as there are constitutional and human rights denied to the Negro alone he will continue to exert whatever leverage he can command to gain those rights. And if solidifying his political strength at the polls will help bring this about, that will be done, call it "bloc voting" or whatever you like.

MOST GROUPS having special interests do some "bloc voting" to achieve their goals. Prohibitionists vote solidly against candidates and legislation likely to ease the flow of alcoholic beverages.

Organized labor is urged, and usually can be counted upon, to vote en bloc whenever any interest of the working man is threatened.

Doctors line up solidly at the behest of their American Medical Association leaders against any legislation they consider "socialized medicine."

No group utilizes the technique of "bloc voting" more freely—nor more effectively — than Southern politicians. Any time the issue is civil rights, or even human rights, the Congressmen and Senators from the South form an impenetrable, solid bloc and vote with a unanimity that makes Negro "bloc voting" look like a house divided.

In the Senate they even halt the legislative business of the nation for weeks while demonstrating their solidarity in a disgraceful filibuster for which they are hardly chastised by the moralists who see so much evil in "bloc voting" when done by Negroes."

"WHAT THE critics of "bloc voting" — both the colored and the white critics — have failed to comprehend is that Negro voters, like those in other special interest groups, will instinctively cast their ballots in such a way as to gain the objectives they consider most important to them.

There will come a day, we are sure, when Negro Americans will be able to act, and think, and vote just like any other Americans, and the GUIDE will welcome that day. But as long as Negroes are not permitted to act and think and be like other Americans, they will go on protesting at the polling places, and if those protests happen to displease the opposition because they resemble "bloc voting," that's just too bad, because they are going to continue, notwithstanding the pained and righteous viewing - with - alarm by both our white and our colored advisors."

Dear Mr. Branton:

I am currently working on the editing of a pamphlet on Negro voting in the South and the student's role for Students for a Democratic. SDS, you'll remeber perhaps, is the student department of the League for Industrial Democracy , the student group for which Tom was working last year. Enclosed you will find an outline of the pamphlet. We would like you or your assistant to do the piece on the Voter Education Project.

We're hoping to distribute the pamphlet in the spring through various national student groups (the Y's, church groups, the Northern Student Movement, SNCC, etc.) and try to reach students of several varieties: those who know little of the South or civil rights, but could be educated to a concern; those who are interested, but have no knowledge of what is being done and need a grasp of the implications of political change in the South; those who are active outside the South and might be persuaded to raise money, set up projects, recruit workers for summer projects; those who are active in the South and could use a survey of activities of the past year. For all of these the pamphlet will attempt to give facts and put civil rights in a broader political context.

I think the inclusion of the Voter Education Project would give an indication of the sort of adult cooperation and action that is taking place and some insight into the necissity of organization and coordination.

I'm hoping the keep the pamphlet concise, since students who are not already involved will be unlikely to read a long document. Thus we'd like about 2-3 pages (single space typewritten) from you which would deal with or take off from the questions on the outline. Since we're looking toward having the booklet printed by late January, we'd want your copy by December 14.

Since the essay is brief, you might find that you have some explanatory material on the VEP already which would serve as a basis for this writing. We do hope you can find the time for it in what I know is a crowded schedule. Hope to hear from you soon.

Dear Mrs. Hayden: SDS - 715 Arch St. Ann Arbor, Michigan

Wiley asked me to get together the little exposition you requested. Because of my natural slothfulness I've had to squeeze it in between two trips. I like to think the rush accounts for the inadequacies of the enclosed copy. Doubtless others would be less generous.

The primitiveness of the typing is accounted for by the fact that I wanted to get this in the mail to you tonite, and Mrs. Levine, our secretary, had to leave before I finished composing it. I trust your editorial patience will not be too severely tried by the numerous errors and miscalculations, split infinitives, etc. Ordinarily I could depend upon Mrs. Levine to eliminate such, but now I shall have to place that burden upon you.

The very best of the season's greetings and please be sure we receive a copy of your publication.

Very truly yours

THE VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

The registration of Negro voters in the South has, for years, been the concern of various civil rights organizations and a great many local groups. The NAACP has had a continuing program of Negro registration through its various branches. The Southern Christian Leadership Conference has, more recently, devoted a considerabpe effort to voter registration. CORE and SNCC have bent an increasing proportion of their efforts toward voter registration. The National Urban League, in the cities of the South where it is appropriately organizaed, has likewise worked at increasing Negro registration.

Hardly a community of any size exists in the South where voter registration has not been an issue of some magnitude among Negroes in recent years. In many communities local leaders, perhaps incidentally connected with the national civil rights organizations, have undertaken to stimulate Negro voter registration, more or less on their own.

The Voter Education Project was conceived for the purpose of brining some order into these widely varied efforts: developing a systematic body of information about what is being done, how effective present efforts are, and howsuch efforts can be made more effective.

VEP is a project of the Southern Regional Council. SRC has received grants amounting to some $450,000 from various foundations to conduct the Voter Education Project.

VEP operates as a research entity of the Southern Regional Council, specifically designed to gather information about voter registration in the South. VEP invites proposals from organizations interested in conducting voter eduction programs. When a proposal is accepted, VEP allocates a specific amount of money on the basis of a detailed budget which is submitted with the proposal. VEP makes no attempt to tell participating organizations how to conduct a voter education program, though the viability of the techniques outlined in the proposal is a consideration in determining whether the grant will be made.

Once the grant is made, the participating organizations report on their expedditures and their performance according to standard reporting systems developed by the Voter Education Project staff. Some programs are designed on a short-term basis on the assumption that a concentrated drive will produce the best results. Other programs are designed on a long-term basis on the theory that in a given area an enormous amount of groundwork must be laid before actual registration attempts can be made. The short-term programs usually take place in urban areas where resistance to Negro registration is minimal. The long-term programs are ordinarily used in areas of maximum resistance, where socio-economic and political conditions have precluded effective political organization in the Negro community.

Thus, VEP is developing a systematic body of data about the political attitudes and perceptions of rural and urban Negroes in the South, and about what measures are effective in bringing those political perceptions and attitudes to the point where effective demands can be made upon our political institutions to alleviate the deprivations under which southern Negroes presently labor.

VEP began its operations in May of 1962, and proposes to continue for a minimum of two years. At the date of this writing voter education projects have been completed, or were in progress, in representative rural and urban areas of the eleven states of the old confederacy. Thus far, VEP-supported programs have been directly responsible for some 40,000 new Negro registered voters in the South. Too, VEP support, in many communities, has provided a context within which Negro leadership could develop in a way that has not been possible in the past. It would be a mistake to consider these results as incidental benefits of a research program. The fact is that VEP's mission is to provide the funds which are essential for the production of such results andthen to compile a body of information which will explain either why the results were obtained, or why they were not.

The long-term programs are ordinarily used in areas of maximum resistance, where socio-economic and political conditions have precluded effective political organization in the Negro community.

Thus, VEP is developing a systematic body of data about the political attitudes and perceptions of rural and urban Negroes in the South, and about what measures can be taken to bring those political perceptions and attitudes to the point where effective demands can be made upon our political institutions to alleviate the deprivations under which southern Negroes presently labor. # VEP began its operations in May of 1962, and prposed to continue for a minimum of two years. At the date of this writing, voter education projects have been completed, or were in progress, in representative rual and urban areas of the eleven states of the old confederacy. Thus far, VEP-supported programs have been directly responsible for some 40,000 new Negro registered voters in the South. Too, VEP support, in many communities, has provided a context within which Negro leadership could develop in a way that has not been possible in the past. It would be a mistake to consider these results as incidental benefits of a research program. The fact is that VEP's mission is to provide the funds which are essential for the production of such results and then to compile a body of information which will explain either why the results were obtained or why they were not.

~~The following statement was released today by Wiley A Branton, Director of the Voter Education Project:~~

"On the night of February 28, 1963 in LeFlore County, Mississippi, white men, from their moving car, shot and seriously wounded a young Negro registration worker. The victim was James Travis, ~~(identification) former student at Tougaloo~~ of Jackson, Mississippi.

This attack, with intent to kill, was made by men who had been observed throughout the evening watching a building in Greenwood where registration workers were meeting.

"After the meeting, Travis, Robert Moses, Director of the Council of Federated Organizations, and Randolph Blackwell, ~~the~~ Field Director of our Voter Education Project, drove from Greenwood down U.S. Highway 82 ~~toward Jackson~~. Some miles outside Greenwood the attackers' car drove along side and opened rifle or pistol fire. Fortunately, only Travis was wounded.

"Travis was returned to a hospital in Greenwood. The local police and the Department of Justice were promptly notified. On March 1, Travis was moved to a hospital in Jackson.

"This is but the latest of brutal attacks in Mississippi, Southwest Georgia, and other areas of the South against registration workers, and wouldbe Negro voters. These registration workers are people cooperating with the Voter Education Project. This Project, which has the endorsement of the chairmen both of the Democratic and Republican National Committees, is a large scale effort to find the best ways of increasing the electorate in the South, in order to bring into participation in American democracy citizens who have not before exercised, or been allowed to exercise, their responsibilities. In most areas of the South, work carried on in cooperation with the Project has been without disturbance, and in some cases even welcomed by local authorities.

"But in certain outlaw communities registration workers have been constantly harassed and put in danger of life. ~~There~~ Negroes seeking ~~asking~~ to register have been cruelly treated.

"These are intolerable conditions to expose people to, and ~~this~~ they cannot be allowed to continued. Accordingly, there is a need to establish once and for all that in this land people do not have to be afraid to be free.

We are, therefore, announcing that the full ~~every~~ resources of the agencies cooperating with us in the Voter Education Project will be immediately concentrated in LeFlore County, Mississippi. Mr. Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Mr. James Foreman of the Student nonviolent ~~Non-Violent~~ Coordinating Committee, and Mr. James Farmer of the Congress of Racial Equality have agreed with us today to put all necessary support ~~from their agencies~~ at once into a concerted campaign to get every qualified Negro in LeFlore County registered to vote if he or she has any desire to do so.

Based on the unhappy experience of recent months, we must anticipate that this drive will be met by harassment and violence. We have, therefore, advised the Governor of Mississippi of our plans, and have asked that the State provide protection. We have also notified the Attorney General of the United States that this campaign will be undertaken. We have called to his attention past experiences. We have requested that federal protection be provided ~~as soon as any obstacles obstructions are~~ immediately to assure the personal safety of those persons working in voter registration or who seek the right to vote encountered. Voting is a federal right, ~~and~~ when ~~it is~~ prevented by community lawlessness, the United States Government has an obligation not only to punish that lawlessness, but to ~~prevent~~ put it down.

"The state of Mississippi has repeatedly thrown down a gauntlet at the feet of would-be Negro voters, not only by the discriminatory practices of the registrars, but also by economic pressures, threats, coercion, physical violence, and even death to Negroes seeking the right to vote. Dear Mr. Sears:

Mr. Branton wrote the attached letter to Mr. Wood on June 5, requesting me to send a carbon copy to you. I inadvertently left off this direction and failed to send a copy to you. I am correcting this error by sending the attached and hope this has not inconvenienced you in any way.

Dear Jim:

My children have the habit of setting our radio-alarm clock for WAOK every morning and I, therefore, hear most of your editorials. I have found the majority of them to be quite timely, thought-provoking and constructive. On one occasion, while attending a social function, I was very argumentative in defending your editorials which were under attack.

On May 29, I must admit that I was completely shocked by your editorial regarding a national voter registration program as your statements were entirely erroneous and misleading. As soon as I reached my office I taped the editorial so as to be certain that I had not misinterpreted it.

In mentioning the new "national voter registration program" you stated that "this says in effect that the voter registration program headed by the Southern Regional Council, including SCLC, SNCC, CORE and the NAACP, has not delivered the goods." Every news report regarding the recently announced national voter registration program states that it is just that -- a national registration program which will encompass the entire United States; whereas the SRC program is restricted to the 11 southern states.

The Voter Education Project of SRC had the endorsement of the chairmen of both the Republican and the Democratic National Committees from its inception and we are happy to report that we still enjoy that endorsement. You must remember that VEP is a non-partisan effort engaged primarily into research into the causes for low registration and into the methods and techniques which can be used to increase registration. Even though we are engaged primarily in research and have been in business for only one year , our program has resulted in an increase of more than 115,000 new voters in the South. Any program by the Kennedy Administration in registration would obviously be a partisan effort. I can tell you of my certain knowledge, based on conversations with national officials of the Democratic party that they are impressed with the success of our program.

You then say that "Kennedy-led money funelled through foundations ran into road blocks." The Kennedys have not given any money to the Voter Education Project and they were not responsible for any of the money which we have thus far received. But regardless of the source of the money for our program, we have not run into any road blocks which we did not know to be in existence before we started and which would have been present regardless of the organization conducting a registration drive or the methods being used.

You then imply that we have been working on the theory that everything in the Negro community is being done through ministers and churches and you then state that this "has proved to be a flop." One would have only to look at the listing of the five national participating agencies to readily determine which ones are probably working through ministers and churches. These organizations are SCLC, SNCC, CORE, NAACP (all mentioned by you) and the National Urban League. In addition to these five major participating agencies we have conducted numerous programs strictly through local organizations and at the grass roots level. Here in Atlanta we are working through the All Citizens Registration Committee with Mr. Jesse Hill and Dr. C. A. Bacote, serving as co-chairmen. Two of our most successful programs are now going on in Macon and Savannah. In Macon we work through the Bibb County Coordinating Committee which is being directed by Mr. William Randall. In Savannah we work through the Southeastern Georgia Crusade for Voters, headed by Mr. Hosea Williams. I could give you instances of similar situations in just about every one of the eleven states where we are working.

The first annual report of the Voter Education Project has just been prepared but has not yet been released and only those working closely with the project or getting information from our office would be in a position to know what we have done during this first year. You have made no inquiry of our office and I, therefore, am surprised and disappointed that such misleading statements would have been made by you or even carried by WAOK. We maintain a policy in this office of making an effort to see and talk with anyone who is interested in what we are doing here at VEP and that policy and its implied invitation is extended to you and to WAOK at all times.

Mr. J. H. Calhoun

Dear John:

As promised, here is a copy of the WAOK Editorial for Wednesday, May 29. The content is a matter of opinion. It was written by Jim Wood. I respect your opinion that it was not based on the facts of the matter, and offer to you the use of time on WAOK to state your position. This offer may be extended through you to any qualified individual or group that might be interested in this or any other editorial heard on WAOK.

WAOK is firm in our concept that the press (including radio and TV news) is not obligated to gather all facts. Not even the largest newspaper in the world could afford to do this. We do what we can, faced with a changing world and a natural reluctance on the part of many people to divulge facts and opinions.

In a talk with Jim Wood, he emphasized that he had no desire to question the integrity and good-will of any individual.

Sincerely,

Zenas Sears

WAOK EDITORIAL WED MAY 29 (63)

The Kennedy administration has decided to launch a national voter registration program! This says in effect that the voter registration program headed by the Southern Regional Council, including SCLC, SNCC, CORE and the NAACP has not delivered the goods. Kennedy-led money funneled through foundations ran into roadblocks. Working ~~through~~ on the theory that everything in the Negro community can be done through ministers and churches has proved to be a flop. It takes more than pulpit-pounding and mass meetings mixed with political money to get mass voter registration in the South. When a way can be found to protect a man's job, his family, his proterty and his life from the segregationists bomb and sniper's rifle. . . then voter registration and a lot of other things will interest the little man.

WAOK EDITORIAL WED MAY 29 (63) 2

It is the editorial opinion of radio station WAOK that the Kennedys and everybody else had better face a fact of life. . . . Joe Blow, the little black man spat on, kicked, raped, murdered, lynched, his homes bombed and burned, his job taken away by race haters and the Ku Klux Klan. He has been exploited by white as well as so-called black leaders including some ministers. . he is poor and ignorant, without high-powered friends or big money. So now they need him and they say get registered and vote. Well, it aint like that! Some new lessons will be learned and [redacted], Jo Blow will be teaching!

Dear Jim:

Thank you for your letter of June 6 in which you explain your participation in discussions when the Voter Education Project was first being considered. It is apparent that you have been completely out of touch with the operations of VEP as it was finally set up and that you perhaps have been influenced by matters raised in the earlier discussions. It also seems apparent to me that many of your impressions of how VEP works have come from meetings which you may have had with SCLC rather than meetings where all of the agencies were reppesented.

I would like very much to know who told you "the results of the present (SRC) program is not producing the expected results." I am even more concerned about the interest which the person making the statement to you might have in the outcome of VEP and his knowledge of any facts concerning the results which have been achieved.

I appreciate your willingness to make any public statement which I feel should be made but I have no desire that any remarks be made on the subject. My purpose in writing was prompted by my concern over your having made what I regard as unfounded charges against VEP rather than any desire for any retraction or further comment.

I am enclosing a copy of our annual report as you requested. I think you should be cautioned that this report was prepared primarily to satisfy the requirements of the Internal Revenue Service and it does not reflect the vast quantity of data, statistics and other information which we have compiled.

Dear Wiley:

Thank you very much for your defense of my editorials. I fully respect your opinions and am especially pleased because of this.

When the present SRC Voter Registration Project was being formed and the first draft was put together, I was part of many meetings both here in Atlanta and in Washington, D.C. which dealt with planning. During an extended conversation with officials of the Justice Department about certain elements involving registration techniques, I asked the question whether basic motivation for the plan was to build a civil rights "image" to bolster (then) sagging Southern support by strengthening Northern industrial voters, or to actually register large numbers of Negroes in the South. I was at that time told their purpose was "to get Southern Negroes to register." I then questioned more strongly techniques, saying, "the problem of removing the fear hanging over Negro communities would first have to be solved before any except "soft" results would be obtained in the two year period the administration had set as its immediate goal." The basic plan was to use ministers and churches primarily, and aim at both urban and rural voter pools. It was their opinion that enough emotional momentum could be built up this way to over-ride group fears. Their feeling was very strong that the moral image of the church could do the job. I stated very firmly, my feeling, that this could not be done.

In later talks, when financing was under discussion, I was told there would be enough money "influenced by the Kennedys" to provide more than enough to keep the wheels turning. When I raised the question of political involvement, and what I knew to be Martin's (Dr. King, Jr.) objection because of possible partisan labels on SCLC, it was said, "that will be taken care of by channeling funds through two foundations."

Recently, prior to public announcements of the Democratic Party's national voter registration drive, I was in conversation with officials of the Justice Department and asked the question, "why a national program that would include the South?" I was told, "the results of the present (SRC) program is not producing the expected results." During further conversation it was mentioned that in addition to the results of the present program not being as effective as was estimated, (there was no indication of dissatisfaction with conduct of the program) it was then decided that a national program would be launched. Party strategy and changes in political conditions prompted the decision for a national program.

Wiley, I have been discussing private conversations with Government Officials and civilians, and since they are not aware of this letter, I have purposely not mentioned names. If it should become necessary to do so, I will be happy to do it after having given notice to the persons involved. During conversation I had with foundation officials after the plan was initiated, there was never any mention on my part or theirs, of politics or money.

I would be very happy to receive a copy of your first annual report when it is made available to the public. I have at no time felt your program was a failure from the standpoint of voter education. My whole point of view was taken from the administration's estimate of the results expected as revealed to me in conversations. The editorial clearly says this in fundamental terms. I will be happy to make any public statement you feel should be made by me or you, and at your convenience. My interest in voter registration is sincere and abiding, and no one could be more concerned about mass voter registration of both Negroes and Whites.

Sincerely yours,

James R. Wood

JOHNSON'S CIVIL RIGHTS STRATEGY: President Johnson and his Congressional strategists have settled on tactics for pushing through civil rights legislation. They forecast that, with strong help from the GOP, the Administration bill will pass the House almost intact about mid-February, with Senate consideration to come shortly after the Republicans return from their Lincoln Day speeches. In the Senate: After two or three weeks, at most, of Southern filibuster during which sessions will be gradually lengthened, an attempt will be made to shut off the talkathon with a cloture resolution. If this fails, as most Congressional insiders expect, the Senate will go into round-the-clock sessions, with another cloture move to be made in a few days. Senate leaders are optimistic that this mixture of tactics will succeed in bringing the rights bill to a vote by Easter. They don't believe most of the Southerners want a really long filibuster. (One Congressional leader said last week that most Senators were sick of the civil rights issue and wanted to dispose of it quickly.) Most importantly, the Southerners want cotton legislation and the Midwesterners want a wheat bill before spring planting. But the leadership will hold these bills off the Senate floor until after disposal of civil rights.

DEMOCRATS' STAKE IN ATLANTA: Democratic strategists believe the party has much to fear from Atlanta's violent Negro demonstrations. They say the turning away from strict nonviolence in Atlanta (Martin Luther King's headquarters of nonviolence) could foreshadow a wave of nationwide Negro demonstrations. If such demonstrations are suppressed by Southern Democratic governors and get the hands-off treatment from President Johnson--both of which are likely--the strategists fear Negro voters could turn against the Democrats this fall. The intensity of this concern comes from the fact that the Negro voter registration drive in the South has been more successful than its sponsors had dreamed of and has just hit the 1,750,000 figure. (This is the goal that had been set last fall for next November.) Now the various Negro organizations sponsoring the drive plan to add another 300,000 registrants by election time. Significance for the Democrats is that experts say over 90 per cent of these voters will be Democratic, and the largest numbers have been signed up in Florida, Tennessee, North and South Carolina

ARMY-AIR FORCE GAME: The Army and the Air Force are fighting again--this time over planes. The Air Force is kicking about the rapid expansion of the Army's air arm, which now has about 6,000 planes and helicopters. The Army says it needs them to provide support for its ground forces as well as lift capacity for strike troops, such as those in South Vietnam. Army brass feels that fast-changing tactical situations in the field can't wait for air support requests to go up the Army chain of command to a joint staff and for "go" orders to come down again through equally long Air Force channels. So far, despite the Air Force's powerful Congressional lobby and excellent press, it looks like the Army is winning this game of military marbles. The Army's only major loss has been $41.7 million earmarked for its all-purpose Caribou transport. The Air Force is losing its B-52's and B-58's, which will be gradually phased out in exchange for a much smaller number of B-70's. Even SAC's formerly "vital" fleet of over 1,000 B-47's is giving way to the ICBM. Thousands of highly trained pilots face technological unemployment as the Air Force moves further and further under ground.

MACHINES REPLACE MACHINES: Is automation itself becoming the newest victim of automation? More and more, makers of office equipment are finding themselves in the same boat as the manpower their machines have replaced. Case in point: Dictating machines. They automated away the value of a secretary's shorthand skill and now they, in turn, are being automated away in many large firms by central dictation systems hooked into the firm's internal telephone lines. Manufacturers of the small machines are worried; some big customers who previously had bought hundreds now take only a dozen or so for their very top executives. The machine-makers' only countermove so far has been to offer surveys purporting to show that even the junior-grade executive needs his very own secre---oops, dictating machine.

AN ECONOMY ROCKET: The world's first under-developed rocket for under-developed countries had successful test-firings last week in Cuxhaven, Germany. These 10-foot-long rockets are the brain-child of Richard Stengler, associated with the development of the V-2 rocket and currently chairman of the newly-founded Weapon and Air Armament Company of Hamburg. Stengler's aim is to sell these weapons to countries that can't afford their own rocket projects, but would like the international status that comes with any kind of missile. Stengler sees his best market in the Afro-Asian countries and will sell the rockets ready-to-fire for around $300 each. They rise to a height of about 20 miles and travel up to 10 miles (useful for border skirmishes). The German government, embarrassed by Stengler's scheme, has said it will not grant export licenses for military weapons. But Stengler can get around this by exporting these mini-rockets as scientific equipment. Jordan and Saudi Arabia have so far shown some interest. The Jordanians say the payload isn't big enough for them, but might do for their Weather Bureau. Well, that's what they say, anyway.

The right to vote is the No. 1 right.

To secure this right for Negro Americans in whatever state they may live is the No. 1 project of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

To this end, the NAACP has started a nationwide drive to get more Negroes on the voters list, particularly in the southern states where some people try to keep Negroes from voting.

As a result, colored citizens in that region have no representation in government, no voice in making or carrying out the laws under which they must live, and no say as to how their tax money is spent.

This taxation without representation can be ended only by your action. It is easy if you really want to take part in elections.

You have to want to vote and be ready and willing to make every effort to get on the voters list.

Your own registration should be your No. 1 project.

In order to become a first-class voting American you should:

1. Know your rights under the United States Constitution and the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960.

2. Know what you have to do to register in your state.
   a. Basic personal information required—age, address, occupation, how long you have lived in the state;
   b. Literacy and interpretation tests;
   c. Time and place for payment of poll tax (where required); for registration; and for primary and general elections.

3. Prepare to take the tests.
   a. Study the required questions; know the U.S. and your state Constitutions; and learn the basic facts about the government of your city, county and state.

4. Encourage your friends, relatives and others to register.
   a. Discuss registration and voting at meetings you attend—church, club, fraternal, labor union, professional society, or business league.
   b. Talk to your neighbors about the need to register.

5. Share your knowledge with others.

6. Refuse to be discouraged or turned down by local election officials.

You cannot vote unless you are registered. Your first step is to get your name on the list of voters. For information on HOW and WHERE to get your name on the voters list in your community ask:

1. Your local NAACP branch
2. Your minister
3. Heads of your fraternal, social, trade union and civic organizations

The free ballot box is the symbol of democracy. It provides a key to a society of freedom, justice and security. At the ballot box, as before the bar of justice, every citizen is equal. Beyond the ballot box lies the Promised Land with opportunities for individual and group advancement.

Voting . . .

Makes it possible for you to help choose the local, state and federal officials who govern you —

Gives you a voice in determining:

- the kind of school YOUR children attend
- the kind of treatment YOU receive at the hands of the police
- the kind of justice YOU get in courts
- the kind of welfare service YOU can get for YOUR FAMILY in time of need
- the kind of hospital treatment YOU get when you are sick
- the kind of job YOUR CHILDREN can get with your city, state or country
- how much taxes YOU have to pay and how your tax money is spent

Helps you on the road to the Promised Land where there will be a better life for YOU and YOUR FAMILY.

Above all, voting means that you are a free citizen with the same rights as other citizens. After you have registered and cast your vote for the persons you want elected to office, you know you are an American doing what other Americans do. You can be proud of yourself and of your country. It is not only your right, but your duty as an American citizen to vote.

HOW CLOSE CAN YOU GET?

In 1956, 39 Members of the U.S. House of Representatives won election by just 52 per cent of the vote or less.

These included such friends of labor as D. S. Saund of California who won by 3,528 votes, or 51.8%; Winfield Denton of Indiana, 192 votes, or 50.1%; Merwin Coad of Iowa, 208 votes, or 50.1%; Floyd Breeding of Kansas, 1,335 votes, or 50.5%; Roy Wier of Minnesota, 12,995 votes, or 51.8%; Charles Brown of Missouri, 2,631 votes, or 50.8%; LeRoy Anderson of Montana, 2,641 votes, or 50.9%; Alfred Sieminski of New Jersey, 57 votes, or 45%, a plurality in a field of six; Albert Ullman of Oregon, 1,375 votes, or 50.7%; George Rhodes of Pennsylvania, 2,670 votes, or 51.3%; Cleveland Bailey of West Virginia, 3,987 votes, or 51.7%; and Lester Johnson of Wisconsin, 3,452 votes, or 51.4%.

This does not include close races in primary elections on one-party states.

And take a look at the U.S. Senate where—

Liberal John Carroll of Colorado won election by just 2,770 votes out of 336,974. . . .

Liberal Joe Clark of Pennsylvania won election by only 17,970 votes of 4,519,312. . . .

Earle Clements of Kentucky, backed by labor, lost by a mere 6,981 votes out of 1,006,825. . . .

Kenneth Holum of South Dakota, also supported by trade unionists, lost by a bare 4,620 votes out of 290,622.

* * * *

Now what do these figures mean?—

They mean this . . .

In all but two or three instances where labor-supported candidates came through victoriously it was due chiefly to the fact that trade unionists had registered and had gone to the polls on Election Day.

In cases where they lost, it generally can be charged to union members who had not taken the trouble to register.

And they mean this . . .

Registration is a year-'round job. It cannot be done in a few weeks before an election. By that time, it's too late to get all those union members registered who had neglected to qualify to vote until then.

Let's get busy NOW and see that every AFL-CIO member and adult members of his or her family is registered to vote in 1957. Local unions should set up registration committees to conduct general campaigns for registration among union members and their wives and husbands.

"If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons alike share in the government to the utmost."

ARISTOTLE
Greek philosopher, 384-322 B.C.

How to register Voters

You're the boss!

This is the title which Edward J. "Ed" Flynn gave the book he wrote on his life story. "Ed" Flynn was the famous boss of the Bronx for many years. As an acknowledged master of politics he rose to become National Chairman of the Democratic Party (1940-1943).

Flynn explains the choice of the title for his autobiography this way: ". . . there are really eighty million political bosses in America. And I determined to try and tell them how, through misguided zeal, misspent energy and just plain laziness, most of them had been shirking their duty as soldiers of democracy. So this book is respectfully addressed to you, the reader, because you're the boss."

DO IT YOURSELF

As Paul P. Van Riper put it in his "Handbook of Practical Politics,"—"life and politics in a democracy such as ours are the results of the accumulation of decisions made by millions of 'you's' from every corner of the country. And, only in a democracy like the U.S.A. do individual citizens of all creeds and colors have even the chance to decide for themselves the really important problems facing them."

Your vote is your chance.

Yet, millions of Americans shy away from that chance. They fail to exercise their right and their responsibility to vote.

They're too busy. They forget. They think politics is a bore. "Let George do it," they say. And "My vote wouldn't count," they argue.

Every vote Counts

One vote does count, of course. People learned that in Newark, Ohio in 1954, for instance. The incumbent mayor in this pleasant city was finally elected, after a recount, by just one vote.

One more vote in each precinct could have elected a Senator in Ohio and in New Jersey in 1954.

Rutherford B. Hayes was elected President by one vote in 1876. His election was contested and it was referred to an electoral commission. Again he won by a single vote.

The man who cast that deciding vote for President Hayes was a Congressman from Indiana, a lawyer who was elected to Congress by a margin of just one vote. And that one vote was cast by a client of his who, though desperately ill, insisted on being taken to the polls to vote.

There are thousands of other examples which prove that one vote does count.

EVERY CITIZEN A VOTER

But as Ed Flynn said, there are literally millions of American citizens who are "shirking their duty as soldiers of democracy." Only half of those eligible to vote actually bother to do so on Election Day. The goal of COPE is "Every citizen a voter!" It is COPE's job to tell every AFL-CIO member and his or her family, every working man, every citizen we can reach "Your Vote is the one that Counts."

Registration Is Essential

Every citizen must register before he or she can vote.

Americans tend to forget this simple fact. They don't want to bother. They think it is too complicated and time-consuming. And many are astonished and disappointed that they can't vote on Election Day because they failed to register or pay their poll tax where it is required.

The idea of registration is very good. It is used to record the names of all those who are eligible to vote so that those names can be checked out on Election Day.

Unfortunately, there is no uniform rule for registration. Different cities and states have different rules. In most places citizens must go in person to the appropriate place to be entered on the official list of eligible voters. In 20 or so states registration can be done by mail.

In the poll tax states—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia—there is a special fee or tax to be paid for the right to vote.

First Of All, Get All The Facts

If you are going to register and help others to register, find out immediately what the registration rules are in your state.

You can get these rules from your City or County Clerk, or the Office of the Registrar of Voters in the City Hall or County Building. While you are at it, get all the information you can about voting—how to transfer registration from one precinct to another, absentee voting, etc. You will need this information to answer questions later.

Registration of the greatest possible number of eligible voters will not get done by itself. It requires an orderly and methodical effort—a well-organized drive.

And don't forget the soldier vote and absentee vote. Often they can swing an election.

The Bigger, The Better

A registration drive can be a one-man or one-woman show. An individual can do a lot of good just urging his eligible family members, his friends and neighbors and the people on the job to register and vote.

It is much better, of course, if a systematic, well-organized registration drive is conducted by the union local.

But you'll have best results if your registration drive is conducted on a city, county or statewide basis by the city, county or state COPE.

In many parts of the country, city, county and state COPES initiate area wide registration drives in which every civic, social and political organization participate. This takes some effort but gets best results. It is a vital patriotic service, essential to make our democracy work.

PROPER TIMING

Like any other campaign, your registration drive must be properly timed. The time for your drive should be determined in cooperation with the local Board of Elections or Registrar of Voters since this office usually also conducts special registration drives during which additional temporary registration offices are opened, evening registration is arranged for, and other special services are rendered. Your drive should obviously coincide with such efforts. It should also coincide with the registration drives of other organizations.

BETTER REGISTRATION FACILITIES

A vital part of any registration drive, at least in most communities, is a campaign to get expanded registration facilities from local Boards of Election or Registrars of Voters. The job of registering people is obviously going to be much simpler if there are more roving Registration Boards, expanded hours, more registration places, or even post-card registration and deputizing registrars for door-to-door work.

Any drive needs publicity—all and any means of making people aware of the need to register—and systematic organization.

Start With AFL-CIO Members

Let's talk about organization first. Obviously COPE's first job is to register AFL-CIO members and their families—regardless whether the drive as a whole is conducted in cooperation with other organizations or not.

And the best way to register all AFL-CIO members in the area is to swing the City or County COPE into action. The job is to find out who is registered and who is not and to get the unregistered on the poll list.

EIGHT STEPS

Here are eight steps City or County COPEs should follow:

Step 1: Prepare two 3" x 5" file cards for each AFL-CIO member. These cards may either be prepared uniformly by each union local or by the council from membership lists the locals have supplied. (See also Chapter 5 on the membership file.)

Each card should provide for the following information:

* name of member
* home address and telephone number * names of all family members eligible to vote (21 years on election day in all states except Georgia and Kentucky where the age is 18)
* ward and precinct
* a place to mark whether or not registered.

Be sure membership files are kept under lock and key. Don't let unauthorized persons near them.

Step 2: Both sets of membership file cards are collected in headquarters. Your registration drive, like any other campaign must have a headquarters to avoid duplication and to coordinate efforts. Headquarters may be the council office or a separate office rented for the occasion.

Step 3: Headquarters marks both sets of cards with ward and precinct number.

Step 4: Break down one set of cards by precincts and again alphabetically within each precinct. That is the way it is arranged on the registration lists. It will be easier to check your cards against this list if you have them in order.

Your other set of cards is arranged in alphabetical order regardless of ward and precinct and stays in headquarters at all times. You must have a record in case the precinct cards get lost. They are handled by many people and it can easily happen. (As we said in the previous chapter this entire operation of setting up a card file can also be done by business machine—at a price.)

Step 5: Check your precinct set of cards against the official list of registered voters in the Registrar's office.

This is the only sure way of knowing who is registered and who isn't. You can't rely on memories. People often aren't sure or they don't remember. They may have moved and have to register again.

Or they may have failed to vote in previous elections and thus lost their registration status.

The official list is kept by the election officials. In some states it is printed and can be purchased or obtained free. In some places it has to be copied or used in the office only.

Since this is the heart of your campaign it is definitely worth while to hire someone to check the list. Sometimes you may be able to hire a clerk in the registration office to do this work in his spare time.

You need not get into an argument about getting access to the registration list. It is a public record and you are entitled to it as a citizen.

Checking your membership file against the registration list enables you to see who is registered and who isn't. Mark each card "yes" or "no" in the space left for registration.

Step 6: Now you've got your cards with the names, addresses, ward and precinct designation of all those who are not registered.

Give the name of each unregistered member to the COPE Chairman of his local union. The idea is that the shop steward then approaches the man, and tells him where and when he can register and why it is important to him and his union that he do so.

It is important that each local union COPE makes a real effort in the Registration Drive. Posters should be up, literature should be available, registration should be talked up as much as possible. And it should be followed up with a personal talk with each unregistered member. (We list some suggestions on what a local union COPE might do to register all its members on page 24 of this chapter).

Be sure the local union COPE reports back to Registration Drive Headquarters as soon as each man is registered, so you won't have to worry about him any longer.

Step 7: Those who remain unregistered should receive a personal letter. It should be signed by a top local official. The letter points up how vital it is that every citizen exercise his right to vote. It should make plain that, of course, every candidate can vote for whomever he wants . . . but that he must vote. As the Greek philosopher Plato said some 2,300 years ago: "The punishment suffered by the wise who refuse to take part in the government is to live under the government of bad men."

Most of all your letter should give precise and detailed information on where, when and how to register and where additional voter information can be obtained.

Step 8: Now follow up the personal approach on the job (Step 6) and the letter reminding the unregistered to register (Step 7) with a personal visit.

This is the time for your precinct organization (see Chapter 5) to swing into action. It's a good time to make contacts with potential voters, acquaint your blockworker with the people in their blocks.

Distribute the cards of the unregistered to the blockworkers in the block they live in. Let them call on each one, equipped with all the necessary information and a leaflet which they can leave after their visit.

YOUR PRECINCT ORGANIZATION

It is very important that your precinct organization is organized to help people get registered. This means that you should be able to provide baby sitters for mothers who need them to take the time to go to the registration office. It means you should be able to provide transportation for anyone who may need it.

Some precincts organize registration parties. They take a group of unregistered persons to the registration office all at the same time. It's more fun that way, helps everyone to get acquainted and make new friends.

Blockworkers should regularly report on their progress to the precinct chairman. The chairman reports back to Registration Drive headquarters. Headquarters keeps tabs on the over-all effort, helps out with literature and people where needed and doesn't relax until every AFL-CIO member in the area is registered.

SUPPORT YOUR DRIVE WITH PUBLICITY

All this should be supported by a steady and intensive publicity barrage just like an effective infantry attack is supported by heavy and well-aimed artillery fire. (You'll find publicity suggestions later on in this chapter.)

This plan, of course, only takes care of registering AFL-CIO members. It is our minimum objective, so to speak. It's the least good unionists should do to help make democracy work.

The maximum objective is to get all working people registered. In many parts of the country AFL-CIO unions can proudly boast of having made a splendid contribution to this effort. It pays off in better government, better officials, better laws.

City Or County-wide Registration Drive

Here is a plan for city-wide registration of working people. Here is how it works:

1) Get the most recent city directory (not more than 12 months old) and get the registration rolls for the city and any surrounding towns covered by the directory. Preferably get a copy of the directory before it is bound into a book. This saves the trouble of taking it apart, and may save you a few weeks time if the directory is just being published.

2) Code the directory by crossing out the names of professional people, business executives, salesmen, supervisors, foreman, etc. (directories list the occupations after each name in the alphabetical section). Mark a dash beside each name not crossed out to make it easier to see on the page.

3) Type the names and addresses on specially prepared forms which you must have printed (order them early!). This typing operation produces three sets of names in alphabetical order.

SORT NAMES

4) The names are then sorted into voting districts, the unit of 3 copies being kept together for this operation. It requires three or four sorting operations by street, by street number, and finally by ward and/or precinct. If your city has only wards, or only precincts, you have one less sorting job to do.

5) These forms, now arranged by voting districts, should be checked against the registration book. Each name should be marked as registered or unregistered and filed accordingly. Names of non-working wives should be on the same card with their husbands. If either one is unregistered, the card should go in the not registered file.

6) The first copy of the form should then be pulled off for mailing purposes. If you keep the names separated by voting districts, it is a simple matter to insert in the envelope local notices giving the time and place of registration for the district if this varies. The form is designed for use with a window envelope to save the job of addressing envelopes.

7) The second copy should then be pulled off, still kept separately by registered and unregistered and by voting districts to be turned over to block-workers in the precincts who will contact the people at home.

ONE COPY TO THE LOCAL UNION

8) The final copy, still separated by registered and unregistered, should then be sorted by occupation or place of employment. Each trade union council or each local union should be sent the names of all people in their group, whether members of the union or not. In other words, if local XX has the XYZ plant in your city, all names of people employed at that plant should be forwarded to that local union.

The principal advantages of this method are that it gives greater coverage of the city, city directories are probably the most accurate lists available of potential voters, and they offer a cheaper way of getting the names than any involved clerical operation. The principal disadvantages are that the directories include names of aliens, names of 19 and 20 year olds, and directories do not give names of people who work in a city but live in suburban areas outside its limits.

The real job: Persuade them

Both these methods are solely the mechanical means of getting lists of the names and addresses of the unregistered and sorting them so they can be contacted both in the shop and at home.

It is the job of the local union COPE to contact them in the shop. Your ward and precinct organization should do the doorbell pushing.

AFL-CIO women, both members and members wives, should help in the precincts.

But you'll also want these records not only to find out how you are doing with your registration drive but for later canvassing and "get-out-the-vote" drives (see Chapter 11).

Lists of registered voters are also invaluable for education on issues, candidates and records through later contacts and mailings.

THE BEST WAY

Neither of these plans are a 100% substitute for the one and only accurate and time-tested method; house to house canvass of every block in every street.

Registration in the Precinct

By this method you send a representative of each precinct to the Registrar of Voters office and have him or her copy the names and addresses of every registered voter in the precinct on a file card. It's a formidable job—but not as bad as you might think.

Once you have a card for every registered voter (members of the same family living in the same house or apartment can, of course, be put on one card) you arrange your cards by blocks, streets and house number.

RING DOORBELLS

Next you hand each blockworker his stack of cards. Then let him go from house to house, pushing each doorbell for which he doesn't have a card. The people living there obviously, are not registered.

"I am Joe Doe, your COPE blockworker," your man or gal will say. "I notice that apparently you are not registered. Are you eligible?"

If the person is eligible the blockworker provides all the necessary registration information and gives all the help he can to get his "customer" to the registration office. This may involve furnishing transportation, baby sitters, or other help. Sometimes the person has just moved into the community and is not yet eligible because he or she doesn't fulfill the registration requirements.

A CARD FOR EACH HOME

In any event the blockworker should make out a card for the person, noting on it all pertinent information. The card serves two purposes; it avoids duplication and it enables the blockworker to follow up later. In other words, the blockworker will not by mistake call on the same person again until he is eligible to register. But he will call when the time comes—when the "customer" has attained his citizenship, for instance, or has lived in the community long enough to be eligible to vote—to remind him.

Even if you make the primary effort in your registration drive with AFL-CIO members, a complete house-to-house canvass in the precinct is highly recommended. An efficient precinct organization should have a card of every person living in its precinct. It's the only way to see that 1) everyone is registered, 2) everyone is made familiar with the issues, and 3) every voter is brought out to vote.

Registration Publicity

Promotion and publicity is no substitute for a thorough person-by-person canvass but it is a vital and essential part of your registration drive. An effective and aggressive publicity campaign is needed to back up the effort of your COPE workers in the shop and in the precinct. They need this support, as we said before, as much as the infantry soldiers need the support of the artillery.

Every technique of advertising and promotion should be used to alert citizens to the importance of registering.

ACTIVE CITIZENSHIP

The most effective way to go about it, is to organize a committee of prominent citizens with representatives from every possible organization in the community. Call it "Your Town's Good Government League" or "Committee for Active Citizenship." Let it be completely non-partisan. For all you want to promote is good citizenship based on the simple and obvious proposition that the more people participate in elections the more representative and truly democratic our government is going to be. Organizations like the Chamber of Commerce, the Republican and Democratic Parties, the League of Women Voters, other trade unions, businessmen's clubs, veterans organizations, student groups, minority organizations, advertising clubs, etc., should all join the Committee and the Registration Drive.

A registration campaign conducted by such a representative group can be extremely effective for two reasons:

1) You reach a very large number of people through these various organizations and the influence they have in the community. And

2) A broad, non-partisan committee opens up practically every means of communication and publicity.

Whether your registration drive is conducted by COPE alone or under the auspices of a representative registration campaign committee, use some or all of the following means of publicity:

RADIO AND TV STATIONS—should give free time for:

★ special five or ten minute talks by prominent civic leaders about the importance of registration.

★ short dramatic skits, live or recorded, stressing the need to register and vote

★ spot announcements urging registration and giving dates, places and times for registration. (Also give phone number of the committee which can arrange for transportation when needed.)

★ stress registration and give registration information in regular news broadcasts and news commentaries.

NEWSPAPERS AND WEEKLIES—should give free space for:

★ An "Only X more days to register" box, preferably on the front page, every day for the duration of the registration drive.

★ "Register to Vote" cut-off slugs at end of stories, columns, editorials, etc., instead of regular rules

★ editorials and cartoons on the "register so you can vote theme"

★ news stories about the registration drive. These can be varied indefinitely for instance: stories about prominent women taking part in the registration drive on the women's page; naturalized citizens registering, 21-year olds registering, to vote for the first time, oldsters reminiscing about events and issues that were important the first time they voted, feature reports on the registration office and its work, etc.

★ ads giving registration information and urging people to register

BUSINESS, ADVERTISING AGENCIES should be asked for cooperation with the following:

★ inclusion of registration slogans in newspaper ads or sponsoring of ads exclusively devoted to registration

★ registration annuoncements in radio and TV advertising

★ donation of space in streetcars, buses and on billboards for registration messages

★ window displays in stores. The Chamber of Commerce can often be persuaded to run a contest for the best window display on the subject ★ window displays in the offices of Gas, Electric and Water Companies

Put Up Your Registration Posters

★ in department stores, retail shops, public transportation carriers, theatre lobbies, lobbies and elevators of office and apartment buildings, drug stores, and restaurants

★ on bulletin boards in libraries, recreation centers, churches, clubs, unions, factories, colleges and meeting halls

THEATERS

Contact movie theater managers about running "register and vote" slides between showings during the campaign period

CLERGY

Ask the clergy about mentioning registration in their announcements

ORGANIZATIONS

Get every organization in town or in the county to feature registration announcements. Ask to have a representative of your registration committee speak briefly in their meetings. Also ask them to carry "register and vote" announcements or ads in their bulletins and special mailings. Among the groups to contact are:

★ Elks, civic, religious, fraternal, educational, student, social organizations, clubs and associations

HANDBILLS

Print a simple, attractice flyer or handbill with registration and voting information in sufficient quantities to distribute them:

★ door to door
★ as inserts with organization mailings
★ on store counters
★ as bill inserts by department and other stores as well as gas, light and water companies
★ at street corners, in front of factories and schools

STAMPS

Print "Register and Vote" stamps and urge organizations and business to stick them on all their mailing envelopes.

SPECIAL EVENTS

Schedule special events and see that these get good advance publicity and newspaper and radio coverage. Such special events could include:

★ an opening ceremony of your registration drive, kicked off at City Hall or Capitol by the Mayor or Governor, heads of your committee and other prominent citizens ★ registration parades with banners, sound trucks, pretty girls, etc. The parade should include veterans organizations, detachments from different schools, detachments of the various professions such as teachers, doctors, clergy, lawyers, businessmen, etc., as well as the various organizations listed above.

BUTTON

★ "I have registered" buttons—You will find firms making campaign buttons listed in your yellow classified telephone directory. Make up buttons with an inscription such as "I have registered—I will vote." Distribute them at registration offices and urge people to wear them. Give the first button to the governor or mayor or some other prominent, newsworthy person. See that people wear your buttons on all publicity pictures.

PORCH LIGHT CAMPAIGN

★ Organize a "porch light" campaign to register voters. If you have a prominent registration committee and built up sufficient publicity and public pressure you may be able to arrange registrars from the Registration Office to go from house to house to register voters. Pick an evening in the middle of the week and through the newspaper, radio, handbills, telephone brigades, etc., ask all people in a given precinct who are not registered to turn on the light on the porch. The registrar and his staff will then call at homes where the porch light is on and register all those eligible in the family.

DOOR KNOB HANGERS

★ Another gimmick you can use—to notify people of the porchlight campaign or directly to urge them to register soon—is a door knob hanger. It's similar to the card that the telegraph company uses to notify you of a telegram delivery when you are not at home. Your door knob hanger should have printed on it the facts about registration, especially when and where to register. Or, you can dress up your door knob hanger with some catchy slogan.

Don't Just Ask—Give

You need publicity, free publicity for an effective registration drive. You'll have to ask a lot of people to cooperate with you. You need the help and cooperation of your local newspapers and radio stations and of various organizations.

To get this needed help you must be prepared to give. Newspaper writers and radio commentators in particular have a lot on their minds and a lot to do. The easier you make it for them to write or broadcast your story the better your chances to get it in print or on the air.

Here are some of the basic materials which you should prepare as soon as possible:

- a mimeographed or printed sheet listing all pertinent information and voting, including
  - dates of registration
  - places of registration
  - times of registration
  - requirements for registration and voting
- a mimeographed or printed sheet of short register and vote slogans and plugs suitable for use in advertising, cut-off slugs in newspapers, etc.
- sample spot announcements for radio stations, organization bulletins
- sample registration boxes for newspapers and advertising agencies, radio programs

What the Local Union Should Do

The most important contribution to any effective AFL-CIO registration drive is made by the local union COPE.

The local union COPE should:

- talk up registration at union meetings, union socials, in the union hall
- distribute leaflets, booklets, handbills in the shop or at the gate
- write to the members of your local at home
- put up notices, stickers, posters at plant bulletin boards, in the union office, union hall . . . any place you can
- use a loudspeaker car or truck at the factory gate at shift change

* get a special rubber stamp or sticker to paste on member's dues book or card showing he is registered
* ask management for permission to include a registration reminder slip in pay envelopes
* ask management to pay lost time for registration
* run contests between shops or departments with prizes or citations for the one which first attains 100% registration
* reward shopworkers or blockworkers who do an outstanding job in getting others to register by announcing their names at meetings, giving them certificates of good citizenship, sending them letters of commendation, or honoring them at a registration drive dinner
* open a registration booth in your plant or union hall. Perhaps you can persuade an official from the Voter's Registrar Office to actually register people there at certain hours. Otherwise use the booth to give out registration information.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE CAMPAIGNS

Quite possibly you can get your employer to join with your local union in a company-wide registration drive. Suggest to set up a committee consisting of both management and labor to organize it. Such a joint committee could do many of the things suggested above.

A Word About Your Approach

Your literature, your posters, your letters, your speeches and announcements should recall on two basic human emotions; pride and shame.

Appeal to the pride of the unregistered by saying: "Be a first class citizen—register to vote!" Or, "Yours is the vote that counts—register today!" There are, of course, thousands of variations on this theme.

Shaming people can also be played in various ways: "Don't shirk your duty—good citizens vote," might suggest possible slogans. In your local union bulletin or even in a handbill print the names of members of the local who are registered. These are the local's first class citizen your announcement says. The implication is, of course, that the others are not.

Also consider appealing to people's self-interest. Voting gives a citizen his best chance to have his say on such issues as how much taxes he pays, what unemployment compensation he gets, how many schools are built. "Register to Vote so You Can Help Bring Taxes Down," might be a good slogan to fit into this theme.

IN THE SOUTH

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE

". . . to secure these rights to ourselves and our posterity . . ."

THE NEGRO VOTER IN THE SOUTH

THE FACTS

(1) Over 5 million Negroes of voting age live in the South.

(2) Only 25% of adult Negroes vote compared with 60% white adults.

(3) Purges of voters lists, "slowdowns" by registrars, opening the registration office only one or two days a month and at hours that are not helpful for working people; and

(4) Open intimidation by some plantation bosses and many local officials, all play a part in discouraging the Negro Citizen from becoming a registered voter.

As a result, "Government by consent of the governed," upon which our nation was founded in 1776, is a goal still to be made a reality in most of the South today.

Most of the present crop of Southern Senators and Congressmen will oppose and fillibuster all legislation designed to protect the voting rights of citizens of this region.

YOU CAN CHANGE THIS SITUATION

Despite these obstacles Negro citizens are struggling daily to double the number of voters and to obtain representation in government.

Even the most die-hard segregationist in public office can be made to respect voting power. Furthermore, we know there are many liberal white citizens in the South who count on the Negro votes to increase enough for liberal voices to be heard in the government.

The whole nation will benefit from an enlarged Negro vote in the South. This area of our country CAN elect men and women of good will and a sense of justice to Congress and to local state legislatures.

Let all who believe in Freedom and Human Dignity join in this great Crusade For The Ballot Now!!

Young people in Macon, Georgia in line at the County Courthouse to become new registered voters. With S. C. L. C. help, Negroes in Macon doubled their voting power in a ninety-day campaign during 1962.

All over the South, people at the grass-roots level are joining the CRUSADE FOR THE BALLOT.

CRUSADE FOR THE BALLOT

TO DOUBLE THE NEGRO VOTE IN THE SOUTH

MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.
President, S. C. L. C.

HOW

✓ To educate and stimulate Negroes to exercise the vote.

✓ To help them obtain the right to vote where in practice it does not exist.

ORGANIZE

✓ SCLC will help your community to organize registration schools, workshops for local leaders, public meetings on voter registration and provide material when requested.

IN UNITY THERE IS STRENGTH

✓ No narrow partisan interest must be allowed to divide us. In reaching a cross section of the Negro community, the Crusade will move across party lines.

✓ It is for the good of the local community that all civic, church, fraternal and other organizations cooperate in this effort.

NONVIOLENCE

✓ The Freedom Movement in the Deep South is a non-violent revolution, giving birth to a new day of progress and human dignity for all Americans, for generations to come.

REGISTER AND VOTE

✓ Remember if you are already registered you must vote in elections in order to keep your name listed on the registration books.

All elections are important for gaining needed improvements in the community and speeding the day of full freedom.

"The goal of the Freedom Movement in the South can be summed up in 3 words:
All, Here, and Now

We want all of our rights as citizens
(not just some rights);
We want them here, in the Deep South, and
We want them now---"

THE NEGRO VOTE BLOC

Editorial published June 21, 1962, in The News, Lynchburg, Virginia.

If you live in a small town, read the inside editorial very carefully. It clearly demonstrates what a minority vote can do, if it is organized.

"AN ORGANIZED MINORITY VOTE CAN WIN AN ELECTION WHERE THERE IS A DIVIDED MAJORITY VOTE."

N. A. A. C. P.'S CRUSADE FOR VOTERS

Excerpt, Voter Registration Report to Messrs. Roy Wilkins and Kelly Alexander from the NAACP Voter Registration Director, dated October 17-November 21, 1961:

The Negro Vote Bloc

The votes in Lynchburg's councilmanic election have all been canvassed, the results have been certified and exact totals are known. It is time now to examine the impact of the Negroes at the polls.

Other groups may vote as blocs, the Republicans, the party-line Democrats, the anti-fluoridationists, but none of these blocs is better organized or more effective than the Negro bloc vote. Nor are other bloc votes as easy to identify and to measure.

In the City Registrar's office Negro voters are listed on yellow or pink cards, white voters are listed on white or blue cards. If a voter cast a ballot, a check mark appears in an appropriate box on these record cards.

So, a reading of these cards, a count of the colors, will reveal the number of Negro votes cast and the number of white votes cast. We did not count up the nearly 7,000 voter cards with check marks; instead, we worked with a sample precinct, figured percentages and projected these percentages across the total vote. The results obtained should be fairly accurate.

Let's get some basic figures down. Records show that there are 2,042 Negroes registered to vote. Of this number 533 are not eligible to vote because of failure to pay poll taxes. This leaves 1,509 eligible to vote. Those eligible represent 74 per cent of those registered.

We will use figures from the first precinct of the First Ward in our example. This is a precinct with a heavy Negro vote. It is a precinct where Negro poll workers checked off those voting and hustled Negroes to the polls. In this precinct, there are 359 Negroes registered to vote. While the exact figure of those eligible to vote is not set forth, we can apply our percentage figure here and estimate that there are 266 Negroes eligible to vote having paid necessary taxes. A count of the colored cards in this precinct revealed that 173 Negroes actually did vote. This is 65 per cent of those eligible.

We can now project this percentage across the total vote. If 65 per cent of the eligible Negroes voted in the first precinct of the First Ward, is it not reasonable to assume that 65 per cent of all Negroes eligible to vote cast a ballot? If this percentage is reasonably accurate, then by taking 65 per cent of the total number of Negroes eligible to vote one finds that the total number of Negroes who cast a ballot was 981. This is a significant total. Informed observers estimated that two years ago the total Negro vote was only about 700.

Even so, this estimate may be too low. M. W. Thornhill, Jr., a Negro leader, reports that his workers actually checked off 997 Negro voters at the polls and, he adds, that this check-off did not include all precincts and he estimates that the total Negro vote probably exceeded 1,000.

We have no reason to doubt Mr. Thornhill's estimate. But we have not seen his check-off records and, for our purposes here, will stick with the estimates based on percentages of the votes cast in the first precinct of the First Ward.

What did a Negro bloc vote of 981 mean? How did this bloc affect the fortunes of those for whom the Negroes cast their ballots, the four winners, Howard Ford, James Ould Jr., A. G. Jefferson and Harold Leggett? How would a different vote by the Negro bloc have affected the fortunes of the four defeated candidates, "Pete" White, Allen Harvey, Benson Hoge and Claude Hoskins?

This can best be illustrated in tabular form, which we have done below. There are four tables. The first shows the actual vote, the second shows the results which would have obtained had there been no Negro vote at all, the third shows the results if the Negroes had reversed their vote and given it to the four candidates who finished last in the actual count rather than the four who, in fact, finished first, and the fourth table shows what the results would have been if the Negroes had divided their bloc vote as the white voters did, in fact, divide their vote. Howard Ford received 62 per cent of the white vote, James Ould received 59 per cent, "Pete" White received 54 per cent, A. G. Jefferson received 48 per cent, Allen Harvey receivd 42 per cent, Benson Hoge received 41 per cent, Claude Hoskins received 40 per cent and Harold Leggett received 39 per cent of the white vote.

These tables can be summarized. Most significantly, without the Negro vote being cast in the bloc fashion in which it was actually cast, Harold Leggett would not have been elected and "Pete" White would have been elected. Harold Leggett would have finished last. He would have finished last if there had been no Negro vote, he would have finished last if the Negro vote had been reversed and cast for the other four candidates and he would even have finished last if the Negro vote had been divided along the same general percentage lines as the white vote was divided.

"Pete" White would have finished third if there had been no Negro vote. He would have finished first if he had received the Negro vote. He would have finished third if the Negro vote had been split as the white vote was split.

If we had used Mr. Thornhill's estimates of the Negro vote, we would only emphasize these results. What is clear is that the Negro voting bloc is powerful; it is effective. Mr. Thornhill explains that the Negroes basically wanted to vote against two men, Allen Harvey, "who operates a segregated drive-in and segregated motel," and Claude Hoskins. Mr. Thornhill asserted that the Negroes "were the deciding factor" in electing Mr. Hoskins four years ago as a write-in candidate and he indicated that the Negroes were unhappy with Mr. Hoskins in office.

The results show that the Negroes achieved their goal. They helped defeat Mr. Harvey and Mr. Hoskins. They helped elect the four winners; in fact, Mr. Leggett owes his election to the Negro vote. A switch of Negro votes could have defeated Mr. Jefferson.

We have set out the story of the Negro bloc vote in some detail because it is an important story too little understood. Here we have a bloc of about 1,000 votes, a bloc carefully organized, beautifully disciplined. To some whites, this bloc may represent a threat. To all Negroes, it probably represents a hope. To members of Council, keeping the Negro dissatisfaction with Mr. Hoskins in mind, this bloc undoubtedly represents a force to be reckoned with.

GUIDES FOR ANSWERING OF INQUIRIES FROM THE PRESS OR OTHERS

1. Both SRC and the agencies are requested by the donor to preserve its anonymity, at least for the present: if asked where the money is coming from, the answer we have been requested to give is: "the foundations (plural) do not wish their grants to be publicized at this time".

2. If SRC is asked what other agencies are participating, the names should be given without hesitation and with no appearance of evasion.

3. If SRC is asked what these agencies will do in relation to the Project, the reply should include reference to the following points:

- concrete programs not yet worked out
- agencies will seek to get people registered
- agencies will formulate and manage their own programs
- agencies will use Project as a clearinghouse for ideas and information, as a place for discussions and coordinated planning
- agencies will make information regarding their programs available to the Voter Education Project in furtherance of its research

4. If SRC is asked about the size of the grant, response should be in terms of approximation, but accurate: for the present, say "approximately $100,000 for each of the next two years".

5. If SRC is asked about the size of allocations to the agencies, response should be that no commitments have yet been made to the agencies. Information will be available on request after funds are committed.

6. If an agency is asked what is its relationship, if any, to SRC or the Voter Education Project, response should be that

- it will cooperate with the research aims of the Project
- will utilize the Project's clearinghouse services
- will accept funds from the Project to support those of its (the agency's) activities which fall within the project's interests.

7. The agencies are requested to refer, whenever possible, to the Voter Education Project, not to SRC.

8. If agencies are asked about the size of the grant, they should refer the questioner to the Voter Education Project.

9. If agencies are asked how much money they are getting from the Project, they should answer according to their own policies about divulging financial information.

10. In discussions with the press or other questioners, both SRC and the agencies should stress that the Project and all programs carried out by the agencies with Project funds are non-partisan.

BETTER JOBS THROUGH SOLIDARITY OF NEGRO VOTES

This is a story concerning the gaining of better job opportunities for Negroes through an increased registration and an organized vote. It began with a study of Negro employment in city government by the Research Committee of the Crusade for Voters, Richmond, Virginia, in the early spring of 1962.

The study showed the following facts:

Richmond had a working force of 4,442 employees in the classified system. 1,168 or 26.4 percent were Negroes. HOWEVER, IT WAS FOUND THAT OVER THREE-FOURTHS OF THE 1,168 NEGROES WERE DISPROPORTIONATELY CONCENTRATED IN THE RANKS OF MENIAL, UNSKILLED AND SEMI-SKILLED EMPLOYMENT, WAGES AS LOW AS $.62½ PER HOUR

For the above reason, on May 12, 1962, the Crusade for Voters petitioned City Council to adopt a Fair Employment Practice Policy.

PETITION FOR CITY JOBS to be filled on the basis of merit instead of race is presented to Richmond City Manager Horace Edwards by George A. Pannell and Mrs. Ethel T. Overby representing the Crusade for Voters and John M. Brooks, NAACP Voter Registration Director. The petition which 'implored' City Council to take immediate action against discrimination in city employment, became a major campaign issue in the June 12 councilmanic election.

The rest of this story will be unfolded through the use of newspaper clippings.

OVERFLOW OF CROWD WHICH ATTENDED SESSION STANDS OUTSIDE COUNCIL CHAMBER LAST NIGHT

POLICY ADOPTED

Broader City Hiring Of Negroes Expected

Wider employment of trained Negroes in the city service is expected soon as a result of City Council's unanimous adoption last night of a fair employment practices policy.

The policy calls for full employment integration on the basis of merit.

The city had no rule against Negro employment now, but there was no positive rule such as was suggested to the Personnel Board in last night's resolution.

The Personnel Board—citizens appointed by Council—will hold a regular meeting on June 21, but could be called into special session.

City Manager Edwards said there would be no immediate comment on the situation from the administration.

The city already has 1,168 Negro employes, not including teachers, or 26.4 per cent of the total of 4,422 workers in the classified service.

SPONSOR LISTED

The amended resolution was sponsored by Councilman J. Westwood Smithers and Eleanor P. Sheppard along with Mayor Woodward.

Dr. Tinsley Spraggins read to City Council a report made by him and Dr. Franklin J. Gayles, of the Crusade for Voters' Research Committee. The Crusade, a Negro organization, sparked the action with a petition bearing several thousand names of Negro citizens.

Dr. Spraggins said the survey showed most Negro workers in the city service in menial and low-paid places, and called it in all "a dismal picture."

BENEFITS CITED

By adopting and enforcing an equal employment opportunity policy, Dr. Spraggins said, the city might open up employment, training, and promotion opportunities for Negroes in private industries in the city.

Such a policy, he said, would give both the city and private industries an opportunity to tap a reservoir of highly trained manpower heretofore neglected. He felt that employers as well as Negroes would be benefited and that Negroes would get an opportunity to raise his standard of living and strengthen the city's economy.

George A. Pannell, president of the Crusade, spoke along the same line.

On the other side, Lansing B. Harmon Jr. spoke against the resolution, saying that it would indicate that the city had been derelict in its duty to see that fair play exists at all times.

The resolution was aimed primarily at expressing Council's view that employment and promotion should be based solely upon merit. It asked the Personnel Board to consider the adoption of an appropriate employment rule.

Petitions to city councils are not worth the paper they are written on . . . unless they are backed by qualified voters . . . unless the petition involves the the cooperation of large segments of the city population. (Note large overflow crowd attending council meeting).

EXCERPTS FROM RICHMOND NEWS LEADER DATED June 13, 1962

The Outsiders, In

"The writing of headlines, as every newspaperman knows, is among the most difficult of the journalistic arts. The point was well demonstrated today when our morning contemporary advised its readers, in 72-point type, of yesterday's councilmanic outcome: "RCA Elects 6, Keeps Majority on Council."

Superficially, that may be true enough; the headline supported the story. But the fact is that the Richmond Citizens Association was hardly a significant factor in yesterday's stunning election. On paper, the RCA had an excellent slate: It was supporting seven incumbents, one popular former Councilman, and one attractive young Democrat.

But when the votes came rolling in, the RCA floundered. Despite their built-in advantages as incumbents, the RCA could not return Hugh Rudd and Ben Johns to office. Lemuel DeBerry, president of the Young Democrats, ran a good race but finished in 12th spot. The RCA's other six candidates made it, but in the case of Messrs. Bagley, Smithers, and Ford, it was not especially because they were RCA candidates. The three gentlemen are unbroken broncoes of the open range; they stand in no man's corral. Mrs. Eleanor Sheppard, the RCA's strongest contender, carried only six precincts; Mayor Woodward carried not a one; Mr. Sadler came in ninth, 240 votes behind the politically unknown Ruth Herrink.

A more telling election analysis might have been provided in this fashion: "Seven Backed by Negro Group Win Council Seats." An additional fact is that of the first 11 in the 25-man field, nine were on the slate of the Crusade for Voters. Only Mr. Bagley and Mr. Throckmorton won office without the Crusade's endorsement. Detailed study of the returns will indicate that in the five overwhelmingly Negro precincts (the 1st, 4th, 18th, 46th, and 64th), almost half the voters who voted for the Negroes' top candidate, Clarence Newsome, also voted for members of the Crusade for Voters slate. Mr. Newsome got 1,412 votes in these precincts, Mrs. Sheppard 693, and Mr. Woodward 624.

The returns demonstrate not only the relative weakness of the RCA and the significant nature of the Negro support; they demonstrate also a high degree of unrest and dissatisfaction among the voters. The most amazing aspect of the election is Robert Heberle's personal triumph. Defeated two years ago, he made a smashing comeback to lead the field; and he based his entire campaign upon unrelenting criticism of the Edwards administration in City Hall. His one constant theme was the need for a change. More than 11,000 voters yesterday backed him up."

"SEVEN BACKED BY NEGRO GROUP WIN COUNCIL SEATS

"The Crusade for Voters, after studying the records, platforms and speeches of the twenty-five councilmanic candidates, recommended a slate of nine candidates to the Negroes of Richmond, Virginia. In brief, they told the people, "we will get the best value for our vote, if we vote for these nine candidates." The Negroes responded, they voted the Crusade's recommendations."

Non-Race Rule Adopted By City Personnel Board

By Al Coates

The Personnel Board followed City Council's urging yesterday and unanimously agreed that employment and promotions in municipal jobs should not be based upon race.

But the board, in a rule it adopted, refused to include a ban on "arbitrary maximum age limits," as Council had done in a resolution approved May 28.

Two members, Charles H. Robertson and James R. Ayers, said they were concerned about the age limit reference contained in the personnel rule as first proposed.

Ayers questioned whether it contributed "to what we're actually trying to solve." Robertson feared it would handicap such agencies as the Police and Fire Bureaus, which now refuse to hire men older than 30.

Merit, Fitness

Yesterday's board hearing was a result of Council's resolution, which declared it to be city policy that employment and promotions should be based upon merit and fitness, not race, creed or color.

"It is the further opinion of the Council that the Personnel Board should adopt the rule as submitted," Council's resolution stated.

The board's rule contains virtually the same language as Council's measure, so far as race, creed and color are concerned.

Discussing the rule, Ayers said:

"My own personal feeling is that it means just what it says, and no members of the Negro race should feel that as a result of this they will be given any preference.

Two Citizens Spoke

Two citizens spoke at the hearing, and several others sat quietly in the audience. George A. Pannell, president of the Crusade for Voters, a Negro group, said he was present as an observer and that his group was "naturally interested" in adoption of the measure.

The other speaker, Miss Emma Morris, told the board, "It is rather ill-advised to take it up at this time . . . ill-advised to put too many restrictions on department heads."

She said the measure "was drawn up and introduced in the closing days of a very heated political campaign." It has never been brought fully to the attention of the public, she contended.

Dameral Speaks

John E. Dameral, the city's Personnel Director, pointed out to the board that City Manager Edwards instructed him after Council's action to proceed promptly with provisions of the fair employment practices resolution.

"For the last two weeks now we have been operating on that basis," Dameral said.

Previously, he explained, when department directors asked his agency for names of applicants for jobs or promotions, the directors listed the race they desired.

This policy has been abandoned, and names are now certified without regard to race, he said.

In another matter, the Personnel Board approved job specifications for the post of Civil Defense co-ordinator. Council restored this position in the government for the 1962-63 budget year.

The next step in getting the co-ordinator to work is for Council to include the job in the city's pay plan and to fix the salary.

Specifications approved by the board yesterday list "desirable training and experience" as: college graduation, five years "of responsible administrative experience in organizational or promotional work, or work involving similar public contacts."

Or, "any equivalent combination of education and experience, but not less than two years of college."

Several "desirable knowledges, abilities and skills" are listed for the post, but the list doesn't include a knowledge of Civil Defense.

Solidarity of Richmond Negro Voters Pays Off

Ten days after the June 12 Councilmanic Election, a non-racial ruling was adopted by the City Personnel Board. This ruling was based upon a fair employment practice policy adopted by the City Council, May 29, 1962.

Commenting on this ruling (the first of its kind in a southern city), an outstanding Richmond politician had this to say, "the day is passed when you can woo the Negro vote in Richmond with a few dollars and half-hearted promises."

"AN ORGANIZED MINORITY VOTE CAN WIN AN ELECTION WHEN THERE IS A DIVIDED MAJORITY VOTE."

BACKGROUND STATEMENT

The Voter Education Project is a non-partisan program under the supervision of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., and is engaged in a research study of the causes of low voter registration in 11 southern states, the methods and techniques being used to increase registration, and the development of educational programs to provide voters with the will and knowledge to register and vote. Contributions to the project are deductible from federal income taxes, pursuant to a ruling by the Internal Revenue Service dated March 22, 1962, and the first public announcement of the project was made on March 29, 1962 and carried the endorsement of the Chairmen of both the Republican and Democratic national committees, in addition to other leading Americans. The First Annual Report of the Voter Education Project covers the VEP fiscal year, April 1, 1962 through March 31, 1963, and describes: (1) Formation and purpose of VEP; (2) Operation, including methods and objectives; (3) A description of selected projects; (4) Formula and criteria for grants; and other pertinent information.

This Second Annual Report covers the period April 1, 1963 through March 31, 1964. Due to the fact that the method of operation and other activities follow the same general pattern as was followed during the first fiscal year, we will not undertake to repeat this information in this Second Annual Report. VEP will publish a detailed account of the entire project following the end of the registration program in November of 1964. The final report is planned for release in [redacted] 1965.

PARTICIPATING AGENCIES

Five major organizations work actively with the Voter Education Project and have been a part of the program since its inception. They are the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, Congress of Racial Equality, National Urban League, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In addition to ~~the big five,~~ these five, VEP works with several local organizations in each of the eleven southern states.

STAFF CHANGES

VEP continues to operate with a very small staff even though the actual registration work is done by the participating agencies. Jack Minnis, Director of Research during the fiscal year, left the project in December, ~~of~~ 1963. It was then decided that this position would be abolished and the position of Research Assistant created. Mrs. Barbara Whitaker, a graduate and former faculty member of the Atlanta University School of Social Work, was employed as Research Assistant in January, ~~of~~ 1964. Mrs. Barbara Stewart joined the staff as Receptionist and Clerk-Typist during the year. The other staff members include: Wiley A. Branton, Project Director; Randolph T. Blackwell, Field Director; Mrs. Jean Levine, Administrative Secretary; and Mrs. Janet Shortt, Office Secretary. Vernon E. Jordan serves in the capacity of Acting Assistant Director of VEP in addition to his duties as Assistant to the Director of the Southern Regional Council, Inc. John D. Due, Jr., a young Florida lawyer, joined the staff as an intern in human relations under the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation Intern Program.

STATE BY STATE REPORT

ALABAMA

This state requires an applicant to pass a literacy test before one can be registered and the test is often applied in a discriminatory manner against Negroes. After Negro groups started conducting classes to familiarize applicants with the test, the state adopted a new law which requires a new set of test questions each month. The law also requires that a registered voter must vouch for each applicant and a poll tax is required for voting in all but federal elections. Registration by Negroes is not too difficult in the TVA area such as Huntsville, Tuscumbia, Decatur and Florence, and neither is it too difficult in Mobile. As a result of federal court injunctions, Negroes may now register with little difficulty in Macon and Montgomery Counties, though it appears that some discrimination still exists in the latter. Macon County now has more registered Negro voters than whites and Negro candidates are seeking public offices there for the first time in more than fifty years and will probably be elected.

VEP has maintained a continuous program in Jefferson County (Birmingham) where Negro registration has risen from 10,000 in April, 1962 to more than 23,000 as of April, 1964. Rejections are still high at the registrar's office, many of them resulting from racial discrimination. In counties such as Dallas (Selma) and many other Black Belt Counties, it takes real courage for a Negro to seek to register. Here, they have suffered harassment, intimidation, and physical violence from private citizens and law enforcement officials. And in Wilcox and Lowndes Counties, where there are more Negroes than whites, every Negro applicant has been rejected and there is not a single registered Negro voter.

The registration books are open only two days each month in most Alabama counties and this makes it difficult to get many people registered even where discrimination is not very strong. During July, the books are open for a week in the rural counties and VEP has supported a special project during this period through a statewide organization known as the Alabama State Coordinating Association for Registration and Voting (ASCARV).

Reliable registration figures are hard to come by in Alabama and VEP estimated the total Negro registration in the state to be 90,000 as of January 1, 1964, however, Governor George Wallace subsequently stated that his state had 105,000 Negro voters.

VEP will support a massive rural county program in July, 1964 and will probably continue programs in the TVA area, Gadsden, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile, Macon County and Dallas County. ~~and will plan~~ New programs will be planned for Tuscaloosa, Anniston, and other areas during the summer and fall.

ARKANSAS

Arkansas has no registration law or procedure for voting other than the requirement for the payment of an annual one dollar poll tax. We know of no racial discrimination in the acceptance of poll tax payments nor in the right of persons to vote in elections in this state. The poll tax may be paid at any time between February and October 1st and qualifies the tax payer to vote in all elections coming between October 1 of the year in which the tax is paid and September 30 of the following year. This is a good "registration" deadline for the November general elections but seems much too early for primary elections. Arkansas is a one party state where nomination in the Democratic Primary is tantamount to election. The Democratic Primary election is held in July and is usually the most important election held in the state but in order to vote in the July primary, one must have paid his poll tax prior to October 1 of the preceding year.

Because of the fact that all effort must be duplicated each year, VEP has only conducted a few projects in Arkansas, such as Pine Bluff and Little Rock; however, a massive statewide program is planned for the late summer of 1964 in every county with a substantial Negro population.

FLORIDA

With the exception of a few North Florida Counties, registration by Negroes is fairly simple and the registration results under VEP have really been outstanding in this state. Florida releases periodic reports showing the total registration in each county by race and by political party and a satisfactory check can be made on our programs. One of the most successful VEP programs to date was conducted in Dade County (Miami) where 9,403 new registrants were added during the fiscal year. Much of the success of this program was due to the personal leadership of Weldon Rougeau, a CORE field secretary, who had charge of the program and who was able to get excellent cooperation from other organizations in the area. CORE conducted a program in Gadsden County (Quincy) and the 875 new Negro registrants obtained there was twice as many as the total Negro voters the county had. Tallahassee presented a fine example of team work by CORE, NAACP, and local groups, white and colored, working to increase voter registration.

NAACP was given assignments in Alachua, Polk, Jackson, Marion, Orange, Pinellas, Hillsborough, Volusia, and Duval Counties, all of which resulted in substantial new voters. All of the above assignments will probably be renewed during the summer and fall of 1964 with other counties being added.

GEORGIA

With the exception of Southwestern Georgia, registration by Negroes in this state does not prove very difficult and VEP results have been among the highest of any state, with more than 60,000 new voters added during the past two years. In Savannah, the Chatham County Crusade for Voters worked with the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to add more than 5,000 new voters to the rolls of that county. The Savannah project was the location of a voter registration film soon to be released under the title "Right Now", and in which VEP is one of several sponsors. SCLC sponsored a VEP program in Albany through the Albany Movement and conducted projects throughout the state in cooperation with the Statewide [redacted] Registration Committee.

The Atlanta program continues under the auspices of the All Citizens Registration Committee, a local group made up from representatives of several different organizations. This city will have neighborhood registration soon and will see Negro deputy registrars for the first time. Registration will take place at various schools from five to nine P.M. and should result in an increase of Negro registration in Fulton County to approximately 70,000.

NAACP has conducted successful projects in Augusta, Brunswick, Rome, and others and in DeKalb and Peach Counties. The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee continues work in the "hard core" areas of Lee, Terrell and Sumter Counties where results cannot be measured simply in terms of new registrants but ~~which~~ ~~is~~ are reflected by the overcoming of fear and by other intangibles.

It is anticipated that when the Georgia Legislature meets in special session soon that the present May 2 registration deadline will be extended to July for the primary and later still for the November general election. This will make possible the addition of thousands of new voters this summer.

LOUISIANA

Next to Mississippi, VEP results have been lower than any other state. Reports indicate that this results from the serious racial discrimination ~~in~~ on the past of many parish registrars. VEP has supported a continuous program in Orleans Parish under the direction of the Coordinating Council of Greater New Orleans. Only 425 new voters were added to the rolls in New Orleans during the year but many hundreds more sought to register and were rejected on various grounds. Considerable work was done by the local group to keep thousands of Negroes who were already registered from being purged.

Most of the work outside New Orleans has been under CORE for the past year, with heavy emphasis in the Sixth Congressional District of Louisiana. The Justice Department has filed several suits regarding discrimination by parish registrars and they were successful in one extremely important case which involved state officials and 21 parish registrars. Under the terms of an injunction issued early in 1964 in UNITED STATES v. LOUISIANA, the 21 named registrars are enjoined from certain discriminatory practices which, if obeyed, should greatly aid the cause of Negro voter registration. All 21 of the named parishes were assigned to CORE but it is too early to tell what results can be achieved there. The entire Louisiana program will very likely be continued through September of 1964.

MISSISSIPPI

This state presents more resistance to would-be Negro voters than any other state and offers more intimidation and violence to Negroes than all the others combined. VEP has only been able to add 3,871 voters to the rolls in Mississippi during the past two years, a figure lower than the results from a single small city like Brunswick or Decatur, Georgia, or Winston-Salem, North Carolina. The total Negro registration in the state is approximately 28,000, representing only 6.6% of the Negroes 21 years of age or older. But here, as in Southwestern Georgia and Dallas and Wilcox Counties in Alabama, the success of the VEP program cannot be measured solely in terms of new registrants.

Mississippi has a long history of intimidation and violence against Negroes who seek to register and with the rather large number of cases of injury and death to their persons and destruction of their property, it is little wonder that Negroes developed a fear of attempting to do anything which the white people of that state were opposed to. The first Annual Report of VEP carried seven pages on the Greenwood Project which was described there as being "in many ways considered to be one of the most successful of the VEP supported programs." Despite the massive jailing of citizens, shooting of registration workers, burning of property and other acts of violence and intimidation of Negroes in Leflore County, more than 2,000 Negroes have gone to the Courthouse in Greenwood to attempt to register. Many were never permitted inside and the majority of those who made it inside were rejected by the registrar. This same story has been repeated in Hattisburg and other cities. VEP has expended more than $50,000 in Mississippi and feels that valuable research materials have been gathered from the project and that we have truly helped "to develop educational programs which will be most effective in providing voters with the knowledge and will to register," one of the major objectives of the Voter Education Project.

The work in Mississippi was under the sponsorship of the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), a Mississippi organization made up of the local representatives of NAACP, SNCC, CORE, SCLC and local organizations. VEP suspended all operations in Mississippi in the fall of 1963 with the exception of an NAACP project in Jackson. Several factors were taken into consideration in reaching this decision. A sizeable portion of the VEP budget had already been spent in Mississippi and the registration results were quite minimal. Sufficient research data had been gathered to more than serve the purposes of the project. No meaningful registration could be expected in the state until the Justice Department is able to wind an effective decree in the long pending broad-purpose suit filed in UNITED STATES v. MISSISSIPPI. The delay in the hearing of this very important suit leaves much to be desired, but if it can ever be decided favorably in accordance with the position of the government, and is then vigorously enforced, it may be possible for registration to move in that state. Until this happens, it does not appear to be wise for VEP to put any more of its already limited funds into Mississippi. We only hope that the situation improves before VEP goes out of existence, but it will not change appreciably without massive federal action.

NORTH CAROLINA

This state has few restrictions which might prevent Negroes from registering and it is considered one of the better states for the VEP program. Many counties permit registration only during a 3-week period preceding an election and this means, "no election-no registration." NAACP conducted programs during the year in Guilford, Johnson, Brunswick, and Harnett Counties, and in Durham in cooperation with the Durham Committee on Negro Affairs. The Winston-Salem Urban League conducted a voter education and research program in Forsyth County which was soon followed by an active voter registration program under the joint sponsorship of NAACP and CORE. The American Friends Service Committee sponsored a summer VEP program in Greensboro which netted 803 new voters. Perhaps the biggest increase in the state came about in Charlotte where the VEP program was run by a local group, the Non-Partisan Voter Registration Committee. A local project in Wilson brought 861 new voters and VEP supported SNCC workers aided local residents in getting 1,208 new voters in Raleigh.

VEP plans to support several local projects in the state during the summer and early fall which should result in several thousand additional voters in time for the November elections.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Here we have the most highly organized statewide VEP program of any of the states. The entire state has been organized under a congressional district program with a project now going on in each county in every one of the six congressional districts. Representatives in each county select their local officers and they in turn elect congressional district officers. VEP has now made a direct grant to four districts and will shortly approve the other two. Although the congressional district idea did not get started until the fall of 1963, it has already helped to push South Carolina VEP results beyond that of North Carolina (32,140 to 28,551) and shows promise of giving South Carolina the highest percentage increase in Negro registration. Because of the obvious success of this program, VEP will continue support through the October 5 deadline for registration in that state. Prior to the development of the Fourth Congressional District program, NAACP conducted a highly successful program in the city of Greenville.

TENNESSEE

It now appears that there are no restrictions to Negro voter registration in Tennessee except for some continuing discrimination in rural counties like Haywood and Fayette Counties, but which reach nowhere near the proportion of several years back when federal intervention was necessary. NAACP ~~The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People~~ is by far the major sponsor of VEP programs in this state, for, with exception of a summer YWCA-NSCAF student program in Nashville, NAACP has had the entire state to itself. The results have been good in Memphis, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Nashville, and Jackson. Memphis shows the highest gain of any city with more than 12,000 added during the fiscal year. A large share of the credit for NAACP results over most of the South must be extended to W. C. Patton, NAACP Field Secretary for Voter Registration, for it has been through him that all VEP supported NAACP programs have been directed in Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina. He also serves as President of ASCARV in Alabama, the local organization sponsoring registration in that state.

All of the Tennessee assignments will be renewed for the summer of 1964, with additional cities being added.

TEXAS

Texas, like Arkansas, has no registration procedure other than the payment of a poll tax which amounts to $1.50 in some counties and $1.75 in others. The deadline for the payment of the poll tax is January 31 for all elections held during the remainder of the calendar year. This gives Texas the earliest "registration" deadline for voting in the November General Elections of any state in the nation, more than nine months prior to the elections.

When VEP was first launched, we decided that we would work only in 65 East Texas counties but we were reluctant to support any Texas programs because of the poll tax requirement which necessitated duplicity of effort each year. We had read of the excellent work being done in Texas under a statewide coalition movement. Some of the leaders of the coalition movement decided to incorporate a separate non-partisan organization to work only in the area of voter registration and education under the name of Voters of Texas Enlist (VOTE). This new organization offered us the first real opportunity to work with registration programs involving other than Negroes, for here we could work with white and Latin-Americans as well. Four groups make up the leadership of VOTE, each group having equal representation. They are: (1) Latin-Americans, (2) labor, (3) white liberals, and (4) Negroes.

VEP had received some unsolicited contributions from various individuals active in VOTE and we decided to put a part of this money back into the state through a VEP registration program under the direction of VOTE. As a result of the early success ~~resulting from~~ of the program, we made rather large supplemental grants from our regular VEP budget. The program operated out of a headquarters in Austin and extended throughout the state. Local money was raised to supplement the VEP funds and labor organizations also contributed money in helping with the massive poll tax campaign.

Texas voters went to the polls on November 9, 1963 to vote on a proposal to eliminate the poll tax, but this proposal was rejected. In four major cities, Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Fort Worth, there was a total increase of about 332,000 new voters over 1960 figures as compared with an increase of 180,000 in 1963. It is estimated that the VEP programs were responsible for over 208,000 new poll tax payers by the January 31 deadline, more than 50,000 of ~~which~~ whom were white or Latin-American persons. After the ratification of the Twenty-Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which banned the requirement of a poll tax payment as a prerequisite to voting in federal elections, a new Texas law permitted the issuance of free poll tax receipts during February and early March of 1964. Holders of the free poll tax receipt would only be eligible to vote in federal elections. Some 60,000 free poll tax certificates were issued under the VEP programs, 90% of which were issued to Negroes.

NAACP did some work in the Texas poll tax campaign without benefit of VEP funds but subsequently received VEP support to assist in the "free" poll tax drive. The Texas Council of Voters, a Negro organization, was very active in the ~~V.O.T.E.~~ VOTE programs. Fort Worth and Houston have developed highly organized precinct and block organizations in the Negro areas. Houston has the highest number of Negro voters of any city in the South at the present time, approximately 90,000, but this figure is likely to fall during "election off years" because of the annual poll tax. The Memphis, Tennessee Negro registration of approximately 80,000 is a much more permanent figure and is ~~usually~~ probably the highest in the South.

It is now physically impossible for any one to register or pay a poll tax in Texas and this situation will continue through the remainder of the grants-in-aid program$ of VEP. This is the only state where such a condition exists. The only possible VEP activity which could be supported during the remainder of the program would possibly be in the area of voter education.

VIRGINIA

Registration results in Virginia could be described as "poor" in terms of the 16,520 new voters added in two years, but when one considers the poll tax and other requirements, it may not be as dim as it first appears. As a general rule, new voters have to pay two years poll taxes plus penalties before they can vote, making it a costly proposition.

Negro voter registration witnessed a steady increase between 1940 and 1950 when most of the registration activity was under the sponsorship of the Virginia Voters League, under the leadership of the late Dr. Luther P. Jackson. The League has not been very effective in recent years but could be a major influence in registration and political education if the former interest could be revived over the state. VEP made a grant of $1,000 to the Virginia Voters League in November, ~~of~~ 1963 to help support its organizational structure building.

~~VEP made~~ A small grant was made during the year to the All Citizens Registration Committee of Northern Virginia in support of registration and poll tax programs in that area of the state. The Peninsula Coordinating Committee in Newport News is a well organized and efficiently run organization and received VEP support. The Norfolk VEP program added approximately 1,000 new voters through the Tidewater Voter Project. The Southern Christian Leadership Conference was given grants for registration programs in Danville and Petersburg and the former could be described as highly successful. Richmond, which has a very active local organization, the Crusade for Voters, added 250 new voters during a two-week student YWCA project. NAACP registration in the state has been carried on primarily without benefit of VEP funds but local chapters have been active throughout the state.

As a result of a new Virginia statute, it will be possible for new applicants to register all the way up until October 3 to be eligible to vote in the 1964 General Elections. VEP has been concerned over the apparent lack of initiative on the part of some agencies which could do much for voter registration in Virginia. VEP will shortly make direct grants to local projects in Nansemond County and Portsmouth and will continue support in Newport News and Norfolk. Plans are being made to support a local program in Richmond and possibly in other cities. The entire Fourth Congressional District offers a vast potential for increased registration and field studies are now being made by the VEP staff to ascertain the best approach for VEP support.

PLANS FOR THIRD (FINAL) YEAR OF VEP

When the voter project idea was first discussed, the plan was to operate it for approximately two years. When it became apparent that the idea would become a reality and would get started in the Spring of 1962, it was also obvious that a two-year program would end well up into a presidential election year. In order to take full advantage of all of the motivation for registration which an election year brings, the planners of VEP decided to run the grants-in-aid program for approximately 2½ years. VEP will therefore support voter registration programs in each of the southern states up until the deadline for registration for voting in the November General Elections. This will mean until the first week of October in most of the states, with the exception of Texas where the deadline passed last January 31.

In addition to active registration programs, VEP will support some voter education projects which will be designed to help in a number of ways to serve the total purposes of this project. Among those are: (1) support of literacy programs to aid applicants in passing registration tests; (2) programs to explain the use of voting machines or the marking of ballots; (3) classes in government to acquaint voters with an understanding of public officials and their duties and responsibilities; and (4) some pilot "get out the vote" programs in a non-partisan manner.

ANTICIPATED INCOME 1964-65

In order to conduct the final year of the project, VEP has been assured of the following terminal grants from foundations:

Edgar Stern Family Fund	$ 75,000
Taconic Foundation	80,000
Field Foundation	75,000
Total	$230,000

FINAL VEP REPORT

At the conclusion of the active registration programs in October, VEP will immediately set ~~it~~ in motion selected projects to study the effect of increased Negro voter registration in the November General Elections. As soon as the general elections ~~is~~ are over, the staff will then begin to sift through the ~~rather~~ large quantity of data and material which has come into the project office during the life of the project. Dr. Leslie W. Dunbar, Executive Director of Southern Regional Council, Inc., will devote a major share of his time at that stage toward the writing of the FINAL VEP Report. The final report ~~should~~ promises to be a most interesting document which should be of great value for years to come to persons interested in voter registration, political action, human relations and other areas.

FUTURE PLANS

Many of the participants in the VEP program bemoan the announced end for VEP. They praise the great gains made under the program but point out the fact that less than 50% of the Negroes of voting age will be registered in the South by November, ~~of~~ 1964. There is no question about the need for continued registration programs, but we feel that we must pause and review our past activities very carefully before suggesting that the program continue. For this reason, there will be no recommendation regarding the future of ~~the~~ VEP until after we have studied and analyzed our ~~our~~ previous program and written the final report. At that time, we will be prepared to make some recommendation of the future of VEP, but it is not contemplated that the final report will be ready before ~~March of~~ 1965.

Slipping Segregation: Negroes Win Lowering of More Barriers in South

Negro Demonstrations Weaken Dixie Whites' Battle Against Mixing

Macon Integrates Library, Golf Course; More Lunch Counters Open to Negroes

Pockets of Deep Bitterness

By DAVID KELSEY
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

MACON, Ga.—"We've been watching these freedom rides and boycotts in other cities, and we're getting the picture. Even Robert E. Lee finally had to surrender, didn't he?"

Thus Edgar Wilson, crew-cut mayor of this Deep South city, assesses the impact of the spreading Negro campaign to speed up integration through public demonstrations. Coming as they do from the top municipal official in this segregation stronghold, his words point up an important shift now developing in the attitudes of many Southern whites toward the question of segregation. After a year of often intense racial strife—climaxed by the recent arrest of more than 700 marching and praying Negro demonstrators in Albany, Ga.—a growing number of Dixie whites are resigning themselves to the inevitability of integration. Some whites once adamantly opposed to any integration are even assuming active roles in efforts to make the transition as smooth as possible.

This change in Southern attitudes was made abundantly clear in recent days in Wall Street Journal interviews with scores of businessmen, government officials, Negro and white leaders, students and men-in-the-street in six Dixie states. Though the sit-ins, freedom rides, boycotts and mass marches have churned up fresh bitterness in race relations in some communities, such as Jackson, Miss., and New Orleans, the demonstrations more often have convinced Southern whites that the segregation fight is futile and the time for compromise has arrived.

"The demonstrations have caused a thinning in the ranks of the hard-core opposition to integration," declares A. P. Tureaud, legal counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Louisiana. "Many whites who had opposed integration on the grounds that more time was needed are gradually coming to the realization that it's here and it should be handled in the best way possible. The significant thing is that a middle ground is developing for those whites who are ready to accept integration, however reluctantly."

A Texas Town Acquiesces

Marlin L. Brockette, white superintendent of schools in the southern Texas industrial city of Orange, voices much the same sentiment. "Generally, our folks have accepted integration as a fact," the school official declares. Orange so far has not been the scene of any integration demonstration, but "if the local Negroes felt integration was just marking time, a push would probably be made and most of us wouldn't be indignant at all," says Mr. Brockette.

The signs of compromise are often subtle. For example, in Orange, where about 25% of the 26,000 residents are Negro, the "colored" signs on service station restrooms have come down in recent weeks without incident. The Orange Memorial Hospital is preparing to integrate its staff dining rooms Feb. 1, and some lunch counters in town are starting to serve Negroes for the first time.

Despite the fervent segregationist views prevailing in Mississippi, in Greenville, the bus and train depots have been voluntarily integrated without the pressure of a court order. A variety store in the city recently announced it would begin accepting applications from Negroes for sales jobs, though the move didn't come until Negro leaders protested to the manager about job discrimination.

In Columbus, Ga., county commissioners a few months ago ordered the local airport desegregated, and about the same time the city's bus line decided to end segregation on its vehicles. Businessmen now are quietly laying plans to integrate the town's lunch counters within the next month or so.

Changes in Macon

Perhaps nowhere in the deep South has desegregation been carried out at a more rapid pace than here in Macon—only 100 miles from the strife-torn city of Albany. Since last May residents of the one-time capital of Georgia have watched racial barriers ripped down at the local golf course and the public library, and they have seen Negroes eat for the first time at 19 formerly segregated lunch counters. In addition, five Negro women, formerly employed as cleaning women at local department stores, have become sales clerks, the first of their race to hold such jobs here. Negro leaders here are confidently planning to seek a start on school desegregation next September.

For a town which until two years ago was the home of the Grand Imperial Dragon of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Macon has had surprisingly little trouble in the course of its moves toward desegregation. Robed Ku Kluxers formed a motorcade last October to protest the steps toward integration, and later shots were fired into an empty Negro home. But most Macon citizens appear to have tacitly approved the lowering of segregation barriers.

"Most of us didn't want any part of the trouble that cities around us have been experiencing," says a white member of a secret Macon businessmen's committee which spearheaded the integration drive. "We contacted cities like Atlanta and Savannah which have had trouble in the past, and we found out quickly what it could mean. In Savannah we learned a Negro boycott cut retail sales as much as 50% in some places. Stores weren't the only ones hurt, either. Bankers, insurance men, small loan companies—all of them felt it."

With these facts fresh in mind, the committee of businessmen acted quickly when local Negroes took seats at a lunch counter last July to open their campaign to integrate such facilities. "As soon as they began seating themselves at the counter, I walked up to one I knew well and asked him to talk things over," recalls one businessman. The Negro agreed, and the demonstration was halted. "Later we formed a committee of leading Negro and white citizens and before long we had things worked out."

Impact of Demonstrations

Macon Negro leaders are convinced the Negro demonstrations and agitation in other Southern cities played a major role in speeding desegregation in Macon. "There's no question that the action in other cities has accelerated our progress here," declares William Randall, a Negro building contractor and director of the Macon chapter of the NAACP.

In Memphis, Negro and white leaders alike point to demonstrations as the key to the rapid integrating pace being set in that city. "Every advancement we've had can be attributed at least in part to demonstrations of some sort—sit-ins, marches, stay-at-homes," says the Rev. H. C. Nabrit, a prominent Negro leader.

Rev. Nabrit is a member of a biracial committee set up on an informal basis some months ago to ease racial frictions quietly, sometimes secretly. He and other Negro leaders confirm that an agreement has been reached with merchants to desegregate downtown store facilities—eating places, restrooms, drinking fountains—on or before next Feb. 20. Memphis newspapers have made no comment on the plans, and white leaders are also keeping mum about them.

The agreement to integrate store facilities was based on a compromise. The Negroes agreed to stop sit-ins during the Christmas rush and January sales events provided they were promised action by Feb. 20, says H. T. Lockard, state NAACP president. Explains Rev. Nabrit: "There are a goodly number of outsiders from Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi who come in for Christmas shopping and the January sales. It was the consensus that we should wait until February to avoid trouble." Before we began talks we had had sit-ins for 18 months, but we agreed to desist in November." Though Rev. Nabrit is convinced the white merchants acted in good faith, he asserts demonstrations would be redoubled if the deadline passed with no action.

Desegregating the Zoo

The move to relax segregation rules at Memphis stores has been preceded by a whole series of desegregation steps in other fields, often traceable, at least in part, to public agitation by Negroes. "We try first in the courts, but it usually takes demonstrations to get action," says the NAACP's Mr. Lockard. A suit was filed in 1956 to integrate city buses, he notes, but it wasn't until Negroes started sitting where they pleased and several arrests were made that integration was finally carried out in mid-1960. Demonstrations also preceded the integration of the Overton Park Zoo in the fall of 1960 and public library facilities early last year.

The pace of desegregation in Memphis has picked up in recent months. After the fall term of school started, 14 Negro students quietly entered previously all-white schools. Then two weeks ago the city desegregated three municipal golf courses. Last Tuesday the Memphis Park Commission proposed a plan of "gradual desegregation" which would integrate all the city's parks and playgrounds over the next 10 years. Negro leaders, however, indicate the plan would move too slowly to suit them.

While there's ample evidence that public demonstrations have softened white resistance to integration, it's also clear that in some communities the marches and sit-ins have made whites more determined than ever to maintain the status quo. This is particularly true in Mississippi and Alabama, where segregation forces are the strongest. Most white leaders in these states maintain the Negro tactics will lead only to further racial friction in factories, business dealings and wherever else whites come in contact with Negroes.

"White people around here are growing more resentful about this whole business, and I've never seen them so determined to resist," states Everette G. Truly, a Natchez, Miss., attorney and treasurer of the local White Citizens Council, a segregationist organization. "Those Negroes don't realize what they're doing. They're breaking down all lines of communications between the two groups, and they've made the whites suspicious of every move. A few years ago when a Negro bumped into you, you didn't think anything of it. Now you look to see if it was deliberate."

A Restaurant Is Closed

For an idea of Natchez whites' determination to resist Negro integration efforts, one only has to walk through the bus station there. A "closed" sign hangs across the door of the station's only restaurant. The restaurant was shut down two months ago in what white leaders describe as a "precautionary measure" against Negro efforts to integrate the station. The restaurant shutdown has worked a hardship on Negro riders. Previously they could eat in a segregated section of the station restaurant, but now they have to go five blocks to the nearest Negro restaurant. Whites, on the other hand, just have to go down the block to grab a bite to eat.

In Clarksdale, Miss., race relations are tense because of a boycott being conducted against white merchants by Negroes. The boycott began in early December when Clarksdale's mayor, W. S. Kincade, ruled that bands from the town's two Negro schools couldn't march in the annual Christmas parade.

The boycott failed to produce a reversal of the mayor's decision, though some white merchants in the northern Mississippi town saw volume plummet. "At the height of the boycott before Christmas our sales were 35% to 40% below a year earlier," says Ray Brake, manager of Braber's department store on Yazoo St.; Negroes normally account for about half the store's sales. Mr. Brake, says, however, that sales in recent weeks have picked up markedly and are now running ahead of a year earlier "partly because of an influx of new white customers and partly because the boycott is weakening."

The Christmas parade has passed, of course, and the original goal of getting permission for the Negro bands to march in the parade has given way to newer demands. For one thing, the Clarksdale Negroes want local merchants to begin hiring members of their race as sales clerks. "This would have the same effect as cutting my throat," says one Clarksdale merchant who is determined to resist the Negro demand.

New heat recently has been added to the controversy. Two weeks ago five Negro leaders were sentenced to six months in jail and ordered to pay $500 fines for their part in the boycott. They were convicted under a state law against conspiring to commit an act injurious to trade or commerce. The Negroes have appealed the convictions, however, and are now free on $2,500 bonds.

Despite these sometimes sizable pockets of strong resistance to integration, there is little question that Southerners generally are wearying of the fight. Standing on a street corner in Macon, Barbara Brickle, a 19-year-old bookkeeper who describes herself as "against integration," says bitterly: "Negroes ought to keep their place. I know they have to improve themselves, but they don't have to eat with us to do that. And I'd hate to see my little brother have to go to school with them." Then as an afterthought, she adds: "I guess its going to come sooner or later, though."

In his small fifth floor office in Monroe, La., lawyer Robert C. Downing takes note of recent demonstrations in New Orleans and Baton Rouge, where singing Negro students picketed business establishments and marched on state and municipal buildings. Such demonstrations have been anything but beneficial in improving race relations in his town, he declares.

"How can they help when it means the Negroes have declared war on us?' He asks. Nonetheless, the attorney looks upon the struggle as a losing one for the whites. "The white majority here strongly favors segregation and will do everything they can to maintain it. But we've got no weapons, and the Negroes have the strongest one of all—the U.S. Supreme Court."

Job Opportunity, Voting Rights Aired At Meeting

Atl. World 2-26-64

DALLAS, Texas — (ANP) — Organized labor and Texas liberals got a kick in the pants by several Negro speakers at the Annual Convention of the United Political Convention here at the Statler Hilton hotel last weekend, when job opportunities and voting education reigned as the top topics for panel discussions. San Antonio school administrator Joe Scott raped labor's knuckles, emphasizing the rivalry between the Negro leadership in the UPO and those who are part of the coalition of Latin Americans, labor and liberals.

New criticisms were also heard of the Texas Department of Public Safety for not hiring Negro highway patrolmen.

A series of speakers called for better vocational training and public education for Negroes, speedier integration and greater job opportunities, as well as voter education that would spur qualified Negroes to seek public office.

The convention opened Friday night with a mammoth banquet at which Georgia Senator Leroy Johnson was keynote speaker. Approximately five hundred heard Senator Johnson plead for a continuing "effort on the part of Negroes everywhere to break through the barriers of racial bias and injustice." He gave a historic backlog of Negro accomplishments in all fields of endeavor, and closed his brilliant address with dramatic proof that "we are somebody, and must be treated like somebody."

On Saturday during a panel discussion, Joe Scott charged:

" There has been progress in many areas in Texas, but one area in which there have been no moves toward employment opportunities is within the apprenticeship courses in the labor movement."

"Coalitions are good when all sides have mutal interests," he said, "There are no Negroes in the craft unions—No Negro carpenters, or electricians on the job."

Scott said, "we don't think much of a liberal who won't give us any jobs, when he has the opportunity. And we won't vote for labor's can-

"The average person in Dallas gets 11.8 years of school compared with a national average of 10.2. Yet the average Negro gets only 8.8 years of school in Dallas." he said.

K. R. M. Crooks, an official of the National Urban League told the group:

Negro leaders must motivate and stimulate the youth to better themselves educationally. He said that while the average income in Dallas is $100 a year over the national average, the income of non-whites is $70 under the average for the rest of the country."

A. Maceo Smith, Group Relations Officer for the FHA called integration of neighborhoods the "unfished business of the American Negro." He told the group that they must break down the fallacy that when a Negro moves into a white neighborhood values drop.

Texas Attorney General Waggoner Carr opened his key address with a glowing tribute to J. Philip Crawford, Texas' first State Assistant Attorney General. He said that Crawford had won the respect of the entire state because of his ability.

He opened the panel discussions with an address on "Responsible Citizens Working Together to Meet The Challenge of Change."

"Our form of government," he said, "demands more of the individual than any other system yet devised by man. Possibly, because of this, in the history of the world, the failures of Democracy far outnumber the successes. A nation cannot continue as a Democracy unless its citizens are willing to devote their time and energies to its well being. For freedom and responsibility are opposite sides of the same coin."

Juries Must Be 'Color-Blind'

Southern judges and county officials would do well to note the disturbing frequency with which the U. S. Supreme Court is reviewing — and sometimes overruling —convictions of Negroes by all-white juries. At least one conviction was thrown out simply because the indictment was made by an all-white grand jury.

The Court's criteria apparently is whether Negroes were "systematically and deliberately excluded from the jury or grand jury."

This scarcely seems a valid reason for overturning a guilty verdict, if other facts of the case show that the jury reached a fair and proper decision. If carried to extremes, the Court's thinking could undermine law enforcement throughout the South.

There are many reasons that persons are not called for grand jury service, or even for trial jury service. To base the guilt or innocence of a defendant on the racial composition of a jury or grand jury is racism itself.

The basic reasoning behind the Court's direction is frightening to contemplate, hinting as it does that the presence on a jury of a Negro would provide a more sympathetic consideration of a Negro defendant.

This is exactly why some communities have been reluctant to include Negroes on juries, and the Supreme Court is ill-advised in feeding these fears and suspicions.

Juries, being composed of humans, are not always unbiased, of course, but if the jury system is to survive, the faith of the courts must be placed in it.

Negroes do serve as jurors in most Southern communities today if they meet the qualifications which are also incumbent on white citizens.

But we trust that all jurors, of whatever complexion, are indeed "color-blind" when judging a defendant on trial.

Negroes Find North Also Resists Pressure Despite Court Ruling

By JAMES MARLOW
AP News Analyst

WASHINGTON (AP) — For three centuries American Negroes had been waiting at the gate that kept them in the Jim Crow cellar of American life. Then on May 17, 1954 the Supreme Court unlocked it for them.

That was 10 years ago but Negroes have been able to push it open only very slowly.

On that far-reaching day in May the court said public school segregation because of a child's race was wrong, that it meant unequal treatment and was therefore unconstitutional. But the ruling really went far beyond schools.

For in effect the court said the very principle of segregation is wrong, which meant from then on Negroes could fight with confidence against all forms of segregation and discrimination in public places.

They have been fighting since. And many white people — including the clergy — who had no racial prejudice but had sat idly by through the decades until 1954 have joined them in the struggle.

But prejudiced whites are an obstinate army who never really believed the Declaration of Independence which said all men are created equal and have tried to ignore or defy the court in preserving segregation and discrimination.

Even some white Christian churches still refuse to let Negroes in. And Negroes are discovering, if they doubted it, that the South has no monopoly on prejudice. They have found it intensely against them in the North, too.

Negroes, with increasing confidence and swelling numbers, have sought to batter down the barriers in a thousand places, a hundred ways, North and South through sit-ins, lie-downs, marches, freedom rides, demonstrations and court fights against discrimination in voting restaurants, schools, housing, unions.

As the struggle grows, so does violence, which causes national concern.

Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration of Independence in 1776 and had slaves but sought to end slavery, also had concern about the future when he thought about the condition of the Negro in America.

He said: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just."

If it had not been for that court decision of 10 years ago the American Negro might still be suffering discrimination in comparative silence for the law —or the court's interpretation of the law — was again him.

Police would probably have felt far freer to smash Negro protests because of a decision of the Supreme Court in 1896 which said segregation was constitutional.

It wasn't until 20 years later that Negroes were able to begin chipping away at that decision. This was against a discriminatory housing ordinance in Louisville. But the fight thereafter was tortured and slow.

The real march began in the 1930s when the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People decided on a strategy which was crowned with the final triumph of 1954.

This was the strategy: but by bit, case by case, fight all the way up to the Supreme Court specific cases of discrimination, like segregation of Negroes on buses, trains, in graduate schools. They won case after case but never total victory.

In each specific case the court might say the segregation practiced was wrong without ruling out the principle of segregation. That finally came 10 years ago, thus wiping out completely the decision of 1896.

Negro agitation will increase this summer and even if Congress approves the kind of civil rights bill the Negroes want it will still be, as their leadership has said, only a part of what they feel is their due.

NO. 3 • COUNCIL FOR CHRISTIAN SOCIAL ACTION • UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST

JMC
JTC

"We, the people of the United States"...

INTRODUCTION

In the United States one third of our adults do not vote in presidential elections and half do not vote in congressional elections, according to the report of the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation, November 1963. The problem is serious, for in this nation there is basic power in the use of the ballot. We change things through the vote. Furthermore, as a result of intimidation, discrimination, despair, and lack of training, a disproportionate number of those not voting are Negro.

The Council for Christian Social Action, in cooperation with the Committee for Racial Justice Now of the United Church of Christ and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, has prepared this action guide as one of a series on Racial Justice Now. In it we are lifting up various facets of the task before us on which we believe Christians are called to work; and focusing largely on the situation in the South because that is where the constitutional right to vote is most forcibly denied. However, the approaches suggested are generally useful, and the churches in northern metropolitan centers where minority group populations are large will need to take a serious look at their responsibility for work in this field.

This guide is pointed particularly for use in church social action groups and civil rights organizations, but it could be very readily used by other types of organizations and groups. Many of the suggestions and resources are from political parties and other secular sources.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH'S RESPONSIBILITY?

We cannot be spectators on the stage of history; we are under orders as Christians to become involved in the total life of the world. We are under orders to work for all those things which make for life that upholds human values and for conditions in which man can grow toward wholeness and life abundant. Christians, then, who care about their brothers, must work for effective structures which give men opportunity freely to effect change toward a more responsible society of free and equal men. As sons of God we are commissioned to acknowledge that the whole world is under his rule, and to be obedient to his rule.

The church, therefore, must be concerned when citizens are denied their rights and are prevented from taking their full responsibility in choosing those values and candidates for leadership in our democracy. This is a denial of the right to be fully man. Are we not called in Christ's spirit to release the captives and to set at liberty those who are oppressed?

WHAT IS THE PROBLEM?

The privilege of sharing in the decision-making process is granted to all citizens by birth or naturalization. The Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution, adopted March 30, 1870, states that this right to vote shall not be abridged or denied to any on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and gives Congress power to enforce this article. An Enforcement Act was passed in 1870, but in 1876 its effect was virtually nullified by the Supreme Court. It was not until 1957 that another civil rights bill was passed to enforce this amendment. The civil rights bill which was passed in June, 1964, and signed by the President on July 3, 1964, will strengthen this power of enforcement to insure the right of every citizen to register and to vote. A realistic appraisal of the present situation, however, indicates how far we are from implementation of the Fifteenth Amendment.

In two years—April 1, 1962-March 31, 1964—more than a half million Negroes were registered to vote in eleven Southern states. The estimated total number of Negroes registered as of April 1, 1964, in these same eleven Southern states was 1,937,982. The number of Negroes not registered was 3,078,118.

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.
> The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
>
> Amendment XV, Sections I and II
> Ratified March 30, 1870

The percentage, therefore, of the Negro population of voting age registered to vote was 38.6%. Tennessee had the highest percentage with 67.2% registered. Mississippi had the lowest figure—6.7%.[1] Yet this increase in voters brought scant increase in the ratio of Negro to white voters in that region. It moved the percentages of Negroes among the voting population from 10% to 12%.

The widest disparity was reported to be in Mississippi, where Negroes comprise 42% of the population and 5.3% of the voters. In particular counties in certain areas of the South it is even worse. In Dallas County, Alabama, where 55% of the population is Negro, the percentage of voters is only 2.3%. East Feliciana Parish, Louisiana, has about 2,600 white voters and 120 Negro voters, though the white population is in the minority. (NEW YORK TIMES report, November 24, 1963)

The Voter Education Project, a program of the Southern Regional Council, is a non-partisan program endorsed by both the Republican and Democratic Parties. It concentrates its activities in the South because this is where non-whites have been intimidated and kept from registering.

It is the area of lowest registration in the nation. Many also have lacked understanding of the political processes and of their rights as citizens. The right to vote in a democracy is precious; participation in decision-making is a symbol of worth and dignity. Responsibility for using this precious right is also basic to good citizenship.

The stories of Negroes who have been prevented by devious means from registering to vote are many. Hundreds of Negroes have lost their jobs, been arrested, jailed, beaten, shot and sometimes even killed for attempting to exercise their constitutional right to register as voters. In some counties the risk is so great it takes unusual courage to go to the city hall and ask to be registered.

While many Southern Negroes have been directly prevented from voting, many more have been deterred by what has happened to others. In addition to this, many thousands of Negroes, North and South, have neglected to register through ignorance, carelessness, and feelings of futility and despair, doubting that their participation would make any significant difference.

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.
> Amendment XIV, Section I
> Ratified July 23, 1868

HOW CAN CHURCHES HELP?

1. Organize and conduct a voter registration drive. Registration requirements and procedures often constitute a major obstacle to voting. No mattter how interested and excited a person is on Election Day, if he lives in any one of 46 states and has not previously registered, he cannot vote.

In most of these states, the registration books are closed well before the election – before political campaigns hit full stride, before peak interest in the upcoming election is achieved. Therefore, the registration of voters must be accomplished during a period of relatively little political activity. It requires organized effort to determine how many persons are unregistered, find out who they are, locate them, contact them, and get them registered. It is also important for the Committee to identify critical issues directly affecting the community so that the individual can see how his voting may result in meaningful change where he is.

A. The first step in programming a registration drive is to organize a steering committee of four or five knowledgeable individuals who have a sincere interest in solving the problem of registration. The committee could well be the social action committee of the church or a subcommittee appointed for this particular project. This committee should have the responsibility of organizing various committees to locate the unregistered individuals and get them registered.

B. Next, a committee of two or three persons should have the responsibility of determining the number of unregistered persons in the community. The procedure for doing this is as follows:

1. Locate the identifiable Negro-American wards and/or precincts in the city, and secure from the Board of Elections the number of persons registered therein. Calculate the total for all wards and/or precincts. This represents the approximate total of Negro registration in the city.
2. Obtain the total number of non-whites in your city who are 21 years of age or over. (This information can be found in Table 20 of the Bureau of the Census publication for each state, entitled GENERAL POPULATION CHARACTERISTICS, 1960. The volume for your state may be ordered from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., or from any field office of the Department of Commerce.)
3. Subtract the total number of Negroes registered from the non-white population 21 years and over. The difference would be an approximate number of Negroes who are not registered to vote. (Obviously, however, this procedure can also be utilized in any ward or precinct where voter registration is needed.)

C. A small committee then should have the responsibility for locating the unregistered persons by name, address, and telephone number; they should also be located by ward and precinct numbers (or similar political subdivision). This information should be noted on a set of file cards made in duplicate, one set filed alphabetically by last name, the other filed by street.

Where a city directory is available, it lists residents by streets. Checking the voting list against the directory is the easiest way to ascertain non-voters. The limitations are: 1) Directory information is usually at least one year old; this is a great handicap when the population is mobile. 2) Directories are least thorough where the population is highly concentrated.

Unregistered persons can also be located by:

1. Securing a list of registered voters from the Board of Elections and checking it against:
   a. Organizational lists
   b. Church membership lists
   c. Residents of housing projects
   d. Street telephone directories
   e. Teachers directories
   f. College personnel directories
   g. Files of college registrars, and any other lists
2. Using a street telephone directory and telephoning persons in the Negro-American area who have a telephone to see if they are registered to vote. If they are not registered, their names, addresses, and telephone numbers should be noted; the caller should be sure to ask if there are additional members of the household who are eligible to vote; if so their names and pertinent information about them should be noted also.
3. Canvassing door-to-door in the Negro-American wards and/or precincts.
4. Having workers located in shopping centers, in front of supermarkets, etc., asking people if they are registered to vote. The names and addresses of those not registered should be obtained for the files.

D. Having spent some time in locating the unregistered persons in the above manner, the workers now should contact them for the purpose of getting them registered. The job should not be too difficult because the workers are now in possession of their names, addresses, and telephone numbers. Contact is established as follows:

1. The chairman of the steering committee should send a short letter to each person in the card file urging the individual to register and listing the times, dates, and places to register. The letter should also mention that someone will call upon him to explain the importance of registering and exactly how to do it.

2. Teams of volunteer workers should be organized for the purpose of house-to-house canvassing. Each worker should be given 25 or 30 cards with names of the unregistered persons and instructions to call on these persons at their homes to emphasize the importance of being registered, to explain the mechanics of registration, and to urge them to register. In places where registration by mail is permitted, the worker can explain the procedure and help a person to register on the spot. The workers should also tell the unregistered persons that they will be called at a later time to see if they have registered.
3. Transportation systems should be set up to bring the unregistered persons to registration centers. Prospective registrants could make appointments by telephone, and drivers could be dispatched to take them to the centers. Workers could serve as babysitters to enable parents, especially mothers, to register.

Volunteer workers can be recruited in many ways. Organizations should be able to enlist membership support by presenting the registration drive as an important group project which would be meaningful to the community and in which all members could participate. The steering committee should seek the cooperation of as many organizations as possible, particularly young people's and college groups. Letters urging support could be sent to leaders of organizations, some of whom might be included on the steering committee or other committees. In publicizing your effort to recruit volunteers, stress the fact that your activities are non-partisan, and are already underway, not just being discussed.

Voter registration is a laborious process, but the burden can be lightened if the program is logically planned and executed. Don't forget: before any attempt is made to register, an estimation must be made of the population that is unregistered; names, addresses, and telephone numbers must be obtained. Following that, the unregistered may be brought to the registrar's office. Such an organized effort will help to insure maximum citizen participation on Election Day.[2]

LEARNING FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS

Both REPUBLICAN and DEMOCRATIC PARTIES are interested in voter registration on a non-partisan basis and can provide helpful material. Their headquarters can give you an election calendar telling you when the primaries are, the registration period for the general elections, and certain other pertinent facts that will be helpful. Texas, for example, has no registrations as such. Voters must have paid a poll tax before January 31 to be eligible to vote in 1964. In New Hampshire registration deadlines vary throughout the state. Delaware has no primaries. Nominations for U. S. Representative are made at party conventions. Oklahoma allows registration by mail. North Dakota has no registration requirement.

Suggestions regarding techniques can be gleaned from the experience of a voter registration project in Greensboro, N. C., sponsored by the AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE. The three-week project was centered in the Negro-American community, although they never discouraged white persons from registering. In this county (Guilford) in 1960, 66.8% of the white population was registered, whereas only 33.5% of the Negroes were registered. Ten interracial teams of two were sent out weekday evenings from 7:00 to 9:00 and Saturday afternoons from 2:00 to 6:00. (See Appendix I for a description of techniques used.)

2 For most of the material in the above outline of methods we are indebted to Dr. T. L. Spraggins, Department of History, Virginia Union University, Richmond, Virginia.

THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE has had wide experience across the South in voter registration. They have set up training for workers, have assigned staff supervisors to states and areas, and are concentrating large resources on preparing Negroes to gain and use responsibly the power of the ballot. (See Appendix II for some of their charts and suggestions for organizing.)

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES COMMISSION ON RELIGION AND RACE has had some experience in helping on voter registration. For example, early in 1964 they brought a group of clergy into Canton, Mississippi, to aid the attempts of Negroes to register to vote. According to the NEW YORK TIMES (March 2, 1964), "The Rev. B. Elton Cox, a CORE field secretary from High Point, N. C., contended it was highly significant that Negroes had been permitted to line up in front of the court house. This is a milestone, not just a stepping stone, in Mississippi," he declared. Perhaps the observers from the NCC and their interviews in the community did help prevent violence. Of 260 who waited outside the registrar's office one day and 50 the next, a total of seven got inside to take the test.

> Those seven must have sensed the futility anew as they passed through the office door of L. F. Campbell, the circuit clerk and voter registrar. On its glass window is a red, blue and grey sticker bearing a Confederate battle flag and the message, "Support Your Citizens' Council," a militantly segregationist organization.

Negroes in Madison County, Mississippi, are 72% of the population of 32,904 persons. In 1962, 1.1% of those Negroes were registered to vote—97% of the white adult population were registered. The CORE field secretary reported on March 2, 1964, that of 1,000 attempts to register only 30 have been successful in the recent campaign.

Since this beginning, the Council for Christian Social Action, in cooperation with the Committee for Racial Justice Now of the United Church of Christ, has taken some responsibility for continuous observation and vigilance in relation to the Canton situation.

The Presbyterians have worked in Hattiesburg, Mississippi, to bring pressure on the registrars there by bringing in relays of clergy to demonstrate, and seeing that they are committed to continue until there is some real change. There have been some arrests and harassment, but persistent efforts are being continued.

Projects of this kind have operated through the summer of 1964. The National Council of Churches Commission on Religion and Race has been involved in 20 cities in Mississippi. They took responsibility for financing and staffing the orientation and training center for the volunteers going to participate in the Mississippi summer project in 1964. They were involved in observing voter registration and also in going to people on a person-to-person basis to help them understand the registration forms, etc.

The futility of trying to register large numbers when the whole society is overwhelmingly organized to prevent it led to the NCC staff's becoming quasi-official observers at the efforts to establish the Freedom Democratic Party. One staff member testified to the Credentials Committee at the Democratic Convention, for example, regarding the Freedom Party.

There are creative possibilities, it seems, no matter how difficult the situation is. The fact that COFO (Council of Federated Organizations) and the Mississippi Freedom Party were shut out in their registration efforts resulted in the birth of a parallel political organization which grew from a handful of people to a powerful political institution which commanded the attention of the American people and of the President himself at Atlantic City.

THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON REGISTRATION AND VOTING PARTICIPATION sets forth in their report twenty-one standards which they believe, if implemented, would guarantee the right to vote of every citizen, thus assuring in fact what we proclaim in theory—the supremacy of the individual in American political life.[3] In accepting their report and extending the Commission by Executive Order, President Johnson said:

> I am told that it is easier today to buy a destructive weapon, a gun, in a hardware store, than it is to vote. The whole problem that we have in each state in this Union, in each precinct in each state, is to make it easier for people to vote instead of harder. Why should we make it difficult for people to vote? It is easier now to register and enlist in the Service in many cases than it is to vote. Why should a man have an easy path provided for him to go and fight, but a difficult path for him to go and vote?

2. Develop a program of citizenship education or assist with one.

A second way in which churches and church members can take positive action is to work in the area of citizenship education. In addition to voter education which interprets the need to vote and provides motivation and information concerning procedures, fundamental education in citizenship is required for a large group of citizens. There are estimated to be ten million illiterates in our nation. Because of discrimination in schools, employment, voting, etc., a large number of those in this underprivileged group are non-white. Many of the civil rights groups are developing programs of education to overcome this handicap and to help prepare adults for full participation as citizens now or as soon as situations can be changed to make possible equal access to the polls.

3 See Appendix III for listing of 21 standards.

LEARNING FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS

One excellent example of this is the development of the Citizenship Education Project of the Division of Higher Education and the American Missionary Association of the Board of Homeland Ministries financed by a grant from the Field Foundation and conducted in close cooperation with the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in training connected with their work in voter registration. About once a month the staff bring people from all over the South for a five-day training program to prepare them to organize citizenship schools (of 14 persons each) in their own communities. Such a citizenship school meets in two-hour sessions two nights a week for three months.

The course includes teaching people to read and write. It trains them to fill out tax and social security forms, to write checks, reconcile a bank statement, and to do simple arithmetic. It shows them how to read a newspaper critically and gainfully, and helps them to understand some of the basic facts about the social revolution taking place, as well as the importance of participation in the political decision-making by voting.

After conducting such groups the teachers are brought back for a weekend refresher course. The leadership team consists of skilled and sensitive persons who help the potential teachers, for example, to deal with a person's shame for not being able to read and write. They demonstrate how the teachers may draw out the potential leadership of their students, and help them to understand that many Negroes who have not had the opportunity for an education are "like good land that has never been cultivated." Of course, registration for voting is a part of the goal of such citizenship training. (Their workbook and other materials are available upon request. Write to the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, 332-34 Auburn Avenue, N.E., Atlanta, Georgia 30303.)

THE NORTHERN STUDENT MOVEMENT has developed a program in northern cities in which volunteers tutor Negro students, helping them to make up for inadequate education, poor background and attendance records. This supplement to the regular public education fills a real need for preparing youth to be first-class citizens; it will prevent such a high dropout rate in the schools, and should be a significant deterrent to juvenile delinquency. For information about this program write to the Northern Student Movement, 73 Morningside Drive, New York, N. Y. 10027.

Interpretation and education on why voting is important are often needed before motivation for registration and participation in the election process is felt. THE AFL-CIO COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION can provide some interpretive material. A pamphlet on WHY VOTE? THE ABC'S OF CITIZENSHIP published by the Channin L. Bete Co., Inc., Greenfield, Massachusetts, is used by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in its citizenship education training.

3. Encourage persons to work in the local precinct of the political party of their choice. Getting all persons registered to vote is only the first step. Educating them to be able to register and to vote intelligently is another step. But it is not enough just to vote even though this is primary.

Delegates go from the precinct to the county convention, from the county convention to the state convention, from the state convention to the national convention. Participation in the political structures begins in the precinct. As one civil rights leader remarked, "If you don't work in the precinct you are lost."

It is important to be there when the decisions are made. Local and neighborhood issues are discussed, such as the need for better lighting, improvement of roads, and adequate sewage. In addition there are persons needed to run the voting machines on election day. Negro and white persons alike should have access to this paid employment. The jobs are available to persons who participate actively and show responsibility.

This is just to remind us that voter registration is only the beginning of the process of helping citizens of voting age to be responsible. It

"The most important step a Negro can take is in the direction of the ballot box."
Martin Luther King

is also important to study the issues – local, state, and national – and to participate in the building of machinery, beginning in the precinct. It is a continuing process of facing the obligations and opportunities of citizenship, if we are to be effective in moving our nation in the direction of greater unity between profession and practice.

IN CONCLUSION

All churches wherever they are can work on getting the one third to one half of the adults who never vote registered and prepared to participate intelligently in the political structures by use of the ballot. All churches can inform their people about programs being carried on to eliminate discrimination in voting and can encourage financial support of those programs. The Southern Regional Council is acting as the coordinator for the civil rights groups at work in this field in the South. They accept and distribute funds as needed for the Voter Education Project. Their address is: 5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Atlanta, Georgia, 30303. The organizations cooperating in the Voter Education Project coordinated through the Southern Regional Council are:

- Congress of Racial Equality
- National Association for the Advancement of Colored People
- National Urban League
- Southern Christian Leadership Conference
- Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee

Many churches will find it fruitful and practical to canvass their own neighborhoods or inner-city neighborhoods where non-whites are concentrated and organize a voter registration drive.

Others will be able to encourage their members to volunteer for such drives being sponsored by civil rights groups. The Canton and Hattiesburg, Mississippi, illustrations show concretely one kind of support that can be useful. Many young men and women have postponed graduate school or given a summer or a year to work on a voter registration team full-time in the South under such organizations as CORE, SCLC, AFSC, SNCC, and others.

Some churches will want to provide facilities and/or teachers for the tutoring programs in northern cities. Others will cooperate with civic groups in citizenship training programs or will organize their own in the church. All churches can work for the adoption and enforcement of effective state and local civil rights legislation and for the implementation of the recommendations of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Even when we have strong legislation, concern needs to be expressed that implementation be effective. Complaints must be filed. Test cases will be needed. The right to vote is the cornerstone of a free society. While the Constitution appears to guarantee it, and legislation appears to facilitate its exercise, it will be achieved only when there is a serious and continuing campaign to extend the franchise to those who, through fear or indifference, have never attempted to vote.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal"; . . .
—from the Declaration of Independence

APPENDIX I: Techniques used in the Greensboro voter registration project

"The more we canvassed, the more we realized the challenge in getting people to register to vote. There is a problem not only in getting people to register, but also in informing them and motivating them to vote. We were prepared as we knocked on doors to introduce ourselves as working with the American Friends Service Committee in cooperation with the NAACP and CORE on a voter registration drive. We asked them to come with us to register at the place in the area where our registrars were. We found that now was best. We offered transportation and baby-sitting. As you can imagine, it was often difficult to get a good reception. We found it was better to be asked inside than to talk through a darkened screen door. We tried to be informal and humorous.

"There were many things we could do in this short time in a home. We needed to learn whether the adults had already registered. We tried not to ask this question outright, for if we did it was easy for them to say 'yes' to get rid of us. And yet we often wasted time trying to get people to register when they already had. It was our job to weed out people for the registrar; we were to send those who needed to change their address (or name) and those who needed to reregister if they had not voted in the past six years. We had to be careful not to send those who had registered but didn't understand that they need register only once and those who couldn't read; yet encourage those who could read some, for the oath is not difficult and the registrar will help. We had to overcome their apathy; at the same time we had to educate them about the procedure and importance of registering and voting.

"It was important to learn from what they said how much they knew and cared about voting. We had to direct our conversation to their level of education in answering their questions and dispelling their fears. The local support that is discovered in the process of canvassing should be utilized. Many said they would have liked to help if they had known about our work. Due to lack of preparation and organization, our only answer could be: 'Well, what you can do is talk to your neighbors and people at work and make sure they're all registered and that they vote in the next election.'

"In this respect publicity is important. If people know where to go, they can exercise their own initiative in registering without using our time or the time of those who are more civic-minded. The first Sunday we were there we visited several Negro churches. The ministers had received letters about the campaign before we arrived. Many had it written up in the bulletin and also spoke of it that morning or introduced a group member to make an announcement. We put up posters in the windows of neighborhood stores telling people where they could register. By the end of the first week the campaign had been publicized by both local newspapers and one of the radio stations in town. On Thursday, August 15, we had a featured article in the GREENSBORO RECORD.

"The following Sunday (August 18) we were featured on WEAL's half-hour program 'Viewpoint' at 1:00 p.m. . . .

"Other radio stations were contacted to give spot announcements. The importance of publicity can never be underestimated; there is always more than can be done."

(From the report of the AFSC Voter Registration Project in Greensboro, N. C., pp. 3-4.)

APPENDIX II: Suggestions for a voter registration campaign

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference gives the following suggested outline for planning a voter registration campaign:

Planning a Voter Registration Campaign

A good citizen must be a registered voter. But the job does not stop there. We cannot rest until every citizen is a registered voter. You have been helped to register through this citizenship course. It is now your turn to help your neighbors. Plan a registration drive for your neighborhood or community:

1. Select a site (neighborhood or town) .....
2. What is the size of the Negro population? .....
3. Number of registered voters.....
4. Number of Negroes of voting age .....
5. How many can we get to register? .....
6. During what period of time? (give dates) .....
7. Areas of concentration ....
8. Number of volunteer workers needed to cover area .....
9. Organizations to take part in the drive (churches, voter's leagues, youth groups, clubs) .....

CANVASS YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD

VOTER REGISTRATION CRUSADE

Street or Road_____ Canvasser's Name_____

Block Number_____ Address_____

Dates Worked_____

Box or House Number	Name of Citizen Canvassed	Registered (Yes) (No)	Will register at once	Wishes transportation	Last time voted?	Need to report change of address	Left material	Recommended follow-up

Begin at one corner and circle the block without crossing the street, turning right at each corner. Call at each house or apartment. (PLEASE CHECK EACH ITEM CAREFULLY)

The SCLC also uses the following chart for a canvass of the neighborhood selected for concentrated work. (See p. 8.) They recommend a block party to help neighbors understand the importance of voting, to tell them how and where to register.

Suggested Steps for a Block Party

Have a meeting at your home to help your neighbors to understand the importance of voting, how to register, and where to register.

1. Invite every adult on your street, from corner to corner, to come to your home for an evening of information and fellowship. (In rural communities, select all houses within walking distance.)
2. Have voter registration information and material on hand.
3. Have someone there who can talk on why, how, and where to register.
4. Following speaker, have a discussion on some of your community problems and how voting can help solve them.
5. Tell why your block should have 100% voters.
6. Plan a meeting for the next week to give help to each other. (If possible, arrange to start a Citizenship School.)
7. Plan trips to take people down to register when they are ready.
8. Have someone contact the persons who did not show up at the meeting.

APPENDIX III—Twenty-one standards

The twenty-one standards outlined by the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation in its 1963 Report are as follows:

STANDARD I: Each state should create a Commission on Registration and Voting Participation, or utilize some other existing state machinery to survey in detail its election law and practices.

STANDARD II: Voter registration should be easily accessible to all citizens. [Among suggestions urged by the President's Commission are door-to-door canvassing by deputy registrars as practiced in Idaho, and mobile registration units in precincts or neighborhoods.]

STANDARD III: State residence requirements should not exceed six months.

STANDARD IV: Local residence requirements should not exceed 30 days.

STANDARD V: New state residents should be allowed to vote for President.

STANDARD VI: Voter registration should extend as close to Election Day as possible, and should not end more than three or four weeks before Election Day.

STANDARD VII: Voter lists should be kept current.

STANDARD VIII: No citizen's registration should be cancelled for failure to vote in any period less than four years.

STANDARD IX: Voter registration lists should be used only for electoral purposes.

STANDARD X: States should provide absentee registration for voters who cannot register in person.

STANDARD XI: Literacy tests should not be a requisite for voting.

STANDARD XII: Election Day should be proclaimed a national day of dedication to our American democracy.

STANDARD XIII: Polling places should be so equipped as to eliminate long waiting periods.

STANDARD XIV: Polling places should be open throughout the day and remain open until at least 9 p.m.

STANDARD XV: The states should provide every possible protection against election fraud.

STANDARD XVI: Voting by persons 18 years of age should be considered by the states.

STANDARD XVII: Candidacy should be open to all.

STANDARD XVIII: The right to vote should be extended to those living on federal reservations.

STANDARD XIX: Absentee voting by mail should be allowed for all who are absent from home on Primary or General Election Day.

STANDARD XX: The poll tax as a qualification for voting should be eliminated.

STANDARD XXI: Each state should keep informed of other states' practices and innovations in election administration.

It's a Two-Party South! Republicans Gain Five New Congressmen in Dixie

All GOP Congressional Incumbents Reelected; Breakthrough Hailed

It's a two-party South! There's simply no other conclusion for what happened in the South in the historic elections of 1962.

Item: All Republican congressional incumbents were reelected, every one of them winning handily despite Kennedy intervention in their district or state, and gerrymandering redistricting.

Item: Five brand new Republican Congressmen were elected — two of them in districts in which Republicans failed to nominate candidates in the 1958 mid-term elections, the last comparable year.

Item: Republican candidates smashed through at local and county levels, picking up a host of offices ranging from State Senator to School Board Member.

Item: "Moral victories" were many —a tight Senate race in Alabama and a handful of votes separating the contenders in several congressional districts in which GOP candidates never before were rated a chance.

But "moral victories" aren't seats in Congress. What does count is that in addition to the above, eight more congressional districts in the South must be marked "marginal" because GOP candidates, although losing, polled at least 45% of the vote. The spadework has been done, and GOP candidates will be odds-on choices in the next elections.

A recapitulation of Southern GOP victories, "real" and 'moral", could go on indefinitely. It's sufficient to state that in every area of the South, Republicans scored a major breakthrough. The force of competition for public office is now felt by every officeholder, and the people will reap the benefits.

ALL Democrats Voted with New Frontier--

Southerners Betrayed by Democrats On Very First Vote in New Congress

Republicans Voted For Conservative Committee Leaders

Southern voters were betrayed by their Democratic congressmen on the first vote in the New Congress!

There is no doubt voters in the South intended to send conservatives —Jeffersonians—to represent them in Congress. But on the very first vote, the Democrats deserted them and voted for radical leadership of the House and Senate and their committees.

All Republicans, whether from the North or South, voted for conservative Congressional leadership.

The Kennedy forces, because Democrats are the majority in Congress, won the showdown.

Of all the votes taken in Congress each year, the first is the most important because it decides the leadership and committee chairmanships. Leaders and chairmen can bottle up or push legislation in line with their political philosophy.

To show how this will affect legislation enacted by this Congress, compare the voting records of these Republicans and Democrats in the House:

John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) was chosen Speaker. He was JFK's choice, and was supported by all Democrats. Because he is Speaker, he does not now usually vote. But before the New Frontier came to power he had a voting record of 0%—repeat,

New Congress Organizes; Freshmen Fare Well - - -

GOPs from South Gain Seniority, Win Many of the Top Committee Assignments

Advancing seniority, high-ranking Party posts and top-notch committee assignments for new members marked the organization of the new Congress for Republicans elected from Southern states.

In the House, a Republican from the South is now ranking minority member of one committee, while on two others, GOPs from Dixie rank second, and on three others, third.

Senate assignments were still up in the air at press time, but it was clear Republicans from the South would stand high in seniority.

Topping the list of party assignments was the election of Senator Thruston Morton of Kentucky as the new chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, succeeding Senator Barry M. Goldwater. Senator Goldwater, whose term expires next year, could no longer serve under the rules of the committee.

Texas' Senator John Tower also serves on the Senate Campaign Committee. Senator John S. Cooper of Kentucky is on the Committee on Committees, the group which awards committee assignments.

'Happy New Year, Host!'

Republicans from the South achieved two of the top posts in the Republican Conference. Congressman William C. Cramer, Florida, was elected vice chairman of the group, which achieved national attention. Virginia's Richard Poff is secretary.

North Carolina's James T. Broyhill was appointed a regional member of the House GOP Policy Committee, one of the nine regional members in the U. S. It's the first time a freshman representative has been named to a regional post.

The highly-important Republican Congressional Campaign Committee will be served by six Republicans from the South. Cramer and North Carolina's Charles R. Jonas are both vice chairmen. Members include Poff and three of the South's brand new GOP Congressmen—M. G. Snyder of Kentucky; William E. Brock of Tennessee, and Ed Foreman of Texas.

In the House itself, Virginia's Joel T. Broyhill will be ranking Republican on the District of Columbia Committee. The assignment is appropriate because Broyhill's district borders D. C. He also is third-ranking on Post Office and Civil Service.

Florida's Cramer is second on Public Works, while Tennessee's Howard H. Baker is second on the powerful Ways and Means Committee. Cramer also ranks fourth on Judiciary.

Third-ranking Republican on Judiciary is Virginia's Poff and Kentucky's Eugene Siler is third on Banking and Currency.

Jonas, who overcame Democrat gerrymandering to win reelection, now ranks sixth among the 20 Republicans on the important Appropriations Committee, and Bruce Alger of Texas is seventh on Ways and Means.

Outstanding assignments were given to freshmen Republicans from the South.

Foreman won a highly coveted seat on the Armed Services Committee, of high importance to his district; Brock was assigned to Banking and Currency, there to do battle against New Frontier inflationary ideas; Snyder won a spot on Education and Labor and will keep a watchful eye on federal aid to education.

North Carolina's James T. Broyhill won a seat on Interstate and Foreign Commerce where he will be in an ideal spot to protect the free enterprise system; James H. Quillen of Tennessee received a post on Public Works where he can guard against wild spending schemes, while Florida's Edward J. Gurney, whose district includes Cape Canaveral, appropriately was assigned to Science and Astronautics.

Mrs. Mary Ellen Miller Named to 'Operation Dixie'

Republican National Committee Chairman William E. Miller today announced the appointment of Mrs. Mary Ellen Miller of Mobile, Ala., as field representative for "Operation Dixie," the GOP's effort to win the South.

The announcement follows closely a meeting of the Republican National Committee, at which Chairman Miller announced the GOP effort in Dixie would be expanded.

Mrs. Miller will travel throughout the 12 "Operation Dixie states—the Confederacy plus Kentucky—and assist Republican groups in organizational matters and campaign techniques.

A News Roundup from Southern States

Republicans On the March in Dixie!

Alabama—Republicans were bitterly disappointed by the defeat of their senatorial candidate, Jim Martin. We planned our work, worked our plan, and were fully confident of victory, but it was not to be in 1962 . . . State Chairman John E. Grenier has just completed holding meetings in all nine districts in Alabama in which he briefed workers and leaders, pointing out the highlights of the campaign where we succeeded, where we failed, our weaknesses etc. He requested all sixty-seven counties to have by March 1st a precinct organization director, finance director and permanent headquarters.

State Director of Organization Manyon Millican outlined a program for 1963 for training and recruiting precinct leaders to get maximum registration and to turn out a maximum Republican vote in 1964.

Over 1,500 people attended the nine district meetings. Alabama is happy to report that we approach our politics 365 days a year and we intend to elect more Republicans in 1964! Correspondent: Carolyn R. Golden, GOP State Executive Committee of Ala., 1031S. 21st St., Birmingham, 5.

Arkansas—Newspapers, TV, and radio headlined the biggest State Budget ever adopted in the history of the GOP, as Arkansas Republicans made plans for '64. Though the exact amount of the 63-64 budget is confidential, it's no secret that the GOP is selecting 25 target Legislature seats, much as the National Committee selects "target" Congressional seats.

County organizations, having undergone strong reorganization in the past campaign, are setting up precinct canvasses. The State Headquarters staff is now up to three field men, and requests for organizational meetings, strategy sessions, and field help are pouring in.

State Vice-Chairman Roy Mitchell has undertaken to establish a Statewide Speaker's Bureau—another first. State Chairman Bill Spicer and National Committeeman Winthrop Rockefeller were interviewed long distance from the National Committee meeting in Washington by a Little Rock Radio Station . . . and public relations as well as grassroots organizing is being stressed.

The State GOP adopted a financing plan termed the United Republican Fund—it's patterned after Mississippi's highly successful fund raising effort.

Washington County elected a County Judge and Coroner . . . and several other courthouse officials and Justices of the Peace were successful on the ticket over Arkansas. Latest plans are for a big Lincoln Day Dinner. Correspondent: David Bledsoe, 530 Tower Bldg., Little Rock.

Florida—Republican voter registration has increased approximately 495% in the past 12 years. In 1950 there were 60,595 registered Republicans; in 1962 there were 360,274 . . . A record number of Lincoln Day activities is planned throughout the state, with a number of prominent GOP speakers scheduled from Washington.

Sure Sounds Pretty, Don't It!

'Have You Cleared That With The Pentagon, Mister Franklin?'

Mrs. Clare B. Williams, assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee, in her role as Florida National Committeewoman, has announced the appointment of Mrs. Charles R. Fischer, 1251-A Park St., Clearwater, and Mrs. Lyle Chaffee, 806 16th Ave. N., St. Petersburg, as chairman and publicity chairman respectively for the state's delegation to the Republican Women's Conference, April 25-27 in Washington. Correspondent: Republican State Executive Committee, Suite 230, Hotel Hillsboro, Tampa.

Georgia—Focal points of political news in Georgia are the newly elected Republican officials. The first day the 1963 General Assembly convened, the oath for State Senator was administered to two Republicans who were appointed to the following committees: Senator A. Perry Gordy, 15th District in Muscogee County, Education, Public Utilities and Transportation and Senate Administrative Affairs; Senator Dan I. MacIntyre III, 40th District in Fulton County, Education, Industry and Labor, and County and Municipal Matters—all plush assignments for both.

A new election has been ordered for the senatorial seat in the Third District in Chatham County. Republican Joseph J. Tribble won on a district-wide basis, but the Democrats claimed they won on a county-wide basis. The Senate refused to seat either.

A. C. Duncan of Fannin County and B. C. Logan of Gilmer County were officially recognized as members of the House of Representatives. In addition to the officials in the General Assembly, Georgia Republicans are celebrating the elections of Leonard J. Hanna, Justice of the Peace in Oak Grove Militia District of Atlanta and Earl J. Roberts, member of the City Council in North Atlanta. Correspondent: Miss Charlotte J. Taylor, Republican State Headquarters, 416 Palmer Bldg., Atlanta, 3.

Mississippi—Republicans have entered this gubernatorial election year with renewed "vigah" . . . State headquarters has obtained larger quarters in the Lamar Building, Jackson, and invites visitors . . . Bill Wilkins, former field representative in the Second District, has been named state GOP Organization Director . . . Jack Geary is chairman of a committee to recruit field representatives.

Mary Ann Starnes, injured in a horseback riding accident, has returned to work and is devoting full time to the United Republican Fund of Mississippi . . . Mrs. James F. Hooper, Republican National Committeewoman, announced the appointment of Mrs. Robert T. Hardeman, Egypt Plantation, Cruger, and Mrs. John W. Slaughter, Columbus, as Mississippi Conference Chairman and Publicity Chairman respectively, for the 11th Annual Republican Women's Conference in Washington April 25-27. Correspondent: Mississippi Republican Party, Lamar Life Building, Jackson.

North Carolina—Our excellent showing in the November elections was naturally very encouraging: but even more encouraging is the fact that there is no "post-election slump" in evidence this time.

We're starting off the new year with a full slate of political activity lined up: The N. C. Federation of Republican Women held its annual convention in Raleigh on January 18, with a fund-raising dinner featuring Senator John G. Tower as one of the main events. The N. C. Federation of Young Republicans will follow close behind with a convention scheduled for February 8th and 9th in Winston-Salem.

GOP Wins in Mississippi!

Georgia Nabs New Victory

Florida GOPs Turn Out Mass of Candidates For Legislature Seats

Mississippi Republicans made history by electing a state legislator and Georgia GOPs added another member to their State Senate delegation in special elections last month.

The victories touched off an explosion of optimism at grassroots levels as the South continued its march toward a two-party system and competition in government. Following as they do the 1962 congressional elections when Republicans elected a record number of congressional, state and local officials in the South, the new triumphs hold significance for coming state and national campaigns.

Next on the agenda will be Florida special elections to fill legislative seats created by reapportionment.

Victorious in Mississippi was L. L. McAllister, Jr. of Meridian. A 30-year-old certified public accountant and chairman of Mississippi Young Republicans, "Mac" trounced the Democrat opposition for the Lauderdale County State House seat, 3,086 to 2,298. It was a clear-cut battle between a Republican and a Democrat on political philosophies.

McAllister's youth typifies the vitality of the two-party drive in Dixie. Like many other Southerners, he took note that the Kennedys are firmly in control of the Democrat Party, and stated "I decided that the only place for a conservative was within the Republican Party."

L. L. McAllister Jr.

Joseph J. Tribble

McAllister attributed his victory to an active precinct organization.

Victorious in Georgia was Republican Joseph J. Tribble, Savannah. He clobbered three Democrats, polling 14,127 votes to 8,096 for his closest opponent.

Tribble called his election a victory for the two-party system and said it would be beneficial to Chatham County and Georgia. In the State Senate he will join two other Republicans, the first GOPs elected to that body since Reconstruction.

The two special election victories will serve as inspirations to Republican candidates and workers throughout the South. Mississippi will elect a new governor this year, as will Kentucky. Virginia elects its entire legislature. The grassroots special election triumphs have demonstrated again the Republicans can win in the South —anywhere!

Meanwhile, Florida Republicans have chalked up an impressive candidate turnout for special elections to fill seats in the state legislature. Sixty-three Republicans are contesting for nominations for 30 House seats and four Senate seats.

The big candidate turnout will leave only two House seats and four Senate seats uncontested in the March 26 election. There was only a brief period between the ordering of the election and the filing deadline, making the GOP turnout even more impressive.

Breakthrough in Florida! GOPs Win 12 More Seats

Republicans hailed an "outstanding breakthrough" for two-party government as Florida GOPs chalked up an impressive 12-seat victory in special elections for the legislature March 26.

The GOP swept five counties—Broward, Orange, Palm Beach, Pinellas and Seminole—in the election to fill vacancies created by reapportionment of the House and Senate, and tripled their delegation to the legislature. Republicans now have two senators and 16 House members; had one senator and five representatives.

Notable "firsts" included in the victories were the election of the first GOP legislator since Reconstruction in Seminole County, and the election of the first Republican woman to the legislature—Mrs. Mary Grizzle of Pinellas County.

It was the third straight special election triumph for Republicans in the South this year. Earlier victories were chalked up for the Georgia Senate and Mississippi House. The wins were held to be unusually significant because they were at the grassroots level and demonstrate that Republicans are developing the organizations and attracting the candidates to win.

The victories in Florida were a demonstration of teamwork between national, state, county and local GOP organizations. As an example, a Republican "Operation Dixie" field worker was assigned to aid the campaign committees.

With the opposition in control of the White House, Republicans must rely on teamwork and the dedication of workers. These victories belong to the irrepressible drive of citizens interested in achieving competition in government through a two-party system.

New Triumphs in Tex., S. C. —

GOPs on Victory March, Notch 5th Straight Win!

Republicans are batting a thousand in elections in the South so far this year, and last month notched their fourth and fifth straight victories.

In Corpus Christi, Tex., traditionally a strong Democrat area, Charles "Chuck" Scoggins, 31, became the first GOP state legislator from Corpus Christi this century.

In North Augusta, S. C., F. Irvin Schueler and Lloyd E. Stahl became the first Republican councilmen in the history of the city.

Scoggins won by 170 votes over his closest opponent, a former Democrat state legislator who had the active support of the Texas Democrat State Chairman. Some 16,000 votes were cast for the nine candidates in the special election.

Scoggins' election raises the GOP delegation to eight in the Texas House and provides additional proof that Texas is on the march toward achieving competition in government through a two-party system.

Three seats were up for grabs in North Augusta, and the victories rewarded years of persistence by the GOP organization. Heavy emphasis was placed on precinct work, and it paid off.

In the view of some, this may have been "just" a city election. But victories at the grassroots level build the organizations to win higher offices. Furthermore, Republicans elected at local levels provide the leadership necessary to defeat those who would expand federal control over the cities and states.

Lloyd E. Stahl

F. Irvin Schueler

By electing Republicans, voters in Corpus Christi and North Augusta joined citizens throughout the South in the drive to achieve a two-party system, and united with voters across the nation in building the grassroots organization necessary to rid the country of the Kennedys in 1964.

Earlier GOP victories were in Georgia, Mississippi and Florida.

Charles "Chuck" Scoggins

Fort Worth Names GOP As Mayor!

Fort Worth, Texas, has a Republican mayor!

Bayard Friedman—youngest member of the City Council and believed to be the youngest mayor in the history of the city—was elected by his fellow council members. He is the second GOP mayor in Fort Worth history. Friedman is 36 and an attorney.

The only previous Republican mayor was Tom McCann, elected in 1957 who served for two terms, resigning in 1961.

Friedman was elected to the Council in a non-partisan election.

Sixth Victory This Year in South—

GOP Sweeps High Point, N.C.! Drive Gains Across the State

"Republicans Sweep Into City Hall" banner-headlined the High Point, N. C., "Enterprise." A thumping good sweep it was—a mayor and eight councilmen riding into office, but it didn't stop there! Throughout the state, North Carolina voters spurred the drive for two-party government.

Mayor Mehan

Here's the way the North Carolina victories shaped up:

✔ William M. Greene, brother of last year's GOP senatorial candidate Claude Greene, led the ticket in his bid for the Robersonville City Council and became the first Republican official there this century.

✔ When opposition candidates made an issue of the fact that Dr. John Costlow was a registered Republican, he was promptly elected mayor of Beaufort in a "non-partisan" election.

✔ In Chapel Hill, when the opposition tried the same tactics on Ed Terney, he won a seat on the school board—and led the ticket!

✔ Totaling it up, the municipal elections in North Carolina were the GOP's sixth major victory in the South this year. Earlier triumphs were scored in state legislative races in Georgia, Florida, Mississippi and Texas, with another municipal breakthrough in North Augusta, S. C.

The High Point victory electrified Republican forces throughout North Carolina and the South. As noted by "Challenge" Correspondent Hubert O. Teer Jr., (3609 Exeter Way, Durham, N. C.), most N. C. municipal elections are nonpartisan, so this, one of the few partisan elections, was considered a key test of party strength. The victory was all the more notable since a hard-fought GOP primary preceded the election.

Floyd Mehan, a businessman, was elected mayor as the Republican ticket toppled 20 years of Democrat rule.

The High Point election was important for another reason, too. It demonstrated one of the often overlooked advantages of the two-party system—increased interest and citizen participation in government.

The total vote exceeded even the most optimistic estimates. Observers could not remember when High Pointers turned out in such numbers for a city election, and in some instances, city elections there have been decided by less than 10 per cent of the electorate.

The North Carolina victories were seen as an inspiration to Republicans throughout the South, with great psychological impact on the 1964 elections. Recognizing this, Republican National Committee Chairman William E. Miller attended a victory celebration in High Point June 3.

South in Turmoil —

Mass Defections Cripple Party of the Kennedys!

Wholesale defections are ripping through Democratic Party ranks as the Kennedys continue to ride roughshod over the principles of Jeffersonian government on which the Party was founded.

Significant in the burgeoning drive to oust the Kennedys is the fact that most of these discerning Democrats are bringing their strength to the drive to create a two-party system. There is a growing awareness throughout the South that the Republican Party, nationally, more closely respresents Jeffersonian principles, and that voters must be united in the Republican Party if these goals are to be attained. Convention walk-outs and "third party" ideas have been tried and just won't do the job.

Evidence of the widespread bolt to the Republican Pary include:

• Officers of the Shelby County, Tennessee, Young Democrats voted 8-6 to support policies of the Kennedys. The vote indicates almost half of the officers opposed to the Kennedys and the club president warned, "There may be a recission" of the resolution . . . "some directors were not present."

• The Burke County, Georgia, Democratic Executive Committee endorsed a Republican for President of the United States.

• Proceeds from the first bale of cotton ginned in Irwin County, Georgia, were donated by a life-long Democrat to the campaign of a Republican for President.

• A Tyler, Texas, attorney resigned from the Smith County Democratic Executive Committee "to aid in overcoming the detrimental policies of the Kennedy brothers."

• Florida's governor and a U.S. Senator from Georgia admitted strength for Republican candidates in their states.

• According to a survey by Dick Preston of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, five of the governors at the Southern Governors' Conference are "on the fence," unwilling to say they are either for or against the Kennedys in 1964, while three are definitely against them.

• The 1960 campaign manager for Kennedy in Hamilton County, Tennessee, a life-long Democrat, said he would oppose the Kennedy's reelection and fired off a letter to them stating, "You are destroying the trust that the people of this nation have always had and should have for their chief executive."

• Officers of the Fulton County, Georgia, Democratic Club voted to support a Republican for president.

• The Democratic governor of Arkansas said he might vote Republican in 1964, and that the "independent elector" movement won't work.

• 22 of the 25 residents of Kennedy Boulevard in Albany, Ga., petitioned to have the name of their street changed "because of our aversion to the policies of the present national administration."

'Best Chance Yet'

Lyons for Governor Drive Sweeps Across State of Louisiana

Charlton Lyons

Louisiana Republicans are making an all-out organizational effort to elect GOP gubernatorial candidate Charlton H. Lyons in his determined campaign to break the century-old one-party monopoly in the state's general elections March 3.

According to Louisiana political observers, a bitter Democratic primary fight has given Republicans their best chance in history to elect a governor.

Lyons, Louisiana's GOP National Committeeman, has played a major role in sparking new interest and sharply increased activity among Louisiana Republicans in recent years.

A Democrat until 1960, Lyons gained prominence in Louisiana politics by resigning from the Democratic Party and issuing a widely-publicized statement describing the 1960 Democratic national platform as a blueprint for destroying states' rights and imposing socialism on the American people.

After making the break with the Democrats, Lyons lost no time in demonstrating that his opposition to their welfare state was sincere and "for real.'

In 1961, he entered the race for Congress on the Republican ticket in Louisiana's Fourth District, undaunted by the fact that political observers regarded his chances of gaining even token support as virtually non-existent.

The campaign, however, turned out to be one of the most hotly-contested Congressional races in Louisiana history. Polling an amazing 46% of the vote, Charlton Lyons narrowly missed upsetting Joe D. Waggoner, who is regarded as a conservative.

In 1962, Lyons became Republican

Former Gov. Jones Cites Lyons' Ability, Integrity

Former Governor Sam H. Jones of Louisiana has put the major issue in the March 3 gubernatorial election squarely up to the voters. Said he: "Some knowledgeable people think he (Republican candidate Charlton Lyons) is the best qualified candidate to run for governor in the Twentieth Century."

Here is the former governor's complete statement to the Lake Charles Young Men's Businessmen's Club on January 6, as he was attempting to clarify his position on the coming election:

"Now I am about to make a statement which I have made before, with which one reporter took some literary license; so let me explain in advance before I make this statement that, having held the highest office within the gift of the Louisiana Democratic Party, it would require circumstances of compelling importance for me to go outside the Democratic Party in a state election.

"But frankness compels me to state that, for the first time since Reconstruction, Republicans threaten this bastion of political Democracy. And they do it with a candidate of surpassing ability and integrity. Some knowledgeable people think he is the best qualified candidate to run for governor in the Twentieth Century. Some think he can win. Others say this is far-fetched. So was the idea that the Republicans could carry the state for President in 1956. But it happened."

Eyes of Nation on Nov. 5 Vote—

Two-Party Drive Roars Across Mississippi; Phillips Tops Slate!

Stanford Morse Seeks Lt. Governorship; 20 Vie for Legislature

The challenge of the century confronts the voters of Mississippi!

For the first time, they have the opportunity to vote for the two-party system. If they do, they will win the power to make the national political parties compete for their votes in future elections, and at the same time, set the pace in a South already afire with two-party gains.

At the head of the two-party ticket is Rubel Phillips—former chairman of the State Public Service Commission, proven administrator, articulate conservative.

The candidate for lieutenant governor is Stanford Morse—two-term State Senator, vital force in the legislature, leader in obtaining reapportionment.

Backing up the state-wide ticket are 20 legislative candidates—businessmen, community leaders, exceptionally qualified by experience and training for the offices they seek.

The Mississippi campaign has already won national attention, and, almost certainly, more will be forthcoming as the press seeks information on the "new" South.

Issues in the campaign have been crystallized. In addition to state objectives—such as Phillips' plank for a state merit system—the issues are identical to those in many Southern states: The need for competitive, two-party government; recognition that the liberal Democrat Party no longer represents the Jeffersonian concepts of Southerners; and, of course, the issue of "The Kennedys."

The vote in the Mississippi gubernatorial contest could reveal whether the Kennedys can take the South for granted in 1964, as they have in the past. The contest is important to Republicans, also, for it is a well-recognized axiom that victories at lower levels of government build the organization and spirit necessary to capture higher offices—in this case, the supreme office, the presidency.

In this edition, the first of a planned series spotlighting 1963 campaigns in Southern states, we salute the two-party forces in Mississippi, and congratulate the Republicans and discerning Democrats who made it possible to field the outstanding ticket.

Mr. Paul Rilling of the Southern Regional Council has told me of his conversation with you regarding voter registration efforts in the greater Miami area. Our project will be interested in voter registration activities throughout the southern states, and of course we will want to know more about the Miami situation.

Unfortunately, we are at a standstill at the moment while trying to clear up some legal and administrative problems, but just as soon as we get these things cleared up and make a public announcement regarding the start of our project I will be in touch with you further.

Dear Mr. Martin:

Mr. Leslie Dunbar has requested that I answer your letter to him of March 29, 1962, and he wishes to thank you for the copy of the editorial which you sent him. Our records reveal that the copies of the report regarding civil rights which you requested were mailed to you on April 2, and we assume that you have received them.

Les Dunbar suffered a slipped disc over the week-end and will be laid up at home for a few days. He is not yet using the telephone, but we hope to be able to talk to him by tomorrow and he will be able to come back to the office by the end of next week.

Our Voter Registration Project will be working primarily with five major agencies which are already operating in several different states in the south. Although we are reserving some of our funds for use by local organizations, we had not contemplated any voter registration activities in such border states as Kentucky. We recognize the fact that you probably have areas in your state which present voter registration problems similar to some found in the deep south, however, we are operating on a limited budget and perfer to confine our initial activities to the deep south. I am sure that we will be in contact with you in the event that we decide to expand our Project into the border states. In the meantime, we would appreciate your interest and support of our Project.

Congratulations on your recent report analyzing the actions of the Kennedy administration in the civil rights field. I enclose a copy of an excellent editorial which appeared in the Louisville Courier Journal March 27. Please send us at least two copies of your report when they are available. Mailed 4/2/62 mmg

Would you also please send us some detailed information about the work which the Southern Regional Council is doing or will be doing in the voting field. I suppose this may not yet be available, but I would like to be kept informed so that we can discuss this with Kentucky groups that might qualify to participate. In particular, a voting registration effort is needed in Lexington as well as some of the towns in Western Kentucky. I am sure SRC can perform a meaningful service in this way and we want to help involve Kentucky groups to the extent possible.

Your letter dated April 19 and postmarked April 24 does not indicate receipt of my letter to you of April 10, 1962. In that letter I informed you that "the Voter Education Project does not currently plan any operation in the Border States."

In a meeting held here in Atlanta on April 17 we reached a final and definite decision that we will not do any voter registration work outside of the deep South for the balance of this calendar year. Unless we get a substantial increase in funds, I am certain that we will not go into the Border States during the life of this project. Dear Mr. Branton:

A week or so ago I phoned you to inquire about the possibility of our submitting an application to you for a grant to aid us in our Negro voter registration campaign in the State of Delaware. We hope that your group will look favorably upon this possibility.

Although approximately 55% of the Negroes eligible to vote in Delaware are registered, the influence of the Negro in the affairs of the state government is negligible. The only civil rights legislation that has passed through our legislature has been an emasculated Fair Employment law, which up to this point has never been put into operation because of the failure to appropriate funds. After ten years or more of trying we finally managed to get a public accommodations bill out of committee this year, but it was recommitted immediately in a completely unprecedented manner. There is universal agreement among our forces that racial justice cannot be furthered in our State without a radical breakthrough in voter registration and political action by the Negro people.

We are therefore in the process now of organizing a Delaware Leadership Council to conduct a voter registration campaign and to spark citizenship education and political action among the Negro people. The Committee for Fair Practices has endorsed this action, as has the Presbytery of New Castle, which appropriated $100 toward the costs of organizing. The support of other organizations is assured. Both the president and the vice president of the NAACP are on the organizing committee, as is Mr. Louis Redding, whom you know, I believe.

Our plan is to employ a full time executive director under the supervision of a Board, and to appeal for wide popular support. We earnestly appeal for your favorable consideration of this request for aid to an effort which we are convinced could bring about a healthful change in the social and political life of a state which suffers from racial injustice which compares in many ways with that found in the deep South.

Faithfully,
Thomas F. Luce

Dear Mr. Solomon:

Leslie Dunbar has requested that I furnish you with information regarding the Voter Education Project which was recently launched under the sponsorship of SRC.

I am enclosing a copy of a statement of conditions which we impose upon recipients of grants and which is self-explanatory regarding the requirements of our project. We will be working primarily in the eleven deep southern states, including East Texas. We do not plan to work in such border states as Oaklahoma, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, or Delaware. There will be five major participating agencies working throughout the region, namely the NAACP, the National Urban League, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Congress of Racial Equality. We intend to reserve some portion of our available funds for participation by local organizations where special circumstances justify working through such a local group in lieu of participation through one of the major agencies.

In your own state we have launched a special 90-day program which will have CORE working in the 6th Congressional District, Clarendon and Sumter Counties; NAACP in Beaufort, Columbia, Greenville and Charleston; and SNCC in Orangeburg County. We will appreciate any support which you and the Teachers Association can give to increasing voter registration in South Carolina, and if we can furnish you with any additional information, please let us know.

Dear Mr. Peters:

Dr. Leslie Dunbar has requested that I give you some information regarding voter registration activities currently going on in the State of Mississippi. The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee is working currently in Marshall County around Holly Springs, and in Cohoma, Bolivar and Washington in the old Third Congressional District, and throughout the old Fourth Congressional District and in the area of Hattiesburg in the Sixth Congressional District. SNCC, NAACP, and CORE are all working in the metropolitan Jackson area. Bob Moses is directing the SNCC program out of Jackson, and Tom Gaither is directing CORE activities there.

There is a current drive also underway in Baton Rouge, where NAACP and CORE are both operating, and there is a very strong local organization known as the Second Ward Voters League which is doing a very effective job in the Scotlandville area, which is immediately north of the city limits of Baton Rouge. This organization is working with a parish-wide organization known as FOCUS (Federated Organization for the Cause of Unlimited Self-Development). Mr. Acie J. Dear Mrs. Clayton:

Mr. Branton has asked me to reply to your letter of September 13. I am sending under separate cover publications of our parent organization, the Southern Regional Council, which deal with various aspects of the political, social and economic deprivation of the Negro in the South. Additional copies of this material are available for the cost of mailing. This comes to about 5¢ per piece, and we shall be happy to forward as many as you may request.

The Committee on Political Education of the AFL-CIO publishes a handbook for political education, the title of which is "How to Win." It is the best source of information and guidance on organizing for political action that I know of. I suggest that you write to:

AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education
815 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

for copies of the handbook.

I think it is imperative that leadership training include an introduction to sources of factual information about the community. I do not, of course, know to what extent you are familiar with the various sources from which such information is available. Therefore I will suggest some of these sources to you.

You can order from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., "The U. S. Census of Population, General Population Characteristics, North Carolina," which provides information about the age, race, etc. of the population of North Carolina by counties and cities. From this publication the potential voting strength of the Negro in each community can be determined. Also from the Superintendent of Documents you can order the "Congressional District Data Book, 87th Congress." This publication contains population and electoral data for each congressional district in the United States. Unfortunately, the electoral data contained in this publication refers to general elections, rather than primaries; you will have to get primary results from the appropriate county or state party officials (in some cases the Secretary of State of North Carolina may compile primary returns). This publication also contains valuable information about the economic structure of each congressional district. Along with it you may order the "Congressional District Atlas," which is a map showing the geographic area of each congressional district in the United States.

The Superintendent of Documents can also send you the "U. S. Census of Agriculture: 1959, Vol. 1, Part 26." This publication shows the land distribution in farms and in crop land harvested for each county in North Carolina. It also includes information about the kind of use which is made of the land in each county. Such information can be very valuable for the leader who must be able to show the people how political issues can affect their own personal affairs.

The Superintendent of Documents publishes the 1961 report of the Commission on Civil Rights, which comes in five volumes: "Voting," "Justice," "Education," "Housing," "Employment." I would suggest also that you order the 1961 report to the Commission on Civil Rights of the North Carolina State Advisory Committee from the Superintendent of Documents.

The publications listed above, along with those that we are sending you, should provide a framework for leadership training and education. The publications of the U. S. Census Bureau are designed primarily for the use of statisticians, and they may appear somewhat formidable at first. However, they do contain information that is essential for deciding what can and should be done in the community to advance the cause of human rights. If you have any difficulty using these publications please let me know, and I shall be pleased to give you all the help that I can.

There is, of course, a great deal of political information which can be gathered only at the county and the community level. For example, the states vary considerably in the kinds and functions of county governing bodies, and in many other ways. I would suggest that the first step to be taken by any leader is to determine the number of whites and Negroes who are presently registered to vote in the county. This information should be obtainable from the county registration authority. If you anticipate any difficulty obtaining registration information, then before attempting to do so you should determine whether or not such information is covered by a public records act. Most any lawyer or politician can show you how to look this information up in the state laws, if you do not already know. If you have any difficulty in this regard, let me know, because I expect to begin compiling information about the public records acts of the southern states shortly.

There is certain other basic information which every leader should have at his fingertips. This might include the names of the principal county and community officials and the length of time they have been in office. It might also include the electoral history of the county and/or community--that is, the voter turnout as a percentage of the total registered voters and as a percentage of the total voting age population for some years past; the record of law enforcement authorities in the county and/or community--do they habitually observe or ignore the provisions of the state laws regarding arbitrary arrest; the manner in which juries are selected and the manner in which selecting authorities are placed in office--jury commissions usually are appointed by county or district judges; the manner in which property tax assessors obtain office and the manner in which they observe the strictures of state law in the conduct of their office; the provisions of any state or local sales tax law including the way it is collected and the effect on total revenues of any bracketing system for which the law provides--for example, in Georgia it has recently been charged that the sales tax bracketing system makes the legal 3% sales tax an actual tax of 3.7%. By familiarizing himself with these and other issues of community political life, the leader can effectively explain the practical reasons for increased political participation.

The leader should thoroughly understand the way key officials get their positions. For example, who appoints the registration authority in your county, and how long have those who are presently in office been serving?

Since registration is the key to voting and voting is the key to political change, this is very vital information, and it might be well for a leadership workshop to undertake as its initial project a study of voter registration in each county from which participants come. The Voter Education Project is presently attempting to secure accurate information on the number of both Negroes and whites who are registered to vote in each county of the South. Any such information which you could develop for us about counties in North Carolina we should greatly appreciate.

If we can be of any further assistance, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Very truly yours,

Jack Minnis

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 23 regarding the article which you are to write for The Progressive. I think you should write directly to Mr. Burke Marshall, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, Washington, D. C., to get the information regarding the counties in which the Justice Department has filed voting suits. I am sure they will give you this information and will also tell you which ones were filed since January, 1960. You should also inquire of them as to the circumstances under which they intervened or filed suits.

I am enclosing a copy of a map prepared by the Southern Regional Council which will readily reveal the racial composition of all of the counties in the South, and you could use this to check the list of Justice Department suits against. For information as to how many of these counties are urban in nature I refer you to "U. S. Census, 1960 Report, General Population Characteristics (Vol. I)." For agricultural information I refer you to the "U. S. Census of Agriculture, 1959;" and for industrial information you should see "U. S. Census, 1960, Subject Reports (Vol. II)." The 1960 presidential vote figures by county are carried in the 1961 (and possibly 1962) World Almanac. I have asked Jack Minnis, the Research Director for VEP, to give his views regarding your question number two, and his memo is attached hereto.

I regret that we are not able to furnish you with more information, but your request comes at an extremely busy time for us and this is about all that we can furnish you with prior to October 1.

With sincere personal regards to you and Sandra.

Dear Mr. Branton;

I am preparing an article for The Progressive on the role of the Kennedy Administration in the area of civil rights; the article will appear as part of a special issue on civil rights in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation.

The following questions are sensitive ones, and probably oversimplified as well. I wish there was a more convenient mechanism than this letter by which we could communicate; but I hope you will write me freely, and caution me to prudence where you do not personally wish to be associated with an observation or opinion.

1. I want to know what pattern, if any, exists in the legal efforts of the Justice Department. For this I'll need the names of the 33 counties in which they have pressed voting suits, particularly the ones begun since 1960! Under what circumstances does the Department susually intervene? How many of the counties are "black belt" in character;[2] how many urban[3]? How many are one-crop;[4] how many are industrial[5]? For which Presidential candidate did these counties opt in 1960[6]? My surface impresssions are that the Kennedys move only where they have overwhelming evidence, where the risks to the Democratic Party are low, or where publicity demands Federal action; that they definitely prefer to avoid volatile counties; that they are using the voter registration drives to political advantage, although not primarily in an effort to change the reactionary character of the Dixiecrats.

2. "Where poverty exists, liberty is always in peril", wrote the Civil Rights Commission in its conclusions in Voting. Have you turned up evidence for or against their view that a diverse and vigorous economy is vital in securing political rights and promoting political participation by southern Negroes?[7] Do you perceive any breakthroughs, potential or actual, for an integrated labor movement? Besides possible grants through the Area Redevelopment and Small Business Administrations, what other economic stimulants are available to local communities?

3. Has your work enabled you to evaluate the relative merits of the ballot, the boycott, the court suit, or nonviolent direct action in obtainigg civil rights? Bluntly, how do you rank the instruments of social change? In addition, what and who are the agencies(which institutions, class groupings, etc)?

I'd appreciate any repleis to the above, plus any other information you might think important for me to have. I hope to hear from you by October 1.

Sincerely,

Thomas Hayden

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

Harry Fleischman has suggested that I contact you concerning some information on the voter regsitration campaign for Negroes in the South. As you may know two students from this University were recently arrested in the process of delivering food and clothing in Clarksdale, Mississippi.

As a result of these arrests there is interest in conducting a University and community food raising campaign for people in this part of Mississippi. Before the campaign is undertaken however, we would like some factual information concerning problems in the counties around Clarksdale.

When did the voting registration drive begin? Has it run into any particularly difficult problems? How many families have been affected, either by being cut off from relief roles, loss of credit or by the bad weather during the last few months? In short, the kind of information we want would serve as a basis for a fact sheet to be used in a food raising campaign.

Any help you can give will be greatly appreciated.

Dear Mr. Polsky:

Your letter of January 9th to Mr. Leslie Dunbar, Executive Director of Southern Regional Council, has been sent to me for reply.

We are conducting voter registration programs in each of eleven southern states, but suggestions of localities which might be suitable for your photo essay would, of necessity, depend upon the exact time when you plan to do the job. These voter programs will not be running simultaneously in every locality where we are working, and in some areas, the registration offices will be closed so that no registration work can be carried on at that particular time.

If you will give me some tentative dates when you would like to make your photographs, and tell me something of what you hope to try and portray in them, I will be pleased to give you suggested locales.

Very truly yours,

Mr. Leslie Dunbar

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

I have become acquainted with the various aspects of the Southern Regional Council's program through my work in the publications department of the Anti-Defamation League where I am employed as a writer and editor.

In addition to my work for ADL, I am an occasional free lance photographer. It is in this latter capacity that I am writing you at the suggestion of Mr. Henry Schwarzschild. I would like to do a photo essay for a national magazine on a Negro voter registration drive in a Southern county. In all likelihood, I would write the article which would accompany the photographs. This project would be undertaken independently of my affiliation with ADL, although Oscar Cohen knows of it, and I would probably travel south sometime during my vacation in late Spring.

If you could advise me in the selection of one, or several localities which might be suitable, this would be of enormous help. I am most troubled by the problem of being able to work for a one or two week period in a rural southern community, without arousing suspicion or rancor sufficient to hinder me. This will, I suspect, depend on what personal qualities I can bring to bear in dealing with the people involved.

I realize that a project of this nature is fraught with many difficulties, especially since I am anxious to portray on film, the just-beneath-the-surface tensions that exist in such situations. I would like to select a Southern locality where things have not reached an incendiary point--where I can, with sensitivity, tact, and reasonable objectivity develop a good essay.

When I am a little further along in my research, I intend contacting LOOK magazine for an initial committment from them on this type of story. If they prove not interested, there are several other media outlets I have in mind.

Thank you for your consideration. I'll look forward to hearing from you.

Most sincerely,

Dear Mr. Repas:

Mr. Dunbar has asked that I reply to your letter of January 11th, inquiring about conditions in the Mississippi Delta. I spent three days in and around Clarksdale, Mississippi, last week conferring with people who are involved in the Civil Rights movement there.

I should like to be able to give you precise figures on the number of deprived families who are in desperate need of assistance. Unfortunately, I do not have such figures, nor I suspect, does anyone else. The people who are working with Mr. Aaron Henry, Fourth Street Drug Store, Clarksdale, have assembled a file of applications from people who need assistance. I do not know the exact number of applications they have taken, but I believe it would be in the neighborhood of 150. I would imagine these 150 applications represent somewhere between 700 and 1,000 people, and this number refers only to Coahoma County.

Similar circumstances exist in at least half-a-dozen other counties in the Mississippi area. In at least one county, Leflore, the county governing body has refused to participate in the distribution of federal surplus commodities. In those counties in which federal commodities are distributed, the programs are under the direct control of local white officials. Such officials are able to play off the desperate need of the people against their desire to vote, so long as the whites control distribution of the federal largesse. It is extremely difficult actually to document any connection between the deprivation of the right to vote and the distribution of federal commodities; However, responsible persons, both Negro and white, with whom I discussed this matter, have no doubt there is a connection. They speak of it as a fact, and not as speculation.

An active, continuing and determined drive to get Negroes registered to vote in the Mississippi Delta has been going on for the past thirteen months. You ask has the registration program run into any particular problems. I can assure you that the program has run into every problem which the white authorities could devise. These problems range from outright physical violence to registration workers, through arrests and trials and convictions on spurious criminal charges and the loss of jobs and credit, to slow-down tactics by registrars themselves - even the outright refusal of registrars to accept registration applications, and the refusal of sheriffs to accept payments of Poll Tax. The whites in Mississippi who do not want Negroes to vote have the benefit of several generations of experience in preventing Negro political participation, and they are extremely effective in bringing this experience to bear every day. Their determination to prevent Negroes from voting is equaled only by the determination of the Negroes to register and vote.

The genesis of the present destitution of Negro families in and around the Clarksdale area appears to lie in a series of natural occurances. As I understand it, it has been an extremely dry year in the cotton producing areas, and the drought caused the cotton to mature about two months earlier than usual. This meant that a large number of Negro families whose subsistence throughout the year is dependent upon that last two months of cotton chopping are now faced with the problem of feeding, clothing and housing themselves without money, and without the prospect of jobs. Then, too, I understand that the unusually wide-spread use of machines for picking the cotton has added to the Negroes' difficulty.

I have attempted to give you here an objective appraisal of all I have observed on two field trips to the Clarksdale area, one recently and one in the early fall. My own personal observations have been, of course, supplemented by the reports of the registration workers which come into our office on a regular monthly basis. If the foregoing appears to be emotion-laden, please be assured that emotions have had nothing to do with observing and reporting conditions as they exist.

I hope this will be of some help to you, and if we can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Best regards,

The Voter Education Project is primarily a research project making a current study of voter registration problems in the South, and we simply have not been in business long enough to print any reports on the subject ourselves. We do plan to publish something at an early date but it would not be in time for your term paper.

Dear Miss Kies:

Leslie Dunbar of the Southern Regional Council has asked that I reply to your letter of February 21st.

Let me begin by regretting that we are unable to provide literature which would systematically answer the questions you pose. The fact is, these are very much the same questions our whole research project is asking, and, of course, eventually we are expecting to publish a book which will tell the result of our research. I will do what I can to answer your questions in a very general way, and will enclose what we have available which I think might be of use to you.

We have voluminous field reports and evaluations from the agencies who are participating in the Voter Education Project. Unfortunately, these reports and evaluations are not presented in such a form as to permit our sending you copies. The field reports we get vary, and depend upon the type of area in which the registration project is being conducted, and upon the talents and abilities of the registration workers. We are enclosing a copy of the NEW SOUTH in which we published a field report from the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee project in southwest Georgia. We have a great many reports of a similar nature from this particular project. However, this is the only project from which we have been able to get this kind of material. Other projects simply give us statistics and information on forms we provide them as to the number of persons contacted, by what means contacted, the number of persons registered, the number of persons refusing to register, the number of persons denied registration, and the seasons therefore.

4- Requests for inform.

The Voter Education Project is a program of the Southern Regional Council. It is the largest research project ever undertaken by the Southern Regional Council. It occupies separate office space from the Council, and has its own staff under the direction of Wiley Branton. The objective of the Voter Education Project is to study the methods and techniques used by civil rights organizations to promote political participation on the part of Negroes in the South. While our primary purpose is research, we are in the unique position of being able to generate our own data by providing financial assistance to civil rights organizations who wish to do work in voter registration. Since the civil rights agencies themselves are the ones who gather our data for us, we have been faced from the first with the problem of getting action-oriented civil rights workers to compile records, reports and information that we need. It is only honest to say that this conflict between action and research has produced many problems which we have not yet resolved satisfactorily. In spite of this, we have been able to accumulate a significant body of information about what is going on in voter registration work in the South, and how that work is being conducted.

As I have noted above, we have been able to get really analytical reports from only one of the "Big Five" civil rights organizations. We have made a number of grants to purely local organizations, several of which have produced reports and analyses which are valuable for our research purposes. We work very closely with the student leaders particularly in Mississippi, southwest Georgia, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Orangeburg, South Carolina, Selma, Alabama, and Miami, Florida. These are the areas in which SNCC and CORE are conducting Voter Education Project supported registration drives. We make no attempt to dictate the methods and techniques which the students will use in these drives. We do, however, encourage them, as well as all other participants, to call upon us for assistance and advice of any kind. From the outset, we felt that no one individual or group was in a position to state with any authority what are the most effective ways of carrying on voter registration and education programs. Our purpose, therefore, is to compare the effectiveness of programs conducted by organizations which have experience in the field. When the Voter Education Project makes a grant through an agency, the agency commits itself to make regular financial and progress reports, and to cooperate fully with the Voter Education Project staff in making information available.

It is rather frustrating to write a letter like this because I feel that I know precisely what it is that you want, and I also know that what I have said does not go very far in filling your needs. The difficulty is that our operations are of such a broad scope that it is impossible at this time to organize our data systematically in such a way that we can generalize confidently. I would strongly urge, if it is at all possible, that you undertake to spend some time in our office selecting such data as you would like from our files. It may be that your schedule does not permit a trip to Atlanta, but if you are interested in going into this subject beyond your Master's thesis, I don't know of any place where you would be more likely to find the data you need.

I know that the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, 6 Raymond Street, N. W., Atlanta 14, Georgia, would be happy to put you on their mailing list, and so probably would the Congress of Racial Equality, 38 Park Row, New York,38, New York, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, 334 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta 3, Georgia, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 20 West 40th Street, New York 18, New York. You might also write to Mr. Aaron Henry, Fourth Street Drug Store, Clarksdale, Mississippi, and ask that he put you on his newsletter mailing list. We hope to begin publication on a monthly newsletter within the near future, and we will, of course, put you on our mailing list. I would be happy to do the best I can in answering any further inquiries if you do not feel that my answers to these were totally hopeless.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sirs:

I am a graduate student in Political Science at Northwestern University and am now engaged in a research project in connection with my Master's thesis. I am working on various aspects of the problem of Negro voter registration in the South, particularly with regard to the current drives in Georgia and Mississippi. As you are undoubtedly aware, systematic information concerning the situation is difficult to come by, if not completely unavailable. This seems to be true whether one wants reliable figures regarding numbers attempting registration, succeeding, or already registered; as well as thorough descriptions of the method and relative success of the projects themselves. I am writing to you in the hope that you may be of some assistance to me.

Specifically, I would appreciate any available literature, particularly field reports and evaluations. Besides information about the actual activity of workers in the various counties, I would like information regarding the overall organization of the drive- the extent to which it is coordinated (between participating individuals, organizations, regions, etc.) the relative importance of the different channels of support (financial, legal, and "moral"), and the role of the different groups participating. What is the specific relationship between the Southern Regional Council and the separate projects in terms of personnel and financing? What other activities are now being undertaken by the SRC and how important is the Voter Education Project relative to these? How close is the SRC to the student leaders, the decisions they make in the field, and the methods they use? Are there established lines of communication- regular reports, visits, evaluations, etc.? Is it at all possible to generalize about such things at this point?

I realize that some of these questions may be unanswerable, or to difficult and involved to begin to analyze. However, I felt that including them might provide a better idea of the kind of information I would be interested in. I would appreciate suggestions as to other sources of information, any literature you have available, and -if at all convenient- possibly, general comments by one of your staff on some of these questions. I would appreciate a reply at your earliest convenience. I am also enclosing a check for ten dollars to cover mailing costs, literature, or a contribution, whichever is applicable.

Sincerely,

Naomi C. Kies

Dear Mr. Branton:

As a fourth year college student, I am required to complete a term project in some area of United States Government. I have elected to make a study of the effect of student worker groups in regard to their fight against voting restraint in the South. Miss Barbara Carter, staff member of The Reporter Magazine, suggested that I might write to you for information.

I am particularly interested in the Southwide Voter Education Project and the type of program it has launched in the South. I would appreciate any phamplets, brochures or information you could furnish me on this project and its effectiveness in the fight against voting restraint. In addition, I wonder if you could direct me in reaching Robert Moses, John Hardy or others who have been particularly influential in the registration drives.

This project has a definite time limit so I would appreciate your earliest attention. Thank you for your kind consideration.

Dear Mr. Steinbock:

Mr. L. W. Dunbar, Director of the Southern Regional Council, told me several days ago of his telephone conversation with you and of the interest which you had manifested in the Council and in the Voter Education Project. I promised him that I would get a letter off to you but the demands and pressures of the Voter Project have prevented my writing you any earlier.

The Voter Education Project is working in eleven southern states, including East Texas, but we are not currently doing too much in Arkansas and Texas because these two states have no registration procedure other than the payment of a poll tax each year. We note that 32 of the required 38 states have already ratified the anti-poll tax amendment and with the abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting then Arkansas and Texas will probably have to adopt some kind of a registration procedure and we will then step up our activities in those states.

Our second fiscal year started April 1, and we are operating on a budget of $250,000 per year which represents the full amount of the grants which we have received thus far. We were able to stay within our budget during the first fiscal year primarily due to the fact that there was some delay in the hiring of necessary personnel and in getting various programs off the ground; but now that we are operating at full strength we are certain to experience financial frustrations in several areas.

5 - Request for info.

We are receiving some additional fimncial help by reason of a cooperative arrangement which we set up with the aid of COPE (AFL-CIO) whereby COPE is making a rather nice financial contribution to our Greater New Orleans registration effort. Other than this help we do not currently receive any other financial assistance from organized labor.

We are presented, from time to time, with many unusual problems which result in financial expenditures which we had not anticipated and which result primarily from instances of harassment and intimidation by persons opposed to Negro voter registration. For example, when a young registration worker in our Mississippi project was shot several weeks ago by persons opposed to the registration activities, we felt obligated to pay the doctor and hospital bills which were incurred. We had previously offered out assistance to the families of two Negro college girls who were injured when unknown parties fired into their home which had been used for housing registration workers.

We have expended money for legal fees for the payment to lawyers who were retained to represent registration workers arrested in Georgia and Mississippi for activities connected with voter registration. Our workers have been arrested for such things as disbributing literature without a permit, parading without a permit, failure to obey an officer when ordered to leave the court house and other such episodes.

We are now in the process of preparing our first annual report and this should be ready for release within a few days. You will be sent a copy. I am enclosing, for your information, copies of press released which have gone out from the Voter Education Project, a copy of the first status report which was released a few months after the project had been in operatinn and a copy of the financial statement of the Southern Regional Council for 1962.

We appreciate your interested in our work and if we can supply you with any other information regarding the activities of the Voter Education Project or of the Southern Rgyional Council in general, then please let us know.

Dear Mr. Branton:

I have been trying to get a chronology of the LeFlore County situation, beyond that which I can construct using newspaper sources, and it has been suggested to me that you have a report on that situation which might be helpful. If this is so, and if your material is available for distribution on some basis, please do let me know.

Dear Mr. Mabee:

You will remember that we met in connection with your visit to the SNCC conference at Tougaloo University earlier this year. It is a pleasure to be able to assist you in the preparation of your article.

Unfortunately, your question number one seeks information, so far as I know, is not all available. I am enclosing a table which I have drawn up from our records providing all of the data that we have in answer to question one.

I am sending, under separate cover, a copy of the VEP Annual Report, which is the only publication we have thus far drawn up. You will note when you receive it that it is stamped confidential. This means, simply, that it should be used for general background information rather than for direct quotation. If you feel that direct quotation from the report would add materially to the value of your article, let me know the section you want to quote, and I will find out whether or not Mr. Branton has any objection.

In answer to your question number three, I should be most interested in reading and commenting upon your article.

We shall look forward to hearing from you when your article is completed.

Dear Mr. Branton:

Since I made a visit to Miss. and Tenn. in May and June, I have been writing an article on the progress of voter registration in Mississippi's delta and Tennesee's Fayette and Haywood counties.

I am a teacher at Delta College, University Center, Mich., have won a Pulitzer Price, and have published four articles on the nonviolent movement for integration. I expect to be in an AFSC voter registration project in August in Greensboro, N.C. I called on you, as you will scarcely recall, a year ago in Atlanta.

If possible I would appreciate your help in these ways:

(1). Can you give me the % of eligible Negroes registered in the following counties for the 1960 election and the % registered now or as recently as figures are available ?

Tenn.	N.C.	Miss.
Haywood	Alamance	Bolivar	Panola
Fayette	Guilford	Coahoma	Quitman
	Forsyth	Leflore	Issaquena
		Sunflower	Washington
		Holmes	De Soto
		Yazoo	Tate
		Humphreys	Tunica
		Starkey	Tallahatchie

(2). I have a copy of your release of March 31, 1963. Do you have any other information which you think would be helpful ?

(3). Would you be willing to criticize the article I have written if I send it to you ?

The Voter Education Project is primarily a research project, non-partisan in nature, and does not engage in any direct action program. As such we have received tax exempt status from the Internal Revenue Service, which matter was handled for us by tax attorneys in New York.

A copy of the letter from the U.S. Treasury Department which granted the tax exempt status is enclosed for your information. If we can be of any other assistance to you please do not hesitate to write us.

Dear Sir:

As co-chairmen of our local FOOD FOR FREEDOM DRIVE in Terra Linda, California, we are in great need of factual information that we may use in talks, lectures and discussions with small groups on the voter registration projects. Dates of the commencement of your various aspects of the projects, and also results or lack of results as the project continues, would be very helpful to us.

If, in addition, you can share with us newspaper clippings, on the spot photographs of any kind, flyers of meetings, or pamphlets, these would be of tremendous value. Also slides, tapes, and movies (we can pay whatever costs are needed for mailing, rental, etc.) would be very helpful, or, if lists are available that give information as to how we may secure these, it would help us plan our meetings.

We have scheduled September 13 and 14 as FOOD FOR FREEDOM DAYS in Terra Linda, so if any releases can be sent to us immediately, we would greatly appreciate your help.

Your name has been given to me by Mr. Bernhard of the United States Commission on Civil Rights.

I am seeking information concerning the techniques and methods used in the literacy effort of the Negro "Voter Registration Drive." As our organization is deeply concerned about literacy, we are interested in not only information about the extent of these efforts, but we are also interested in distinct details of the methods used and their success.

You may be familiar with Dr. Frank C. Laubach who has helped develop the whole world concern for literacy. We are the instruments through which he works today. We have recently worked in cooperation with AID and the Peace Corps. I mention these things because I realize that you may not wish to divulge details of this program except to responsible people.

VEP is a research project which is scheduled to run up until the close of registration for the presidential election next year. It is our intention to publish a book on our experiences during the two-and-a-half years of the existence of the project. This book will probably see publication sometime in 1965. We have accumulated an enormous amount of data from the registration projects which we have supported throughout the South; however, we have not, at this point, attempted to bring these data together in any kind of comprehensive interpretation. We would be pleased to make our data files available to you, if you would find them useful.

With regard to citizenship training, I would suggest that you get in touch with the Rev. Andrew Young, Program Director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, 334 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta.

Dear Mrs. Ashford:

Your letter of October 23 which was addressed to Mr. Harold C. Fleming, former Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council, has been forwarded to this office for reply.

I am enclosing a copy of the VEP Newsletter which was issued in August of this year and while we had hoped to be able to put out an issue every month we know now that our next issue will not be released until some time in November.

The Newsletter will tell you something of the foundation and strcture of VEP. Most of our funds come from three foundations. These are the Edgar Stern Family Fund, the Field Foundation, and the Taconic Foundation.

VEP is primarily a research program and we require participating agencies to submit period financial and progress reports to our office. However, it is not contemplated that any meaningful reports will be issued by this office until the conclusion of the project late next year. The article by Penelope Patch, which appeared in New South was taken from our files because we thought it would be of interest to New South readers and we have many such field

We have not yet published any material on our experiences during the past year-and-a-half with voter registration in the South. Though we have accumulated an enormous amount of data in our files which I am sure you would find useful, we have not drawn it together in any comprehensive fashion.

We are sending you, under separate cover, a copy of our annual report of last April. I think you may find some things in it which you can use. In addition, we are sending you copies of two recent court decrees in voter registration cases in Louisiana. In the court's finding of facts in these two decrees, you will find listed some specific details of discrimination in voter registration in the two Louisiana parishes involved in the litigation. It is our opinion that these descriptions are generally accurate for techniques of discrimination throughout the South.

Dear Miss Gardner:

Here it is!

I'm sorry that it appeared to take so long, but this list was something we've been wanting to do for a long time and had not been able to get to. Your need proved to be the catalyst which got us going.

Mr. Branton has asked me to remind you again, Miss Gardner, that these programs, while current now, will expire (most of them) on March 31, 1964, the end of our current fiscal year.

Mrs. Shields is here in our office now, and has been most helpful to us in the final phase of this task this afternoon. It was kind of you to permit her to come over to help us. Thank you for your patience.

January 30, 1964

Mr. Lester Dunbar
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

I am seeking information relating to a study of efforts and materials used for literacy training for unregistered Negro voters in the Southern states.

A glance at the enclosed pamphlet will tell you that our organization is greatly concerned about the problem of illiteracy and has accomplished a great deal toward conquering this problem in 311 languages in over 100 countries in the world.

I am seeking to gather information about any and all organized efforts since 1954 to teach illiterate Negroes in the South to read in order to qualify to vote or to meet job requirements. Any information you can give me as to these efforts -- the methods and techniques and/or the success or failure -- will be greatly appreciated and may ultimately lead to benefits for these people. It is quite possible that on the completion of this study, when recommendations are made as to methods and follow-up publications, our organization or some other may be in a position to provide valuable technical assistance.

If you do not have such information or if you do not have access to it, I will appreciate your making any suggestions as to persons I can contact or sources I can study to get such information.

Thank you very much for your cooperation and assistance.

Cordially,

David E. Mason

LITERACY

FUND, INC.

LAUBACH LITERACY FUND, INC.

Laubach Literacy Fund, Inc. (LLF) is a nonprofit, educational organization founded by Dr. Frank C. Laubach, originator of the "Each One Teach One" literacy concept.

OBJECTIVE

The objective of Laubach Literacy Fund is to aid in the reduction of adult illiteracy throughout the world.

MOTIVATION

Laubach Literacy Fund is convinced that the ability to read and write opens a door for the new reader to a more abundant life, and that every nation needs a literate people.

ACTIVITIES

Laubach Literacy Fund works through its own staff, field representatives and literacy centers, and in cooperation with other individuals, agencies and governments in three major types of activities:

Teaching adult illiterates to read and write their own language.

Training teachers and writers for new literates.

Providing teaching materials and follow-up reading matter.

Among the current activities of Laubach Literacy Fund are:

—Aiding the work of individuals and literacy centers in East Pakistan, India (four places), Mexico (three places), Kenya, Nigeria (two places), Jordan, Guatemala, Colombia, Ecuador, Brazil, Congo (Brazzaville), and the United States.

—Developing a series of graded books for new readers in Spanish, and working on similar series in other languages, including Portuguese, Yoruba, Igbo, Tamil, Bengali, Kannada, Santali, and Malayalam.

—Developing in English:

1. A new adult reading series leading to functional literacy.
2. Graded, informative books in the New Readers Press series.
3. A series of books leading to the ability to read the Bible.
4. A weekly periodical, News for You, on three grade levels.

—Providing scholarship aid to literacy and writer training programs in several colleges and centers, including Syracuse University, San Francisco State College, American University, Hislop College (India), Memphis State College, Upland College, and California Western University.

—Conducting workshops for training volunteer teachers and writers concerned with illiteracy in their own communities in the United States.

—Conducting research in new literacy methods, and in the use of audio-visuals, television, radio and automated instruction.

—Providing a program of information and training on literacy as a vocation for American and international students in colleges, and informing America about world literacy needs.

EXPERIENCE

Laubach Literacy Fund draws upon the experience, materials and ideals of Dr. Frank C. Laubach, who, with his teams and associates, has worked with government leaders, educators and missionaries in more than 100 countries. His unique literacy methods, developed over a period of 35 years, have been adapted to more than 310 languages.

The Executive Director, Dr. Robert S. Laubach, has been on the faculty of the School of Journalism, Syracuse University, for twelve years, where he developed the training program in literacy-journalism. Graduates of this program have worked in more than 35 countries.

Laubach Literacy Fund staff members and field representatives are qualified by training and experience to teach illiterates, conduct literacy programs, write for new literates, and train teachers and writers.

SUPPORT

The work of Laubach Literacy Fund is supported by a broad base of thousands of individuals, many of whom are pledging one dollar per week. Laubach Literacy Fund seeks to work with the United States Government, with other governments and with grants from foundations on specific literacy contracts. Laubach Literacy Fund is also exploring ways to use surplus American food to aid literacy programs in developing nations.

We need, for a future project, large county maps for every county in Mississippi. Ideally, the maps should be large enough to show clearly, every house, on every road in the county. In fact, this is essential.

Could you get these maps for us, and send them here as soon as possible, or would it be better to write the State Highway Department?

Thank you.

I indicated the unavailability of this material from our files. I did state we would probably gather information on some of the cities for the coming election.

I suggested that it would be a difficult assignment to obtain this information even if he had local contacts in the local 20 listed cities. He communicated an impression that this was what he expected, and expressed appreciation for any leads we could give him as to possible sources. I stated I would explore further and try to provide what information I could gather within a week.

I am sending, as you suggested in our telephone conversation last week, a list of the questions to which I hope to find answers in preparation for the article on the Negro in politics which I am writing for the American Negro Reference Book of the Phelps-Stokes Fund.

For as many as possible of the cities on the list below, I should like to know:

(1) The wards (if no wards, then precincts) which are approximately 90 per cent or more Negro.

(2) For these wards or precincts, the approximate total population.

(3) For these wards, the total number of registered voters.

(4) For these wards, the total number voting in:

(a) the 1956 and 1960 Presidential elections

(b) the most recent gubernatorial Democractic primary (and run-off primary, if applicable)

(c) the most recent mayoralty election (for cities with an elected mayor); in cities with the council-manager or commission form, the most recent local election if Negro voters were presented with a significant choice.

(5) For these wards, the percentage of those voting who voted for Democractic and Republican candidates for President and Governor and for the two leading candidates for the principal local office.

The twenty cities in which I am interested are:

* Atlanta, Ga.	Little Rock, Ark.
Birmingham, Ala.	* Louisville, Ky.
* Charlotte, N.C.	Memphis, Tenn.
* Charlston, S.C.	Miami, Fla.
Columbia, S.C.	Montgomery, Ala.
Columbus, Ga.	* Nashville, Tenn.
Dallas, Tex.	* New Orleans, La.
Greensboro, N.C.	Norfolk, Va.
* Houston, Tex.	Richmond, Va.
Jackson, Miss.	Shreveport, La.

(* Indicates the city has a directly-elected mayor.)

Obviously this is a tall order. If it proves too time-consuming for your research assistant, I can send mine down for two or three days. In order to schedule this, I would appreciate your letting me know by March 6 whether it will be necessary. (My assistant cannot make the trip after March 10.)

If Negro voter participation in some of these cities is so minimal as to make a complete analysis meaningless, then a notation to that effect will suffice.

Many thanks for your kind offer of help.

Cordially,

James Q. Wilson

Mr. Frank Millspaugh
3457 Chestnut Street
Philadelphia 4, Pennsylvania

Dear Mr. Millspaugh:

Connie Curry has requested that we inform you as to the places where voter registration programs will be conducted under VEP sponsorship during the summer of 1964. We are not in a position to state positively, at this time, the exact location of our summer projects as the dates will depend upon the schedules most convenient to the local groups and will be determined also by whether the books are open. There is a possibility that programs will be going on at some time during the summer in the following places:

ALABAMA:

Birmingham
Montgomery
Mobile
Macon County (Tuskegee)

Special Note: The registrar's office is open two days only per month in most of the counties but will be open for a one-week continuous period beginning July 1, and we will be supporting a special program in some 40-50 Alabama counties during this period.

Requests for Information

ARKANSAS:

The Arkansas legislature adopted a new registration law on March 27, in a special session and it will have to be tested in court.

Registration in Arkansas is represented by payment of a poll tax and under the new bill a person can get a free poll tax receipt during the period April 10 to 30, and again from September 10 to 30. This rules out any summer projects in Arkansas.

FLORIDA:

Orlando
St. Petersburg
Miami
Tampa
Jacksonville
Tallahassee
Pensacola

GEORGIA:

The present deadline for registration for voting in the November election is May 2; however, the Georgia legislature will meet in special session on May 4, and the deadline is expected to be extended until about July 2. If so, then programs will be conducted in:

Atlanta
Columbus
Macon
Augusta
Savannah

(more)

LOUISIANA:

21 rural parishes under the direction of CORE

New Orleans
Baton Rouge
Shreveport

MISSISSIPPI:

A statewide program under the direction of COMMCil of Federated Organizations but which is not likely to receive financial support from VEP.

NORTH CAROLINA:

2nd Congressional District (northeastern part of the state)
Charlotte
Winston-Salem
High Point
Greensboro
Durham
Raleigh

SOUTH CAROLINA:

A statewide program covering every congressional district and every county.

Special note: Registration is possible in most counties for only 3 days per month. However, there will be a two-week continuous period when registration will be possibly in May and in August.

TENNESSEE:

Memphis
Nashville
Knoxville
Chattanooga

(more)

TENNESSEE:

No further registration possible in 1964.

VIRGINIA:

4th Congressional District
(southeastern part of state)

Norfolk
Newport News
Portsmouth
Richmond
Lynchburg
Roanoke

As a word of caution, in planning any summer program you should check with local officials to determine whether registration will be possible during the period you plan to conduct a program. We have had the unfortunate experience of seeing projects started only to have the registrar's office close one week later.

If we can be of any further help then kindly let us know.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Branton:

At the beginning of September of last year, I talked with you about my intentions of writing a thesis on voter registration. You will recall that I had just left the CORE "Task Force" in Plaquemine, Louisiana, and was returning to Syracuse University. Initially my plans were to start research immediately, however, as you well know, the "struggle" has not restricted itself to the South, and thus, we in the North often find ourselves in rather "Southern situations."

In any event, after jail and extended action projects in this city, I am finally in the midst of the fore mentioned task. In this regard, your offices could be of tremendous help in providing me with information about VEP activities in the South. Specifically, I am dealing with Louisiana and Mississippi in an effort to illustrate in depth, the peculiar situations a person of color is subjected to when he attempts to register to vote.

Particularly, I am interested in registration figures for the Sixth Congressional District of Louisiana, and the Mississippi Delta region. While the academic community has sparingly dealt with Negro suffrage in the South, little emphasis has been placed on matters of community mobilization, economic and violent intimidation, land ownership, and "direct-action." Relative to these areas, I would think that copies of "field" reports from Ronnie Moore, and the Greenwood office would be helpful. These would be sent back to your offices immediately if they could be made available.

Wade Martin Jr. Sec'y State

In your First Annual Report, the problem is raised about the involvement of getting to the "rank and file of the Negro community with the message." Has their been any significant progress in this area?

Request for Copy

I read with interest Mr. Waters' article on "Negro Registration in the South," in The New Republic and hope that we get a lot of activity in "the church." If there is a copy of this latest report on hand, I would greatly appreciate one.

Your prompt consideration of this matter would be very much appreciated. Please bill me for whatever cost are incurred with regard to this data. I shall inform you on the outcome of this project, and expect to have it completed by the CORE summer project, in which I shall again participate.

Thanks very much for your consideration.

Dear Mr. Moore:

In reply to your letter of April 1, in which you request information about the voter situation in South Carolina I am sorry but we do not have available, for release, any published information on this subject. VEP is engaged in research relating to the whole question of voter registration and voter education and it is our intention to publish a lengthy report at the conclusion of the project which will end this year. This report, however, will not be available until sometime next spring at the earliest.

We do maintain data in our research files pertaining to the voter situation in South Carolina but it is not the kind of information which is written up for release. If you have specific questions which you would like answered perhaps we could supply you with some of the information if you would let us know what it is that you would like to know.

The Voter Education Project has been working in several places in South Carolina and during the 21-month period ending December 31, 1963, there had been an increase of 20,727 new Negro registrants in the state as a result of VEP-supported programs. As of April 1, 1964, we are launching massive programs in every South Carolina Congressional District on a locally organized Congressional District basis where the residents of each district provide the leadership. Grants are being made direct to each district organization and these programs will run for approximately three or four months to begin with. The First and Second Congressional Districts have been working under such a program with us for the past several months and the Third, Fifth and Sixth District programs are being launched immediately.

We are experiencing some delay in getting a district program started in the Fourth but we have had a very successful registration program in Greenville under the local sponsorship of NAACP.

We prefer that you release no publicity regarding these programs and while it is too early to tell what the results will be we are very optimistic that excellent results will come from this special effort which, incidentally, is the only one of its kind for any state in the eleven-state VEP territory.

On Wednesday, May 13th I will present a paper on the leadership of the negro community to a graduate seminar at the University of Massachusetts. As a negro leader mentioned in William Brink and Louis Harris's book, The Negro Revolution in America I would like to ask you the following questions:

1. What part have you played in the negro struggle for equality? (Could you send me some biographical data?)

2. Do you feel that positive legal enactments can settle or improve the racial situation? In general what laws do you feel would be more effective? In particular how helpful do you consider the Civil Rights Bill now before Congress?

I would appreciate as detailed an answer as possible and would welcome any printed material you can send.

Thank you very much for taking the time to answer.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

Louisiana registration figures are fairly accurate and you may obtain official figures for each parish by writing to:

Honorable Wade O. Martin
Secretary of State
State Capitol Building
Baton Rouge, Louisiana

~~These~~ These figures will be by race and political parties. Figures for Mississippi are extremely hard to come by, and we have no figures for any of the counties other than those contained in the 1961 Civil Rights Commission Report on Voting.

Most of the research data which we get in is simply filed for subsequent study when we start compiling our final report following the November Election, and for this reason, we would not be able to send you copies of any field reports. If there is a particular field report you have reference to, perhaps we could make you a photocopy.

There has been considerable improvement in getting the message over in the Negro community and the results have been reflected by increased new registration. I am enclosing a copy of the latest figures. The information contained in Pat Waters' article in The New Republic resulted from an interview with me rather than from a report.

Do you have recent data on registration in the South? I am especially interested in Negro registration but white registration is pertinent also. By "recent" I mean figures for any or all of the last few years and in addition to those given in the three reports of the Civil Rights Commission.

I am myself engaged in research on Negro politics in the South, so any figures you have are welcome.

Incidentally if you are still publishing New South, I would appreciate being on the mailing list.

One other matter. A New York Times dispatch reported that the Voter Education Project in Mississippi was pulling out. If you have available a report on this or any other VEP projects I would certainly like to see such reports. I have wondered how successful these projects would be and what kinds of difficulties were encountered. I have my own ideas but am very anxious to compare notes with others.

Also, it would be greatly appreciated if actual figures (i.e. numbers attempting and those successful) on voter registering attempts. Dear Mr. Debbs:

Leslie Dunbar asked me to reply to your letter to him of July 28, regarding the plans for a continuation of a voter program in South Carolina following the termination of VEP. Les was leaving for a much needed vacation, and I wanted to explore further our own plans for South Carolina before replying to your letter. I subsequently received your letter to me dated August 19, and appreciate your complimentary remarks.

We have every reason to be pleased with the results in South Carolina and with the VEP programs there. This is the only state where we have made direct grants in every single congressional district. Both the organizational structure and the registration results could be described as excellent in the First, Second, and Sixth Congressional Districts. The Fourth District is relatively new but promises to be a good program. The Third District appears to be lacking in leadership in comparison with the other districts, and the Fifth District has done very poorly as a congressional district program, although we have had good results from two or three counties.

I am certain that we will continue direct VEP support through the October 5 registration deadline in all of the districts excepting the Third and Fifth.. I am going to Columbia Thursday night, August 27, to get with the leadership from each of the congressional districts and will probably make some kind of grant to their new statewide program which would tide them over for the remainder of the year. I would suggest that they freeze their funds from the Presbyterians for use when there are no further VEP funds available.

With kind personal regards.

Atlanta, 3, Ga.

My dear Mr. Dunbar:

We wondered if you had any figures since last year's election covering the percentage of Negro registration in the southern states. Perhaps your Voter Education Project has worked out some figures later than those we saw in the papers last summer which gave the percentages of Negroes of voting age registered state by state.

Whatever you have we would greatly appreciate and give credit when they are used in our next Labor Fact Book.

Sincerely,

Robert W. Dunn

Dear Mr. Cohen:

Your letter of February 8 to Mr. John H. Wheeler, President of the Southern Regional Council, is hereby acknowledged, and has been referred to me to reply. The materials which you requested have already been sent to you and should have been received by now.

The Voter Education Project was set up originally to operate for approximately 2½ years, and this period has ended; we are in the terminal stage and will not be sponsoring any additional voter registration projects anywhere.

We have previously supported two separate voter registration projects in the Richmond area, and perhaps you would want to get in touch with some of the persons who where directing those projects regarding your interest in registration programs. I suggest you see one or more of the following persons:

Dear Mr. Wheeler:

I read your report on the effect of the negro vote on the election and the New South with interest.

Everyone here agrees that increased negro registration gave the state to President Johnson.

In view of the gubernatorial election here next November will your organization be sponsoring any voter registration projects or anything to increase the negro vote in spite of the state poll tax.

If so I would like to help is there anyone in Richmond I could contact.

Since I'm a student and don't think it advisable that my superiors know it would be best if I could contact the person or organization.

Dear Mr. Dolan:

This office does not keep figures on Negro voters in the North, as we have confined our activities entirely to the South. I am enclosing a table entitled, "Southern Negro Voter Statistics," which should provide you with some helpful information.

The Voter Education Project has been spending all of its time helping to get people registered during the past three years, and we are now in the process of analyzing the data which we have accumulated, but it will be quite some time before we are ready to release a final report.

An early fall, 1964, issue of Crisis, (the official NAACP magazine) carried some statistics regarding Negro registration throughout the entire country, and a subsequent issue revealed some of the voting trends. You might also check the Congressional Quarterly for the years 1963 and 64 for some statistics on Negro registration.

The White Citizens Council has two addresses in Mississippi. They are: Associated Citizens Councils of Mississippi, 315 Plaza Building, Jackson, Mississippi, and the Associated Citizens Councils of Mississippi, Greenwood. We have no address for the Council in Alabama.

Dear Mr. Peterson:

We have your letter addressed to Mr. Branton of the Voter Education Project, requesting information on the role that the negro has played in the presidential elections from 1921 to 1964.

Attached is a list of publications which we feel you will be able to find in your local library which might be helpful to you in your research. We regret that we can not send them to you, but they are single copies in our permanent library. We are also enclosing two of our own publications, The Negro And the Ballot in the South by Margaret Price, and What Happened in the South. Included herein is a sheet reflecting facts and statistics we have gathered, entitled, "Estimated Negro Voter Registration in 11 Southern States in 1956 and 1964;"

The Voter Education Project, headed by Mr. Wiley Branton, one of our Special Projects, was started in 1962. The field work ended in October 1964 and now a comprehensive analysis of its data is being readied for book publication in the future.

We would be able to make a more thorough investigation of any specific place or issue if you wish, but this is the best information we can pass on to you at present.

Dear Sir:

Please send me some literature on Negro Registration and voting in the "Deep South", especially in the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia. Information such as, the number of Negroes of voting age, number registered to vote, percentage of those registered who actually exercise their right to vote, what means are used by local communities, counties and state officials to deny the Negro his right to vote would be most helpful. Also, what has been done and what is being done or contemplated by the local, state and Federal Government to permit the Negro to exercise fully his voting rights.

I am a student of government (West Texas State University, Canyon, Texas) and plan to use this information in a class discussion.

Dear Miss Carstens:

Your letter of April 3 arrived while I was still in Europe, and that accounts for the delay in replying to your request.

I enclose herein a copy of the First Annual Report of the Voter Education Project, which will fully explain the purpose and organization of our project. I am also enclosing a table showing the results of our project during the past 2½ years.

The only relationship which we have with AFL-CIO's COPE is one of cooperation in planning, and in the sharing of information. COPE was in the business of voter registration long before our project was started, and because of our mutual interest in increasing registration, COPE has not conducted programs in areas where VEP was making grants, as it would have only been a duplication of effort, and in like manner, we have refrained from working in areas where COPE either had a program, or in some instances, where we requested that they run a program. We have generally worked with the same local leadership which normally works with COPE.

I hope this information will be of some value to you.

Dear Ted:

I have no way of knowing what report you last received, but I am sending you the latest thing which we have now in our office regarding Negro voter registration in the South.

Many of the civil rights and local organizations have indicated plans to conduct voter registration programs during the next year, and I am certain that most of them will devote some time to political education. One example showing the need for political education was revealed in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, last November when a Negro who had won the Democratic primary for the House lost in the general election. A study of returns from Negro precincts show that there were enough Negro voters who voted for President Johnson, but failed to follow through and vote in the House election to have made the difference.

At the moment, it does not appear that there will be any coordinated voter registration activity across the South unless there is another VEP program. Such a possibility looks extremely doubtful, but we will wait and see what the voter bill provides and then give some thought to a VEP-type organization.

Sincerely yours,

Wiley A. Branton

2. Photocopies from a portion of our Second Annual report which deals with Mississippi during the period April 1, 1963 through March 31, 1964. I am sorry I could not send you a complete copy of this report, but our supply is just about exhausted.

3. A table entitled, "Southern Negro Voter Statistics."

4. Some statistics from the Congressional Quarterly for the week ending July 5, 1963.

We are in the process of compiling all the material we have collected during our 2½ years of operation for a final report.

but is is not certain at this date just when this report will be completed. I am sure this report would contain information that would prove helpful to you in your thesis, and if your paper is not due at an early date, perhaps you would like a copy once it is completed. In reply to your request for a "fact sheet on voter registration of Negroes in the South," I have enclosed a table entitled, "Southern Negro Voter Statistics," which should give you the information you need.

We are in the process of writing a book on all the data compiled during the past two and a half years, and if you would like to receive a copy once it is completed, please let us know, and you will be placed oncour waiting list.

When Professor Borinski of Tougaloo gave you 63 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta, he gave you our old address. We are now located at 5 Forsyth Street, and have no offices on Auburn Avenue.

I hope the information enclosed will be of some help to you, and if we can be of further assistance, you have but to ask.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sirs,

I have been asked by Mr. Paul Hanlon of the above organization to help compile a fact sheet on voter registration of Negroes in the South, especially in Alabama. One of the groups to whom we have written, CORE Headquarters in New York, referred us to your project. Mr. Gore, their Assistant Director in the Department of Organization, says, "There is a single source for all of the materials which you want," and then gives your address, followed by "If they don't have it, it isn't available."

We also wrote Professor Ernst Borinski of Tougaloo College, Mississippi, and he suggested we write "The Southern Regional Council, Inc., 63 Auburn Avenue, Northeast, Atlanta." We presume you are one outfit with two addresses.

What we want is the type of fact presented at the Rally in Mongomery. We also hope that as the facts change, we might keep informed of that. So we would like a list of people whose information we can rely on, who will keep us posted from time to time.

There is quite a demand in Saint Louis for information of this type, and people seem to turn to us to give it to them. We are sure you can help, since you are so highly recommended, and so please write to me at the address below. Thank you very much.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Sullivan:

It has never been any secret that individuals in the Kennedy Administration strongly supported the idea from the very beginning which led to the Voter Education Project, but it should be emphasized that VEP is not a program of the Kennedy Administration. Louis E. Lomax wrote an article in the May 1962 Issue of Harper's in which he attempted to describe the background of the Voter Education Project. I took sharp issue with the Lomax article and my letter to the Harper's editor appeared in August 1962.

I ~~would~~ did not personally participate in the early discussions regarding the establishment of such a project but I am reliably informed that the only prodding of an organization was with the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. The reluctance on the part of some SNCC leaders resulted from an erroneous assumption that participation in the VEP program ~~will~~ would prevent them from engaging in direct action programs.

I am enclosing a copy of the October-November 1963 Issue of New South and the article on page 10 might be of further interest to you.

There has been considerable improvement in terms of the elimination of discrimination on the part of registrars in the South since the release of our First Annual Report and a good measure of the ~~release~~ gains can be attributed to the work of the Justice Department.

Dear Mr. Branton:

I am indebted to you for your kind letter of March 19th, enclosing useful materials on your Project.

From more than one source I have been informed that the original initiative for what led to the Voter Education Project can from a group which included officials of the Kennedy Administration. Indeed, it has been reported that the Kennedy Administration had to engage in a certain amount of prodding before the five civil rights organizations which now cooperate with you, decided to back such a project.

How accurate is that report? What was the role of leaders in the Kennedy administration, or of individuals or groups influenced directly by the Kennedy administration?

On page eleven of your first annual report, you indicate some reservations about the Justice Department's having done all it could have done to further litigation concerned with voter registration. Do you have anything more specific and more recent on that? In short, has there been improvement in this situation since that report was written?

Finally, I wonder if you might indicate the names of one or more civil rights leaders to whom I might write, who could give me their evaluations of the effectiveness of the efforts of the Justice Department in prosecuting alleged cases of police brutality.

Thank you so much for your assistance, Mr. Branton. Best wishes for your continued success.

Sincerely,

D. Sullivan

Dear Mr. Sullivan:

This will acknowledge your letter and request of March 16. I am enclosing a copy of the First Annual Report of the Voter Education Project which should answer most of the questions you have asked. I am also enclosing a copy of a newsletter which we have just released.

The Voter Education Project operates on a budget of approximately $275,000 per year, most of which is paid out in grants to participating organizations to help finance their non-partisan registration programs. We operate with a staff of only six people, as we do not do the actual registration work ourselfes, but observe and somewhat coordinate the registration programs of participating organizations.

Although our second fiscal year ends March 31, we are not likely to put out a Second Annual Report such as we did last year. We recently put out some statistical information as of December 31, 1963, and we are enclosing a copy for your use.

This will be the terminal year of the voter project, and we expect to support actual registration programs in each of the eleven states where we are working up until the deadline for registration for voting in the November general election. This deadline has already passed in Texas, but will go until October in most of the other states. Sometime this fall, we plan to start stydying our research data, and a full report is not likely to be released until the late spring or early summer of 1965.

I have no comments regarding the Justice Department and the policy regarding brutality cases.

Dear Mr. Branton:

Following several years in the field of human relations, in 1962 I was granted a leave of absence in order to complete work on a Ph.D. in Government at the University of Oklahoma. My dissertation will focus on the civil rights programs of the Kennedy Administration.

Because of the importance of your Voter Education Project, I would very much appreciate your sending me reports or statements or evaluations which will indicate to me what you have done since the Project was established in March, 1962. How large is your budget? How many are on your staff? In which states are you focusing your operations?

I would be especially grateful for examples of your field work, including examples of the field work of such organizations as the SNCC.

Last month I was in Washington and New York, supplementing my documentary research with interviews with persons in and outside the government. I encountered much criticism of the Department of Justice for not having more effectively prosecuted police brutality cases.

To what extent is this a valid judgement, in your opinion? Can you cite cases or instances in which they have failed to prosecute what appeared to be "air tight" cases?

Inasmuch as this dissertation will focus on the Kennedy Administration, I would value any comments you might make about its effectiveness in the civil rights field.

Thank you so much for giving this your attention, Mr. Branton.

Dear Mr. Maysles:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 1, 1964. There are a number of Negro candidates running for public office in many of the southern states. They are as follows:

In Virginia, there is a Negro attorney, S. W. Tucker, running for Congress from the Fourth Congressional District. That primary is being held July 14.

In South Carolina, there are a number of candidates, seventeen in all, running for election. Fourteen of these are in Columbia (Richland County). Ten are running for the House of Representatives, and four for the school board; Donald Sampson of Greenville County is running for the House, and James E. Sulton has announced his candidacy for the House in Orangeburg County; Leroy Brown of Beaufort County is expected to have little difficulty in being re-elected to a third term as County Commissioner. The primary date in South Carolina is June 9.

The primary date in Mississippi is June 2. Four Negroes have officially qualified to run for congressional nominations. They are: Rev. John Erle Cameron, Hattiesburg, for Congress from the Fourth Congressional District; Mrs. Victoria Gray, Hattiesburg, U. S. Senate, running against Senator John Stennis; James M. Houston, Vicksburg, for Congress, Third Congressional District, and Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer, Ruleville, candidate for Congress, Second Congressional District.

Request for Info

In Tennessee, the deadline for filing for candidacies is June 8, and while we know of no one who has announced forppublic office at this time, there will probably be one or more individuals who will announce their intention to run prior to the primary deadline August 6. There will be candidates announcing primarily in the urban areas, such as Memphis and Nashville.

In Georgia, where the deadline date is presently September 9, there are a number of dandidates. State senator Leroy Johnson is campaigning for his second term in office; Horace Ward, Attorney, is opposing the white incumbent for a senatorial seat from Fulton County; Donald Hollowell, Attorney, also of Atlanta, is opposing the incumbent Judge of Superior Court Durwood Pye.

All the other southern states that we have omitted have already held their primaries.

We hope this information is what you are seeking. If we can be of further assistance to you, please feel free to call upon us.

We do not have complete voter registration statistics by county. However, we do have fairly detailed records by states for 1947, 1952, 1956, 1960 and 1963-64 which I am sending under separate cover.

For four southern states (Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Virginia) official figures by race and county are obtainable by writing election officials. As our copying machine is on the blink and it may take some time before we can make readable copies, I will enclose the addresses so that you can write immediately. When our new machine arrives, I will send you copies of our records. In Tennessee, although the state does not keep these records in a central location, they can be gotten by writing each county election commission.

I hope I have been helpful to you. I am sorry we are not in a position to send you copies of our materials from Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Virginia immediately. If you have any further questions, please don't hesitate to ask.

Dear Sir:

I wonder if you could supply me with Negro registration statistics by state and county for the Southern region. If you have these statistics for several proceeding years in addition to the current year, it would be good to have these for comparative purposes.

Your assistance in this regard will be of inestimable value in completing a research project currently under way in our department.

Mrs. Elnora Braford
Route 2, Box 107
Holly Grove, Arkansas

Dear Mrs. Braford:

This office is in receipt of a letter from your son, Mr. Anderson Lark, of Los Angeles, in which he enclosed your letter to him of July 1 regarding some denial of your right to vote or to pay your poll tax.

I cannot tell from your letter just what the problem is, and we have never heard of any case in Arkansas where a sheriff refused to accept anybody's poll tax. I will undertake to explain to you what the present law is in Arkansas.

In order for one to vote in any and all elections in Arkansas, he must be a resident of the state for at least one year and of the county for six months and of the precinct for 30 days, and must pay a $1.00 poll tax on or before October 1 of each year. The payment of the poll tax will entitle the person to vote in all elections coming between October 2 of the year in which the tax is paid and October 1 of the following year. Therefore, if you did not pay a poll tax before October 1 of last year, then you could not vote in the Democratic Primary which was held last month, but if you pay a $1.00 poll tax before October 1 of this year, then you will be permitted to vote in the November 3 General Election for President, governor, and other state and local officials.

The 24th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States now provides that a person may vote in any federal election without the requirement of a poll tax. Arkansas will issue a free poll tax receipt during a 20-day period in September, but this will only enable you to vote for President, as there will be no contested federal elections in your county this year. I strongly urge everyone to pay the $1.00 poll tax so that they can vote in all elections, as you should be just as interested in voting for your local officials such as sheriff, judge, governor and other officials as you are in voting for the President.

Request for info

If you need further information, then please feel free to get in touch with us. I think that the June 30 deadline which you referred to was the deadline to get a free poll tax receipt for voting in the July primary, but you still could not have voted for any local or state officials.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Mr. Miller:

Dr. Leslie Dunbar left to go on vacation shortly after receipt of your letter to him of July 30, and he requested that I answer your letter regarding our Virginia registration plans. We have been in the process of considering some new programs in Virginia and I wanted to wait until I knew our decision before replying.

I am pleased to inform you that we are approving a substantial grant this week to the Crusade for Voters in Richmond for a registration program which will cover the entire Third Congressional District. This program will make use of a team of organizers who had planned to work in the Eighth Congressional District until that program fizzled out. We recently made a grant to CORE for work in the Tenth Congressional District under the direction of Mr. John Robinson.

We are also making a grant this week to the Lynchburg Voters League, and we expect to make a grant to the Virginia State Conference NAACP for work in the Fourth Congressional District and such cities as Charlottesville, Roanoke, Danville, Fredericksburg, and South Boston.

VEP has been conducting programs for the past several months in Petersburg, Suffolk, Newport News, and Norfolk and these programs will continue through the October 3 registration deadline, as well as a new program in Portsmouth.

We appreciate your interest in the Voter Education Project and we welcome any suggestions or comments which you might have.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Branton:

Thank you so much for your letter of August 11th commenting on the draft of our action guide and voter-registration. I was very grateful for your helpful comments. We will make the changes you suggested in relation to saying it is a non-partisan program endorsed by both political parties, rather than "sponsored" by - I think this is more accurate and far better.

I have shared your letter with Garry Oniki in relation to the fact that you feel it is too difficult and long for people to use in local churches and civil rights groups. We both feel that it is for the purpose of directing focuse toward those who want to do something and are committed enough to really want some concrete help. We are, however, revising the material somewhat in relation to....well, I think somewhat that we will help in this point - we are moving some of the material to the appendix which will make it available, but not make it seem so wordy and lengthy in the thing.

We are going to include a list of films, and of course, RIGHT NOW, which was sponsored by the Board for Homeland Ministries and our Committee on Racial Justice Now, will be included.

I have secured a list of 7 or 8 voter-registration films from Mrs. Septima Clark of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference which will be used. Mrs. Clark has given us some helpful suggestions in relation to the guide and hopes they will be able to use it with their supervisors through the South.

We appreciate your thoughtful assistance.

Dear Ms. Johns:

I am returning to you herewith the draft for an Action Guide on voter registration which you sent to Leslie Dunbar in June. I plead guilty to being responsible for this delay, as he bucked it over to me for my comments, and I simply did not get around to it until this week. Mr. Dunbar has gone on vacation now, and I told him that I would reply to your letter.

The Action Guide is a very interesting document, but I would consider it much too long for use in the average church. I am not familiar with the use to which you expect such a guide to be put, but unless you are dealing with people who will take the time to read something this lengthy, it would be better to condense the material for use in the average local church. If it will be sent to carefully selected individuals who will have the responsibility for getting programs started in several different churches, or in an unusually large church, then it would be quite effective for this use.

On page 4, you state that the Voter Education Project "is a non-partisan program sponsored by both the Republican and Democratic parties." The word sponsored should be changed to "endorsed." This draft was written prior to the passage of the civil rights bill, and I am certain you intend to bring it up-to-date now that the bill has passed.

Request for info

I am enclosing a copy of our Second Annual Report of the Voter Education Project, which will tell you something of the manner in which we operate, and names of the principal agencies working with us. You may note the names of the organizations, and you are free to describe the method in which we operate, or use any of the statistics in Table III.

One additional voter registration aid which you might list in your bibliography is a film entitled, "Right Now!" which was produced by the United Church Board for Homeland Ministries, and which was co-sponsored by VEP and other agencies. It is available on a loan basis from VEP.

If we can be of any further help, then please let us know.

DATE 8/6/64

TO: LESLIE W. DUNBAR

I have read the attached Action Guide for Voter Registration which has been prepared by Elizabeth Johns. It is very interesting but I think much too long for use in the avreage Church. It is the kind of thing which could be best used by some chairman who will have responsibility for getting programs started in several different churches, unless you are dealing with people who don't mind a lot of reading. There is good material in the Guide which could be condensed for local church use.

The word "endorsed" should be exchanged xxxx used on page 4 in lieu of the word "sponsored".

I would suggest that we send Mrs. Johns our latest registration figures. Her draft was written prior to the passage of the Civil Rights Bill and should therefore be up-dated.

She requested the names of organizations working with VEP and I suggest that we send her a copy of our Second Annual Report and tell her that she may quote the names of the organizations and the method of VEP operation with these groups.

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

You may recall that I wrote you some weeks ago asking your criticism of a first draft of an action guide we are preparing on voter registration. In working on it with Mrs. Septima Clark of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference the other day, we felt it would improve the document to be able to give statistics concerning the total Negro population of voting age in the eleven southern states and the number of Negroes registered to vote. I have looked for this information in the report of the Civil Rights Commission. There seems to be a breakdown of Negroes registered to vote only for eight of the eleven states. Would it be possible for you to give us this information with the break down by states?

You may recall that I also indicated in the document that the Southern Regional Council is serving as a coordinator of Civil Rights groups working on voter registration. I would like to include also a listing of the half dozen or so groups for whom you people are serving as coordinator in allocation of funds, etc. Would you please give me an accurate listing of these groups?

I appreciate your cooperation and help on these matters and would be happy to have any suggestions you would like to make for improving the first draft, since I will be revising the document in the next few days. I was pleased that your organization ordered copies of our first action guide on employment. I hope you will want to use this one on voter registration when it is completed.

With every good wish in the significant work you are doing,

Sincerely Yours,

Elizabeth Johns (h)

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

We are doing a series of Action Guides on various aspects of the racial crisis as part of our Racial Justice Now program. The enclosed manuscript is a first draft of the guide on voter registration. We would greatly appreciate your frank appraisal and critical reaction on this so we can make it of maximum usefulness to our church social action groups -- and others who may want to use it.

It will, of course, have a bibliography including reference to a new film on voter registration being produced by the United Church of Christ. If you can recommend additional audiovisuals on this subject we would welcome your suggestions. There will also be a list of organizations at the end.

If you know of special pictures, line drawings, quotations, charts, etc. that we could use to illustrate it and break up the copy, please share them or tell us where to get them. We will appreciate your cooperation in reading this material and I'll look forward to hearing from you soon. This guide is needed and I do want to get something out this summer.

Sincerely yours,

Elizabeth Johns

Dear John,

Although I am very interested in how you are making out with your assignment, I must confess that I am writing this letter out of selfish intent.

As you probably know, my husband, Frank, has been transferred to the Washington D.C. branch of his company, therefore, I am now working with the Washington D.C. Urban League. I began work today and have been assigned to the National Urban League Voter Education Project.

The aim of this project is to help local Urban Leagues in the following cities: Detroit, Miami, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Newark, Baltimore, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Cleveland, New York, Atlanta and Memphis establish voter registration drives in the Negro communities. As you know, a wealth of information and pragmatic guidelines are needed for projects of this kind. Therefore, Mr. Due, I have turned to you as a possible source for help in this area.

I would appreciate it greatly if you would forward to me as much available information you have on hand (or in your mind) which relates to establishing, coordinating and follow-up work on such drives together with statistical information within each city which you are acquainted, on white and non-white registered and non-registered voters, mthods of finding non-registered voters, methods of attracting non-registered voters to register and vote etc. I hope that I am not inconviencing you too much by asking for such information.

In the original letter I mentioned that our copying machine wasn't working. We are still not able to make copies for you since we would have to cut the pages out of the magazine to run them through the machine. I'm afraid my best suggestion is still that you buy a copy of Congressional Quarterly.

Dear Mr. Otten:

Mr. Branton has asked me to send you our most recent material released on the election situation, as you requested.

Our latest releases are, "What Happened in the South?" and "Southern Negro Voter Statistics." As you can note, the first mentioned release was through Southern Regional Council, and the latter, through VEP. There is a correction on the statistical release in column 7, where the figures should be reversed for Florida and Georgia.

We do not maintain a mailing list, as such, but we will keep you in mind in the future when we release material we think will be of interest to you.

Dear Miss Barron:

I'm sending you, under separate cover, some of our general materials.

We have a great deal of specific information, mostly newspaper clippings and correspondance with voter registration workers thoughout the South. However, at the present moment it is filed away and will not be analyzed until the final Voter Education Project report is written sometime in the early part of 1965. I am sending you copies of onw or two clips to show what I mean. If you wouldlike specific information, such as ward and precinct division, election returns, information about Negro candidates, etc. about any particular places I will be glad to send them to you. I t is necessary though that you restrict your request to specific cities and/or counties in the eleven Southern states.

I hope I have been helpful to you.

Sincerely yours,

The margins on the original are much better. I retyped the carbons because I inserted them backwards before.

Gentlemen:

I am a student at Boston University, Boston, Massachusetts, and am engaged in researching the Negro voting behavior in the South. As part of this, I am interested in both the voting education and registration programs.

I have been advised that you would be in position to assist in my study. Therefore, I would greatly appreciate any information you have available, particularly describing the work in this area and the problems involved therein.

I am eagerly awaiting your reply which I hope will be at the earliest convenience.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Miss Maurer:

I am mailing you, under separate cover, some materials that should help you with your term paper. In addition to the Project's general materials Mr. Branton suggested that we send you information about Memphis, Tennessee. I hope this will satisfy your need for information from a specific city. If for some reason the materials we send are inadequate, I would suggest that you read the Memphis Commercial Appeal for November 4th and 5th.

As it is impossible to mail special delivery materials collect I used regular postage on your package. I certainly hope it arrives in time.

Dear Sirs:

I am a student at the University of Michigan, and am working on a paper for a Political Science course. I very desperately need some atatistical information concerning the voting procedures that were carried on in the South in our recent 1964 Presidential election. I wrote to the Commission on Civil Rights seeking this data and information and they referred me to you.

I would appreciate any and all information that you could send me caoncerning the problems and effects of Negree's voting in a specific city in the South. I need statistics concerning one area, and imagine that you would know more thann I, which particular city was of greatest interest. More specifically, it would be most useful to know the problems the Negro faced in his attempts to register and vote, and the effects that the Negro vote hade on the election returns - how they voted on certain issues etc..

I would appreciate the most rapid answer possible as the paper is due soon. I was delayed in going to the wrong sources for my information. I can't thank you enough for any material that you might have for me!! Thank you for your trouble

Sincerely,

Jeanne Maurer

Dear Miss Nusbaum:

Mr. Branton has asked me to send you information about voting in Alabama. Under separate cover I'm sending you the current registration statistics (other than contacting each county registrar there is no way to get official registration figures by race), our current information about voting laws, and clippings about recent voting suits. I have also included some general materials, such as the advertisement urging Negroes in Birmingham to register that includes sections of the 1964 Civil Rights Act which protect them, that show the climate surrounding voter registration activities.

If you are interested in documentation of reprisals following voter registration activities, contact the Reverend C. Herbert Oliver, Executive Secretary, The Inter-Citizens Committee, Box 1443, Birmingham. He has an extensive collection of affidavits from the whole state.

I hope I have been helpful. If you have further questions, please don't hesitate to write.

Dear Mr. Branton:

Thank you for your letter in response to my inquiry about seeing you in Atlanta. My concern was with gaining information collected by the Southern Regional Council about the cities I would be studying in my dissertation about the Negro vote as a political resource. As my research has progressed in Durham, N.C., I have decided that there is enough of interest to be deal with in that city to make it unlikely that I will have time to consider other cities. Consequently my plans to visit Atlanta have changed. In any case, thank you for your willingness to see me. As I said to Dr. Dunbar in Durham last week, I hope to have some information that will be of interest to you within a year on the achievements and limitations of the Negro vote in Durham.

I do have one request that I hope will not inconvenience you. Would you mind having a copy of a list of Southern Regional Council publications sent to me, as well as a description of any data you may have on Durham and Durham County, N.C.? Thank you very much.

My schedule is rather hectic for the next three weeks, and I do not know just what Thursday I will be in Atlanta, and would therefore suggest that you make it November 18 or 19, but would appreciate your letting me know as early as possible when you will be in. There is a possibility that I can see you on Thursday of this week, or possibly on the 29th of October, but I would not know about the 29th date until a day or so before. Mr. Harvey Burg
253 West 101st Street

Dear Mr. Burg:

Your letter of December 9 is acknowledged. To my knowledge, there is no digest of Alabama constitutional-statutory or case law pertaining to voting rights, etc. I would suggest that you write to Mr. Burke Marshall at the Justice Department to see if they are familiar with any such digest. Most of the litigation involving voting rights in recent years has been handled by the Justice Department.

The Voter Education Project has conducted several registration and/or voter education programs in Alabama during the past 2½ years, and we have several ppogress and field reports from which meaningful data may be gathered. Unfortunately, we only have one copy of each of these reports, and it is not yet analyzed to the extent that anything can be furnished you immediately. We have just terminated our financial support program, and will spend the next two or three months analyzing the data, after which we will write our final report on the entire project. If there is some specific information which you would want, and which we could gather with a minimum of difficulty, then we would try and get it for you. No official statistics are released, and we have to rely on various sources to get our registration data.

I honestly do not think much of the utility of drawing up a digest as suggested by you, for the reason that it appears that the Justice Department is best equipped to handle any litigation regarding voting rights in Alabama, and that such a digest would find very little use outside the Justice Department. I don't think you would find enough case law involving political organizations and participation in the membership activities to form the subject matter of a digest. I think very highly of the idea of the development of a pamphlet (based on conclusions of legal research, rather than a digest, as such) which would be a practical guide to participation in political activity in both parties. We have not yet done anything along this line, and it is possible that such materials may be developed after we write our final report.

We do not have any manuals from political organizations, and I would suggest that you write to Atty. Orzell Billingsley, who is quite active with Negro Democratic affairs in Alabama. His address is: 1630 Fourth Avenue, North, Birmingham, Alabama.

I am enclosing a copy of the latest "Southern Negro Voter Statistics" which you might find of interest.

Very truly yours,

Mr. Wiley Branton

Dear Mr. Branton:

Chuck Morgan suggested I write to you in the aftermath of a conversation we had last month.

I am a second-year student at Columbia Law School, and a member of the Law Students Civil Rights Research Council. Last summer I worked for Attorney Oscar Adams of Birmingham, Alabama, on civil rights cases in the Birmingham-Tuscaloosa areas.

I would be grateful for your help on the following matters, by answering these questions:

1. Have any digests of Alabama constitutional-statutory law and case law pertaining to voting rights, political organization and participation in the membership activities of existing political parties been worked up? If so, may I see a copy? Or, can you direct me to a copy?

2. What materials exist regarding statistics, problems, and objectives of voter registration and education in Alabama? May I have copies of what has been released by your group?

3. What is your view as to the utility of:
   A. Drawing up a digest as noted above in #1. (Checking with other sources so far has failed to reveal the existence of such a digest).
   B. Developing a pamphlet-based on the conclusions of the digest research, and additional materials such as party organization manuals and whatever else you are aware of as existing - which would be a practical, explicit guide to participation in political activities (within the existing major parties; or outside them, if necessary) on local and state levels by all Alabama citizens? Two questions regarding this pamphlet immediately arise: Has your group, or another, already done something along this line? If so, how far does the effort go? Also, if you think developing this guide would be valuable, I'd appreciate any suggestions, and data, which you might consider relevant. Oh yes, do you have Alabama Democratic or Republican party organization and participation manuals? If so, may I peruse them?

Thank you for your kind attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

Harvey Burg

Mr. Loren Miller
647 Micheltorena Street
Los Angeles, California 90026

Dear Loren:

I seem to have forgotten the final disposition of the cases reported in Moore v. Dempsey following the remand. Dr. Robert Leflar wrote an article entitled, "Moore v. Dempsey Revisited" which first appeared, as best I recall, in the Illinois Law Review about 1950 or 51, and was repeated in the Arkansas Law Review about 1951 or 52. I think this article will give you some valuable background information.

My late grandparents were very active in supporting the defenses of those persons charged following the Elaine riot, and they told me that the final disposition of those who had formerly been sentenced to death went something like this:

> The Arkansas penitentiary, at that time, was located in Little Rock, and executions were carried out there. The convicted Negro defendants were held at the penitentiary during the long legal proceedings on appeal, and the state requested that Phillips County reimburse the penitentiary for keeping the men. When the county did not pay, the defendents were sent to Helena but the ~~city~~ refused to accept them, and when they were returned to the penitentiary, the latter refused to take them back, and they were left standing outside the prison gates and deserted by the guards. One by one they walked off, and no further effort was ever made to prosecute this final bunch, and no one, to my knowledge, was ever executed.

I know some people in Arkansas who were involved in some way or another with these cases, and if the law review article does not give you what you want, then I would be pleased to write some letters to secure additional information for you. One person who might be able to give some information is Judge John E. Miller, United States District Judge, Fort Smith, Arkansas. I understand he was involved in Moore v. Dempsey in some way, but this was long before he became a federal judge and I do not know what side he was on, but you might want to drop him a note.

We have no information as to the number of registered Negro voters in Phillips County, Arkansas, in 1920. I would suggest that you write to the county clerk of Phillips County at Helena, Arkansas, or to the Hon. Jimmy Jones, State Auditor, State Capitol, Little Rock, Arkansas.

If I can be of any further help, then by all means let me know. With kind personal regards.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Wiley:

I am doing some reserach and I need some information which you may have.

1. What was the final disposition of the cases reported in Moore v. Dempsey decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1923--the so-called Elaine Riot Cases.

What I am particularly anxious to find out is what Arkansas did after the reversal in the Moore case and after the case was returned to the United States District Court with directions to inquire into the allegations of the petition for writ of habeas corpus. It is my recollection that the cases were finally disposed of by some sort of plea, but it is necessary that I have accurate information.

2. I am also very desirous of finding out the number of Negroes who were registered to vote at Phillips County, Arkansas, in 1920.

I enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply. With many thanks for whatever information you can give me, I am

Dear Mr. Reid:

Unfortunately, we suffer the same difficulty as you in trying to secure registration figures by race in many of the counties in the South. We are now in the process of attempting to gather figures pertaining to the number of qualified voters by race who were qualified to vote in the November general election, but it will be a few weeks before the returns will be in.

I suppose you know that official figures by race may be obtained from state officials in Louisiana, Florida, and Virginia, though at last report we had not been able to get the racial breakdown for Virginia. Arkansas and Texas have had no registration requirement other than payment of a poll tax. Arkansas has released figures by race every two years, and the 1962 figures can be obtained by writing the state auditor at Little Rock, but he does not have a 1964 racial breakdown. Arkansas voters adopted a constitutional amendment last month abolishing the poll tax for voting in any election, and setting up a somewhat permanent registration system for the first time.

We will retain your letter in our files so that we can send you such information as we may gather in our current survey as soon as it becomes available.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Mr. Branton:

We are conducting a research project which involves the most recent voter registration figures by race for each county in all of the southern states. Inasmuch as we are unable to secure these data by race from a large number of the Board of Registrars, it was suggested that we seek your assistance in obtaining this information.

We learned that your organization has conducted a wide and vital Voter Education Project; a detail copy of your findings on this project, along with the information aforementioned will be of great value to us in completing our research project.

Your immediate attention to this matter will be very greatly appreciated.

Respectfully yours,

Dear Andy:

I am enclosing a card which we received from Professor Patricia Barrett requesting information regarding teaching materials for citizenship training for newly registered voters. Since VEP maintains no such materials, would you please send her samples of materials used at your Dorchester center, and information pertaining to other programs which I am certain you would know about.

Dear Mr. Miller:

North Carolina is one of the states where we experienced difficulty in getting reliable registration data by race for each county. Our best research reveals a total registration in North Carolina for the year 1960 of 1,819,869, with white registration being 1,647,703, and Negro registration 172,166.

The 1961 U. S. Commission on Civil Rights Report Volume I - Voting, shows a county-by-county breakdown for North Carolina and shows a total registration of 1,861,430, and a non-white registration of 210,450.

The Voter Education Project has conducted several registration programs in North Carolina, and we estimate the total registration in that state as of November 1, 1964, to be 2,200,000, with a Negro registration of 258,000. I am enclosing a table showing the latest Negro registration statistics in the South.

Objectives of Research Conference on Voting Behavior in the South.

1. Draft a census of recent research in the areas of Negro voter characteristics, registration and participation in the southern region.

2. Locate and identify reliable, documented sources of background data on the Negro voter in the South.

3/ Isolate and evaluate available materials on formal and informal restrictive and restraining influences upon the Negro registrant and voter.

* 4. Assessment of relationships between Negro voting behavior and other socio-economic aspects of Negro life.

* 5. Review available data on state action with regard to Negro suffrage:

   a. Statistical breakdown of past and present Negro registration and voting within the state.

   b. Influence of population shifts upon the size of both potential and active Negro voters - rural vs. urban, age, education, etc.

* c. Methods used, and social and cultural factors serving to limit and restrict Negro registration and voting.

* d. Individual and organizational strategies most successful in extending Negro suffrage.

* e. A state-by-state evaluation of Negro voting activities covering the two-year period of the project.

6. Discuss the feasibility of projecting future Negro voting behavior from the findings of the two-year project.

7. Discuss the areas in which the project can yield new information on voter characteristics, organization or participation.

Some questions bearing directly on the Voter Education Project:

* - Demographically and politically is there any evidence to support an assumption that effective voter registration and/or participation is a function of a particular type of organizational approach or strategy?

* - What are the minimum research controls necessary to assure uniformity in reporting and a sound evaluation of the project at its completion?

* - What constitutes a sound and feasible publication program for the project?

*Les suggests unstructured discussions perhaps around these points.

MEMORANDUM April 11, 1962

To: WBranton
JMoss

From: LWDunbar

I had meant to get you two together this week to discuss the advisory meeting on voting research. Even after I get back to the office on Monday (I hope) I'll probably not have time to talk: from the 19th on, I'll be in the office only a few hours.

My thoughts will, therefore, have to be in this form. Will you two please get together and settle the plans? As I understand it, Jim needs soon to send to the conferees an agenda.

Here are my suggestions; please don't regard them as more than that.

I might preside at the start, and we might begin by having Wiley describe VEP and say also as much as he feels proper at the time about decisions reached so far and programs under way or definitely planned.

Jim could next explain to them the twin research aims:

(1) to study in more detail the factors inhibiting southern voting

(2) to evaluate effectiveness of organization and field methods employed to increase registration

(If firm by that time, Jim could also describe Ira Kaye's South Carolina project.)

The discussion might then rewolve around such points as the following:

(1) Do they have any hypotheses they think should be examined on either of the two aims?

(2) What research now going on should we get next to? (A good place for Matthews or Prothro to describe what they are doing. Also, anyone else who is at work on something now.)

(3) Do they see ways we can be mutually helpful? (e.g., would they like to assign a student or students to working with or watching a program, who would do something for us in exchange?)

(4) Are there likely to be data produced by our program in which they would be interested and would like to have reported to them?

(5) What advice do they have for us regarding VEP's data collecting methods?

I think the conference should be run loosely enough so that we can talk up and down any by-ways which open.

As to the amenities, I think we would find it easiest to leave everyone on their own for lodging, breakfast, and dinner. Lunch we can provide in the office. Peggy says we can all come to the house after dinner for drinks, if that would be a good idea.

Jack was happy to get them and asked me to thank you for him, too.

We all send regards and wish you success in your studies.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM

Re: THE ASSASSINATION OF JOHN F. KENNEDY

Wiley, Jean, and I were eating at Herren's restaurant at about 10 minutes past 2. As we were walking up the stairs, I was talking to Jean, and was aware of something being said over the public-speaking system, but I could not catch the words. Wiley stopped, a look of disbelief crossed his face, and he said, "Did he say the President was shot?" We went on up the stairs, and glancing into the main dining room of Herren's, I noticed no particular excitement evident among the diners. Two men walked up to the cashier's counter, and Wiley asked them if he had heard correctly that the President had been shot. One of them said yes, that is what had been said, and that the President had been wounded seriously.

My first reaction was one of anger. It was, I believe, a mixed anger. It was difficult for one during the Kennedy years, who stayed pretty close to public affairs, not to have a personal reaction to Kennedy. One found him either attractive or unattractive in a personal way. (At 3 o'clock, just about 2 hours after Kennedy was shot, I am looking across the street into the offices of the Journal-Constitution, and there is an enormous amount of activity - persons running into the doors off the street and buying newspapers. This is the first public reaction I have seen here in Atlanta to the news). One whose politics were liberal or to the left of liberal could, I think, find Kennedy personally attractive while deploring the inadequacy of the President's politics and programs. So, I would suppose that there was some personal content in my feeling of anger upon learning of his assassination. However, I believe that the great proportion of this anger derived from disgust and chagrin at the seeming inability of the President and of those around him, to understand the political implication of what has transpired in the country during the past few years. I remarked to Wiley as we were leaving Herren's, that this is what happens to persons who play with fire without ever understanding what they are playing with.

It has seemed to me for some time that the reaction against Kennedy's really rather lukewarm civil rights program has been inseparable from the quite irrational reaction of business interests against his policies. It is rather clear that there is a significant coincidence between opposition to civil rights and opposition to Kennedy, even among those groups who do not express themselves in terms of civil rights. What I am trying to get at here is that this presidential assassination has fundamental political implications which have not, I think, been present in any previous presidential assassination. I suspect this assassination is a culmination of what can only be described as an incipient facism, which has been growing and concentrating in American politics, probably at least since World War II.

I talked with Dr. Vivian Henderson at North Carolina College just a few moments ago, and he told me that the TODAY show on NBC featured the Chief of Police of Dallas. He said the chief expressed on that program great concern for the safety of the President, and that the chief had said that the people in the United States apparently do not realize the nature of the opposition to Kennedy in Dallas. Henderson concurred that this was a political assassination in a much more fundamental sense than have been the previous ones. By this, I mean that there is a strong,well-financed, and relatively well-organized sector of American politics which is in the same political camp with whoever fired the shot. And, whatever the identity of the actual assassin may be, the politics of the shooting simply cannot be marked off as coming from a lunatic fringe.

I have the feeling that the political inconvenience and discomfort that would have been involved in putting a stop to the shootings, and bombings, and general brutalities to Negroes during the past few years (I do not imply here that these things have happened only during the past few years, but that I think it would have been politically possible to put a stop to them during the past few years) blinded Kennedy to the fundamental political implications of failing to suppress this element of American politics; and by supervision, of course, I do not mean that police action alone could have sufficed. The basic political misunderstanding, I believe, has been the failure to recognize the things that were necessary to be done. To be very brief, I regard Reston's* column of a month or so ago, in which he described the radical things that administration people were saying in private, and contrasted them to the orthodox and servative things they were saying in public, to have been a harbinger of the assassination.

I don't believe that this assassination can be separated from the civil rights movement, and certainly its implications for the success for the civil rights movement cannot be exaggerated. As inadequate as Kennedy's program was, and as inadequate as was his implementation of that program, it was probably better than anything we will see in the near future.

* New York Times

Johnson will be president for the next year, and one must seriously doubt that this time whether the Democrats will be able to elect a president next year. This more than likely means that Nixon will be president. On the other hand, it may very greatly strengthen Goldwater's hand, and produce an erosion of the middle-ground which will corrupt American politics and make for years of turmoil and repression ahead.

It is appropriate to remember at this time that Herbert Lee's assassin still sits in the Mississippi legislature; that the murderers of Emmitt Till and Matt Parker are still at large; that the two men that attempted to assassinate Moses, Travis, and Blackwell, are being tried on assault charges next Tuesday; that the murderers of the six children in Alabama are still at large; that William Moore's murderer is still at large; that Medgar Evers' murderer has never been tried, that Ross Barnett of Mississippi has never been brought to justice for criminal contempt; that Barnett's co-partner in criminal contempt, Paul Johnson, has just been elected governor of Mississippi.

It was convenient to regard all these things as aberrations of American politics, and by so regarding them, Americans have been able to avoid the difficult decisions they would have had to make about what needed to be done, if they had objectively interpreted the political implications of all these things.

At 3:30 this afternoon, the radio has been recounting reactions to the assassination from Washington and from all over the world. They are typified by Sen. Morse's calling upon the American people to pray for the president, and for the country. I have as yet heard no comment which indicated that the assassination has shaken any of the public figures into a realistic appraisal of what the assassination means politically.

Maybe I'm all wet.

We noticed in the office as we listened to the radio reports on the assassination this afternoon that there was a sharp contrast on the one hand, between the inanity of what was being said by pundits and politicians, and on the other, the down-to-earth and fundamentally sound things being said by people who were interviewed by the various media on the street. Typical comments: One woman said that it was, of course, a great tragedy, but that now maybe we could get back to constitutional government; a man said it showed that when Goldwater says there is no threat from the radical right, he merely indicates he doesn't know what he's talking about; another man said the assassination indicates there is a need for martial law all over the South, just like reconstruction. This same man mentioned Eastland and his political cohorts as being the responsible parties.

ADDENDUM:

We have now learned that the President's body was actually removed from the hospital at 5 minutes past 2. Thus, apparently, all of the announcements about his condition, and about the blood transfusion he was reported to have received and so forth, were cover-ups for the fact that he was dead at the time the announcements were being made.

FACT SHEET:

VOTING AND POLITICS IN THE SOUTH WITH REFERENCE TO THE NEGRO CITIZEN

PREPARED BY HERMAN H. LONG
RACE RELATIONS DEPT. OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSN., UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST, FISK UNIVERSITY

INTRODUCTION

The following thirteen tables contain a selection of important data which relate to the matter of voting and politics in the South in reference to the Negro citizen. They have been prepared for the Workshop of Negro College Educators for two primary reasons: (a) to serve as background information for a major presentation in one of the scheduled seminars of the total workshop group, and (b) to be used in the more detailed analysis and discussion of a small interest group in the field of voting and politics. In considering the problems and issues which have implication for adult Negro leadership and adult education, there is perhaps no set of interests of greater importance than those which lie in this field. We are dealing here not only with the basic process through which public policies are reached and critical decisions made, but also with the potential and actual forces influencing these decisions. If democratic government is the expression of the will of the people, as indeed we believe it should always attempt to be ideally, then politics is the essential vehicle for the articulation of that will. Our task as citizens, and certainly the task of education in confronting the demand for enlightened political performance, then becomes one of responsible choice and action toward a politically viable and free community in which the many and different interests find expression and enter into the marketplace of political debate and consensus.

Until the very recent years, the Negro citizen has had, at best, an indirect relationship to this process and minimal influence in determining its outcome. As recently as 1940, it is estimated that there were only about 200,000 to 250,000 Negro registered voters in the South; and yet in this same year more than three-fourths (77 percent) of the nation's total Negro population. The 1948 Democratic National Convention gave rise to the civil rights issue as a major domestic question for the first time since the reconstruction era. Although it had long existed as a moral question and as a kind of subliminal political issue, this was its first modern expression which invited a public response upon which would hang, in the long-run, the destiny of national political development. It was, in essence, a recognition of the reality that the Negro had become an important entity and force in national politics -- all in major part due to the cumulative effects of Negro migration northward and westward and concentration of the Negro population in strategic states whose combined electoral votes play a determining role in the outcome of national elections.

In every national election since 1948 the Negro vote has played, in more or less degree, a balance of power role; and in at least two of these elections the heavy urban northern Negro vote has been a central feature of the outcome. A resource of tremendous potential has therefore emerged in the hands of Negro citizens and Negro leaders which can be directly used to advance long-delayed objectives for full and equal citizenship rights. This is, by almost any standard, the major departure and most important frontier now at hand. But the lines of advance and attack have shifted from the North to the South where the greatest lag exists in Negro voter and political strength and where, at the same time, there is the greatest unused potential and lack of political sophistication.

Estimates of 1958 place Negro voter registration in the eleven most traditional southern states at 1,281,818. Although this represents a tremendous gain over 200,000 or more who had qualified in 1940, it remains only about a fourth of the potential Negro electorate in the 21 years old and over Negro population. White registered voters for these states are between seven and eight times the Negro figure, even though white registration rates are below those of other regions. A practical and immediate task is that of increasing the number of Negro qualified voters, not only insofar as Negro political strength and activity are concerned but also as regards the possibility of bringing about fundamental changes in the political system of the region, which has rested upon single-party domination, on the one hand, and rural domination on the other.

Several important concerns are raised out of these developments which have implication for Negro education in general and adult education efforts in particular. The exploration of these concerns will constitute a primary objective of the workshop and the special study and discussion group which will have assignment in this area. Some of these concerns are:

1. What role, if any, does Negro education, broadly conceived have in the area of politics, especially in matters of (a) political leadership, (b) political action, (c) political decision, and (d) citizenship education?

2. Would a two-party South correct the many political weaknesses which now exist in the region? What trends seem now apparent toward the development of a real Republican party in the region, and from what sources is this development presently coming? What broad guidelines of strategy may be suggested for Negro leadership in this regard?

3. What are the general implications of reapportionment and what will this development mean in the long-run objectives and plans of Negro political leadership?

4. What is meant by Negro bloc voting? If and when this does occur, is it sound strategy? What are the weaknesses and assets?

5. Should Negroes, from the standpoint of strategy, ally themselves with the present Democratic party, with the emerging Republican party, or become an effective group of Political Independents?

6. What can colleges do in the area of political education and in efforts to produce effective voter registration programs?

Statistics

These tables show the distribution of the registered voters and the voting age population of both races in the eleven southern states.

The percentages have been calculated to facilitate comparison of the various aspects of voter registration within the South, considered as a unit.

Thus the tables show each state's proportion, in absolute numbers and in percentages, of the total voting age population in the South; of the white and non-white voting age population; of the white and non-white registered voters; and of the white and non-white voting age population which is not registered. The last two columns on the second page show the percentages of each state's white and non-white voting age population which are registered.

Several different indexes of discrimination can be derived from the tables. The difference between the last two columns of the second page would provide one such index. The disparity between proportion of the South's non-white VAP and of the South's registered non-whites would provide another. A third would be the difference between the proportion of non-white VAP and the proportion of non-white VAP not registered.

None of these indexes will "prove" one thing or another, but they can be used as indicators of where voter education is most needed, and where it is likely to meet with most resistance from local prejudices and traditions.

Incidentally, it might be noted that, only compared to non-white registration, can white registration be considered at all satisfactory. Four of the eleven southern states have less than 50% of their white VAP registered and only one of the states has greater than 70% registered.

These figures would seem to indicate that there may be a considerable interracial community of interest in increasing political participation.

Some ideas from

Jim Moss

1. No comment.

2. Criteria useful in measuring program effectiveness in voter registration:

   1. The employment of procedures in extending the awareness of Negroes to the responsibilities of citizenship implicit in both the acts of registering and voting.

   2. Disseminating knowledge of the requirements for registering, voting; crucial dates in the election process (when does one register? what are the dates for important scheduled local, state and national elections?, etc.)

   3. A knowledge of how one proceeds to participate in the election process.

   4. (possibly relating the potential Negro vote to the extension of civil rights to minority groups in the South

3. 1. The project staff can assist participating organizations by programatically eliminating duplication of effort in the same geographical area and in the same activities by the organizations through frequent consultations between organizations where such overlapping may occur.

   2. Provide essential background data on the communities where each organization is engaged in stimulating voter activity.

   3. Through an evaluation of techniques proving successful in stimulating voter activity, make available to these organizations these guides to effective action.

4. A. The research undertaken will constitute a study and evaluation of organizational programs directed toward stimulating Negro voting participation in the South.

   Foci of the research will include the following:

   1. Negro voting behavior in the South spanning the historical period between the Civil War and the present.

   2. Important legal landmarks in the suffrage area with respect to Negroes in the South.

3. An evaluation of restrictive devices used to limit Negro voting behaviour.

4. Some correlation between Negro voting behaviour and other socio-economic aspects of Negro-white relations in the South.

5. An intensive look at state-by-state action with regard to Negro suffrage.

A. Statistical analysis of previous voting by Negroes in the state.

Changes in the population size of Negroes with particular ref4rence to a segment of the population eligible to vote.

A projection of this segment of the population over the next 5 years, 10 years.

B. The number and percentages of Negroes of eligible voting age registered, actively voting.

~~6.~~ C Methods and procedures used to to restrict Negroes from voting.

~~7.~~ D Opposing methods used by Negroes to circumvent voting restrictions.

~~8.~~ E Types and number or organizations active in the voting field, in particular organizational strategies most successful in extending Negro suffrage.

6. ~~9.~~ An evaluation of Negro voting activities for the two-year period of the survey.

7 ~~10.~~ A projection from this activity to some estimate of voting behaviour of Negroes in the South.

4. B. Background data will be secured from published material on voting behaviour in the South, newspaper clips, informants in the area under survey, and from the files of organizations participating in the survey.

4. C. There are current plans to publish the findings of the research either in the form of interim reports or in a printed form available for large distribution.

4. D. Southern Regional Council will undertake the actual research and will jointly share the evaluation of the project with the cooperating organizations.

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT CONFERENCE OF MAY 1, 2, 1962

LWD

1. Research money has to be confined to registration work not getting out the vote work, has to be non-partisan. SRC emphasis will be on the two poin ts on the agenda.
   a. Efforts are not restricted to Negro potential voting--it is open to all, i.e. League of Women Voters
   b. Endorsements have been received from both the Rep. and Dem. National Committees
2. Proliferation of groups in civil rights--has been threatened by this block of agenceies fighting among themselves. It is the hope of SRC that these agencies will strengthen their ties and cooperation. LWD

3. Which means is to be used--1. study of means which this process is blocked, i.e. literacy tests; or 2. study of voter registration itself. Vines
   a. Both LWD: example of Kaves project on how the administration and federal agriculture programs may effect N. reg.

4. Will money go into N. voter's leagues which are not non-partisan?
   a. Not if they are endorsing candidates

WB

Regular deadlines of '62 have hampered this years work. VEP requested each agency to submit proposals. All grants will have to be channeled toward some research effort. SRC will have to know from each agency what they want to be supplied with. Requests from the major five agencies total $556,000 for the first year.
All Citizens Registration Committee rec'd the first grant. It is non-partisan, started by AUL, then by NAACP and lately SCLC has made the biggest donations. ACRC rec'd a direct grant because it is the best vehicle. ACRC is carrying on a crash program with the 2,500 it has rec'd. It has a court-house phase, and a school coverage phase. The Atlanta Committee on Appeal for Human Rights is doing the door-knocking.
Durham County---All registrants were removed from the rolls. They have 3 weeks to register--deadline May 12. Durham Committee on Negro Affairs headed by John H. Wheeler rec'd its requested $2,500.
East Texas will be included

SRC will select those areas where an effective job can be done. Example of Ark, deadline for poll tax in Oct. in order to vote in the Dem primary during the following summer and November general elections. SRC wants areas where increased registration and research is possible. SRC will select target areas to prevent any duplication of effort. SRC may draw a line on how much will be spent in each state but not in any general area. SRC can not underwrite an entire budget, i.e. SCLC asked 60% of its entire program.

NUL is not statewide in scope, will work in area where they have local affilliates. Fort Worth (?) Each local area will make its own choice--New Orleans, Fort Worth, Tampa, Little Rock, Jacksonville, Fla. (Jax U.L. voted against it because it is seeking to get back into the local United Fund, doesn't want to project an active image and the NAACP has an active block by block set-up--not official)

NAACP-East Texas, Ark. except for LIttle Rock which is UL, Shreveport, Monroe, Baton Rouge, Lake Charles, New Orleans.

CORE--New Orleans, Bator FOCUS is the local Btn Rge organization), 6th Congressional Distri .

SNCC -Southwest Mississi there will go into La.'s 6th District Across middle belt of Al iss. generally.

Geographically

Tenn. NAACP in MEM, NSV, on, Fayette County, Clarksville. SCLC in KXV, NSV, MEM

Miss-CORE in Jackson, SCLC n Cle and, Mound Bayou, Clarksdale, Greenville, SNCC all over

ALA. Ala. State Coordinating Committee for Registration and Voting in BHM, started by W. C. Patton of NAACP. SCLC in MGM, Talladega County, SNCC across the middle belt (Dallas, Maringo, Clark counties)

Ga. SCLC (Ga. Voter Registration Committee taken over by SCLC with Calhoun's help, but keeps its name in some areas because of SCLC reputation. ACRC in ATL. SNCC in 2nd and 3rd Districts.

Fla.Books closed till May 29. NAACP & NUL in Jax (?) TAM, CORE in MIA.

SC. CORE, SCLC, SNCC (2nd phase) Charleston Coordinating Committee-Mr. Wrighten has made application.

N.C.Durham County, NAACP--most major cities, U.L. in Winston-Salem (INT). Limited operations for SNCC and SCLC.

VA- 4th Cong. District--NAACP, CORE, SCLC, Va. Voter's league--state-wide organization wants inclusion. North Va. Coordinating Committee-Dr. Henderson of Falls Church has made a request for this organization. Peninsula Voters League has made a request.

(Assignment of areas is more difficult than the selection)

SRC is not concerned with the standards, procedures and criteria on a community basis, but can determine criteria on the national level. It is concerned with the reporting though.Cooperation will be enforced by SRC and local leadership on the part of national organizations. They may map out a coordinated effort but SRC may be used to push draggers in the coordinated effort. SRC will make a commitment but payment will be made quarterly,,which will depend upon the reporting back of these organizations . The coordinating structure is up to the organizations involved--the organizations will be informed that they are to cooperate but the structure will be self-imposed.

Prothro--Will SRC be able to manipulate the variables?

Branton--This is why the agencies think one of the agencies should be responsible for a particular area.

Vines--What are the means of record keeping?

Matthews--Will expenditures be broken down by area and function?

Vines--How much basic research will be done?

Prothro--Will SRC be interested in selecting counties which ought to have a low registration rate but have a high one and vica versa. (He and Matthews have selected 21 demographic features which determine the hypothetical registration rate for 997 counties.)

Matthews--This is something as close as possible to a controlled experiment. We're using locations with like demographic rates and characteristics. (Would a given amount of input of energy and money have greater effect in a county with like characteristics?)

Matthews--Should get areas of different low's and high's of predicted registration rates; SNCC has so far chosen areas of predicted high registration rate.

Henderson- Should discover other than demographic features which effect reg. rates- What are the factors? Should determine some basic characteristics.

Thompson- 340 Negroes were registered in New Orleans in 1940. After Smith and ? up to 2000 Negroes were registered. In Orleans County there are several segments; the Catholic campaign remained in the Catholic segment, the Baptist campaign would mill in Baptists. There is no Negro Catholic leadership as all Catholic priests are white. (There are two Negro lawyers who are considered leaders; they have special interests though) We have a complete record of all voter registration drives.

Brazeal- We will have to reassess our Ga. data in light of the county unit decision of today. Counties may have to think of increased Negro vote in order to offset the white vote against it is vote against vote.

Prothro-- There was [illegible] predicted higher registration in Orleans Parish with an actual 43% achieved. ([illegible] based on the 21 demographic features)

(These variables include:
1. % of Negro population in 1950
2. % of Negro population in 1960
3. % of farms operated by tenants
4. White median school years completed
5. % of non-white labor force in white collar employment.
6. % of population belonging to white churches
7. % of Roman Catholics --- white
8. % of Baptist membership 66---white
9. % of labor force in manufacturing
10. % of population which is urban
11. Number of Negro colleges in the county
12. % of total Jewish church membership
13. White school years completed
14. Non-white school years completed

(A slight increase in school years for white means an increase in anti-Negro sentiments)
(Counties with less than 1% non-white population were excluded from this 11 state survey. 1958 census figures were used except for Tenn 1960 figures)
(Political variables were included such as [illegible] acts of violence.

Cothran-One could use the county agents and agriculture school at Orangeburg as sources of contact for Negro project.

Henderson--The action groups can only reflect the changes numerically unless they have some skilled direction. Some connection with education institutions would be mandatory.

More political variables:
15. % of presidential votes for states rights in 1948
16. % of presidential votes which was Republican in '42, '28 and '56.
17. Presence of absence of white race organization
18. Presence of absence of Negro race organization

There was corelation between Negro voter and the presence or absence of school desegregation (+.03)

Holloway--(In Austin) Whether or not they drive or do not drive the registration increase is about the same. 33-36% of registered voters actually vote.

Spraggins-- Va. registration figures are sent in by race-precnct-wise.

Brazeal--Powers - to - be would permit Negroes to register yet would keep them from voting in some Ga. counties.

Gomillion--Will there be any attempt for political education?

Brunton--We are concerned with increased registration and increased participation in voting--research-wise.

Gomillion-- Once registered people seem to want increased information re political [illegible]

Prothro--Precinct Party Organizations and Turnout in Political Science Quarterly.

Henderson--(Information we need)
1. Name and adress of each person by blocks
2. Number of wards, precincts, districts
3. Techniques employed to get these people to vote (car pool, mass meetings, etc.)
4. What was done in terms of leading up to the time of the voter registration campaign?

Spraggins--In Va. you can get names and addresses of people who are registered. Check it against some mass organization lists, i.e., teacher organizations.

Moore-- Is the effort of the VEP confined to the five major organizations? Is the effort to increase voter registration or is there to be an increase in the political climate and political efficiency?

Moss--We can ask about the means of improving political education.

Gomillion--We can get the names and addresses of all people applying and check it against those who receive registration receipts.

Dunbar--I doubt if the agency reporting should account for the number they have registered during the quarter.

Moss--SRC should supply the potential number that can be registered.

C.H.--There are different procedures in counties and states, i.e., Ala. has a form and Va. has lists. Ga., Tenn., Texas figures by race are not available.

Dan Thompson-- We must do something besides count vote. What do you do in terms of educating the electorate and what do you do in terms of uncovering democratic procedures?

Moss

Henderson--How can we identify the increase in registration in terms of the organizations in the registration campaign? How can we get the numerical performance?

Branton--Whether or not you believe the agency, you should require this information, i.e., what is the total registration in your county, Etc.

Cothran--Is it possible to appoint a research person in each state to provide follow-up information?

Vines-- A grad student could sample new registrants if they were involved in the registration project or not.

Wednesday Meeting

Vines--I would hope that at some point there would be one or two pilot studies of registration behavior. We do not know much about registration with respect to registration How does the individual make up his mind? What are the processes by which he decides to register? What kind of motivations keep people from voting? The organizations will reach the people most interested--the most pausible. This over-sampling will not be accurate; it will leave out those whoare not so motivated.

Moss--Are the factors inhibiting white voters the same as those inhibiting Negro voters?

Dan Thompson-Will there be any study of levels of registration: on the application of restrictive measures i.e., New Orleans where there was little restriction until the voter registration drives when literacy tests were greatly applied.

Gomillion--This was true in Macon County. There was adverse action and yet it stimulated positive action. There will be an increase on the part of Negroes and on the part of whites until you reach a certain point when block voting comes into effect and the white officials become interested in the Negro (block) vote.

Matthews-- re apathy--They matched questionnaires from Negroes and whites. Leadership from the high ech elons (preachers) have a better response than that of lower echelons.

Vines--The registration process will be different in counties where the resistance to registration is greater as against the process used in counties where the resistance is low.

Dunbar--There are some black belt counties where the Negro vote is not overtly oppressed--a sort of different discipline prevails.

Cothran--To what extent does the social structure in a county effect Negro reistration?

Holloway--In Austin (Texas) only a third of those registered will vote. Lack of something to vote against or to vote for is one of the reasons for this. There is less apathy among the Negroes than whites. Lower class is apolitical as against the middle class in Austin. What he (the Negro) can gain from the election is a motivating factor.

Cothran--Lower class Negores have the most intense hatred against the whites than the middle class Negro--this hatred can be converted into political action.

Spragwin--If you can tie it in with civil rights, the turn-out will be better.

Matthews---In Durham County (N.C.) Negro candidates were used as a device to get more Negroes to register even though there wasn't a chance for the Negro to win. Later on the Negro candidates were dropped until there was a chance (or enough) Negro voters to elect Negro candidates. Urban renewal is sometimes used to suppress Negro voting. (Dunbars example of the proposed Decatur project)

Holloway--East Texas vote is manipulated

Vines--There is a group of Negores who are motivated more by economics than by civil rights. There is some relationship between Negro registration rates and white registration rates in the same area. (Ex.-In a plantation county where there is high white registration rates and low Negro registration rates i.e., 4th District of Va.) A large number of Negroes makes white registration rates high.

Brazeal--Voter indifference is different among the Negroes as against voter indifference among whites. (Results of threats and violence). There is a direct corelation between Negroes having an independence from whites. Separate registration places and separate voting places meant Negroes were easily identified i.e., Fort Valley. Sometimes acts of violence which have no relationship to voting would effect voting. An elaborate snv system has been worked out in some places. In some places you have permissive registration but not permissive voting. There have been some acts of violence against those who tried to register. The rural Negro is in the same place that the early Irish immigrant:when they first came to America they were not thoroughly assimilated, nor did they accept there American rights. How do you facilitate a shift from registration to voting? The sheriff and the county solicitor are the most important elections. The sheriff is likely to be the first white politician to court Negro votes. If you do not have leadership in a community--independent leadership--the money won't help.

Cothran--We can explain Negro apathy. Appeals to the Negores must be different than appeals to others--you are going to have to put it on a much more personal basis. It may be profitable to take advantage of any crisis situations which may develop. A conflict situation provides an opportunity for solidarity. You might be able to use fighting teams. The leadership must have a reputation among Negroes which give to the Negro masses a certain amount of confidence (meaning that the leaders are not in it for themselves.)

Henderson--The role of the Negro newspaper should be considered. The presence or absence of Negro newspapers may have some influence.

Spragwin--In Richmond, Va., the Crusade for Voting is of the top echelon leadership. Precincts are organized through-out the year; the organizations do other things between elections i.e., beautification projects. At the polls on election day they have lists of voters that are checked off (and) through the use of telephones. They generally have an OK [illegible]

Sprague-Cont.--registration rate is psychological because of the argument of poll tax--this is intrepreted to mean that no one is supposed to vote in Va. but the well-educated, the well-off whites. The Negro registration figures in '58 were 85,000 and in '62 160,000 (Va.) There has been no check on the people (in Va.) who are registered and do not vote.

Strong--People register because they have some special reason i.e., poll tax payment in Texas. Why do women vote more now than in 1920 (because of) a process of assimulation and acceptance. Look back on the successes of increased Negro registration since 1952. It may be the migration of the Negro to the North. How come nothing more dramatic since 1952? There should be increased participation not only increased registration in black belt counties. Negroes vote more in the cities than in rural areas--no adequate police protection, no fraternal organizations. (V.O. Key) Negroes are not as embarassed as whites to work on the registration tests--they will work longer and harder on the questions.

Matthews--Fear of economic reprisal is second to fear of embarassing one's self.

Gomillion--Political and social climate is very important. There is not much sense in trying counties where this is against you. Leadership is needed--the floating teams would retard registration in some counties. In most of the counties with high Negro population , if there is not a favorable climate for registration, the degree of success is going to be lower. There are 3 or counties in Alabama where Negroes have increased their efforts to register when there has been sharp issues but this is not enough to draw applicable conclusions--this should be a study in terms of a complex of factors. (Bullock County has over 500 Negroes registered--this is where the Justice Dept. is working-Ala.) In counties where registration attempts are generally futile, local leadership should be developed; maybe SNCC or CORE could create a crisis situation which would cause local Negroes to develop leaders.

Pierce--Accommodations are slow of registration (one at a time) and the voucher system hinders registration (Registered voter can only vouch for two potential registrants). Who is going to lead? What are the compensations? Are they free to exercise the ballot once they get it? Where can they find relief? If your man (candidate) loses, what will the other man do?

Outline for a Report on VEP registration programs. 11/6/62

This report should begin with a brief description of the community in which the registration program was conducted. The description should include proportion of Negro voting age population, number of Negroes registered to vote, and the total number of registered voters. The description should also include such items as the extent to which Negro residential areas are ghettoized, the general conditions of Negro employment (with especial reference to public employment - police officers, firemen, civil service workers, etc.), and whether Negroes occupied any public or party, elective or appointive, positions at the time the registration program was conducted. Since campaign and electoral activity seems to have a beneficial effect on registration efforts, the report should also indicate whether local elections were factors in the drive, and if so, whether Negroes were candidates for any party or public office.

Next should come a description of the activities which preceded the organization of the registration program. We would like to know whether there were difficulties among the leaders arising out of personal or organizational friction and jealousy. It is also important that we know whether the organization which conducted the drive was a previously established political or civil action entity or whether it was a new organization, the birth of which was directly related to the registration program. # We would like to have the names of any individuals whose influence on activities in the registration program seemed out of proportion to the leadership positions they occupied previous to the program. What we are looking for here is whether an activity such as a registration program provides a context conducive to the rise of new leadership.

Then, we would like a description of the actual organization which conducted the drive. This should be a rather simple description of the structure of the organization identifying the decision-making and executive positions, and the responsibilities incumbent upon such positions.

The following is an outline of the kind of information that we want about the actual conduct of the registration program:

I. What steps were taken to inform the Negro community that a registration drive was to be undertaken?

A. Use of organizations - i.e., social, political, professional, business, labor, etc. Did they cooperate? How - mailings to membership, announcements in meetings, etc.?

B. Advertisements in newspapers (find circulation figures and compute column lineage and number of insertions.) Get text of insertions. Cost per column inch. Personal image part of message?

C. [redacted]

C. Advertisements on radio and TV (times and dates, number of ads, text of copy, cost, identify of speakers, was message taped or did staff announcer read copy?- was image of speaker part of the message?

D. Use of churches. How was cooperation of ministers solicited - was meeting called or were they contacted individually? What degree of cooperation, if any, was received? Announcements, sermons, participation by minister?

II. How were prospective registrants contacted?

A. Door-to-Door canvassing.

a. How were areas selected for canvassing?

b. How was canvassing machinery organized?

c. Was canvassing designed to inform, merely, or was it designed actually to enlist prospects, instruct them, and provide service such as baby-sitting, transport, etc.

d. Were canvassers volunteer or paid? Were they from all walks of life or primarily students? What other types served as canvassers?

e. What provisions were made for follow-ups to initial canvass?

f. How were canvassers motivated and how did they attempt to motivate prospects - idealogically or practically?

B. Mass meetings.

a. Date, time and place held.

b. Number and identify of speakers. Were speakers selected for informative or image purposes, or both; i.e., were they celebrities or were they leaders whose knowledge of political affairs determined their

c. Were those who attended followed up at the meetings or was initiative placed on them to seek participation; i.e., names taken for volunteer work, for registration, for instruction, at meeting. Degree of success of this kind of recruitment - how many participants garnered from meetings as compared to other modes of recruitment.

C. Where the organizations in I.A above used in actual registration work? If so, how and to what extent?

D. Other? Maintenance of an office with full-time personnel?

III. Describe process of registration.

A. Arrangements for transport.

B. Was there a ppol of helpers actually to go to the office with prospective registrants?

C. Was there machinery for enumerating successful registrants and for working with failures?

D. What was attitude of registrar's office - official attitude as well as attitude of personnel in the office?

E. If registrar hours were inconvenient was attempt made to secure extra office hours - successful?

F. What kinds of performance were required of registrants. Was attempt made to determine whether discrimination was practiced at office? Affadavits taken of all incidents of discrimination?

G. Explore the possibility of any organized opposition either official or unofficial to the drive and describe it as thoroughly as possible. Look for unorganized individual or group acts tending to harass, intimidate, etc.

H. Was public attention given by white newspapers, radio, TV, public addresses, etc., to the drive?

IV. An attempt should be made to describe the attitudes of public officials toward the drive. What were their perceptions of this activity among the Negroes - how accurately were they informed as to numbers participating - to what extent did they disapprove or approve- did they perceive this is qualitatively different from similar white activity? Interviews with registration officials are particularly valuable here.

V. What were the concrete results of the drive?

A. Number of persons involved in volunteer work?

B. Number of paid personnel?

C. Were incentives offered for increased registration either to prospects or to workers?

D. Number of persons registered if these records kept by the drive?

E. Numbers on official records during the time of the drive?

Mr. Bill Harrell

Dear Bill:

You have been unconscionably remiss in your responsibilities as a correspondent. I say this not as an accusation but as a statement of fact with which any competent observer could agree. There are two reasons why I will not berate you for your dereliction.

In the first place, I suspect that your deficiency results from a basic flaw in your character for which you are not responsible and over which you have no control. Clearly, to raise great fuss would only aggravate the situation and thereby operate to my further disadvantage. In the second place, it is my purpose to pick some of the fruits of your mind, a pursuit which I have found limitlessly profitable in the past despite the character flaw mentioned above, and despite the other moral deficiencies reflected by your unwillingness to shave regularly and to shine your shoes.

It begins to appear, Bill, that there may be an opportunity here to do some really basic research in a field which looks to me like the sociology of knowledge. I had some discussions last week with some high academic potentates at the SPSA convention and they appeared quite enthusiastic about the prospect of some really important work arising out of research on our registration programs. As a result of these discussions I bestirred myself in the construction of what I think is a research design.

I am enclosing a copy of the monster. I would greatly appreciate it if you would read it over carefully and see whether it communicates anything to you. I am particularly concerned over whether you think it necessary to explicate the assumptions I have selected and whether you think there are any others which should be treated in like manner. I also wish that you would pay particular attention to the three categories and let me know whether you think they are the most useful which could be deduced from the concepts. Too, I am a little concerned about the advisability of separating the subject matter of the communication into fact and value. Do you think this will be operable?

Also, do you think it is a distinction without a difference to use the two concepts of communication, the one relating to the consumation of communication and the other relating to the induced effect of the communication?

I would certainly appreciate knowing about any other criticism you have of the research design including, possibly, the suggestion that it be thrown out the window and a new start made.

I hope you will exercise every effort to overcome your natural slothfulness in replying because I would like to get this - or some other design - perfected as quickly as possible.

Tell your wife and children we miss their company and we look forward to seeing you possibly when we come through there during the Christmas period.

Best regards.

Dear Ross:

I am enclosing a research design which I have whipped together as a result of the developments at the convention last week. I hope you will look it over very carefully and tell me what you think of it as a statement of method as well as a basis for operational research. I realize that the categories I have devised are themselves only a beginning so far as operationalizing the research is concerned and that each of the categories is itself a research area. Once I get the basic design more or less perfected I propose to go into each category and suggest the operational designs which would be appropriate.

I am particularly interested in knowing whether you think I have explicated the appropriate assumptions and whether you think there are any others which should be explicated.

I need not tell you, I am sure, how much of you is in this design. As you remarked last week, it probably would be impossible for either of us to think professionally without using some part of the other.

Please let me have your opinions as soon as possible because I want to push along with this whole research matter. I submitted a written report to Les and Wiley summarizing the conversations I had at the convention; I have as yet heard nothing from them.

We are looking forward to seeing you the first week end in December. Best regards.

Sincerely,

DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL SCIENCES

Dear Snake,

I am sorry that I was unable to get this back sooner to you. We are on the quarter system here and I have been at the awful business of grading papers and making grades.

In commenting on the P. I have first some general remarks to make. First I think the problem at this point is one of tactics rather than of grand strategy; of effectiveness in the achievement of an immediate objective rather than one of internal clarification of meaning. You must first of all get your hands on the loot – that is the tactical objective at this point. To do this you are going to have to phrase your research design in the kind of language that bears a close resemblance to the compiled, accepted, honorific literature in the field. It will have to look like Lazarsfeld Eulau etc. It will be a comparatively simple task to retranslate this back into your own terms after you get the money. (Second) From some little experience with trying to communicate the Kantian problem as it relates to Social science to those innocent of all philosophy I predict that the very meaningful distinctions you make about imposing intellectual order on chaos will either be entirely misunderstood or not understood at all. Especially is this true in what you say about the construction of ideal types. Nowhere is the specific comparative use of ideal types for research purposes made explicit. This use is, of course, implicit to much of the commentary on Weber and to Webers system itself. Your suggestion as to its use, therefore, in the form you give it is elliptical. The use of the type, as you so correctly see it, is an intellectual offspring of our numerous conversations, etc on the subject. No committee, however, is going to see this at the present time. When I say that this problem of the use of types will not be understood I speak with perhaps more first hand knowledge than anyone else in the world. It will be much easier for the committee to laugh at your prospectus than to try to understand it.

What I would suggest is to start again from the close of your opening ~~sentence~~ paragraph. Then say something to this effect — "Since the ~~problem~~ statement raises the question of developing an educational programme etc etc. — It is necessary to design a research oriented to discovering what factors influence voting, how can these factors be discovered, how when they are discovered they can be effectively encorporated into meaningful programme of voter education etc etc. Then when you talk about about operational categories talk about Lazarsfeld Guttmann etc — all the old honorific types. Then set up categories analogous to theirs, bearing in mind of course, that once you get the hoot you can easily set up other categories etc.

What might be successful is to carry the problem of the prospectus to those who have been successful in the tactical operation of getting money from a foundation.

My conclusions are that I can do no better than give you advice which you once gave me. A committee is a hog..... take a stick and hit it on the snout; dont try to reason with it.

Aside from this, I found your prospectus very meaningful to me pessonally (if I controlled the funds I would give you the money you want on the strength of the prospectus). The fact that you and I see eye to eye on the problem of ideal types is very heartening. Now there are at least two of us to see the truth. This considerably lessens the possibility that I am insane

My best to your family

See you early December.

Ross

I have assumed that the copy you sent me of the P I can access. I want to go over it again and maybe we can talk about it in Dec.

Dr. James A. Moss

Dear Jim:

It was a great pleasure, both professionally and personally, to discuss the Voter Education Project research problems with you at the SPSA convention last week. It was startling to me to discover the extent to which I have been professionally isolated since last July. Discussing research with you and the others radically altered, I think, the prognosis for the success of research efforts growing out of VEP.

I have put together what I think is a research design which will enable us to do some basic research without interfering with the other interests of the VEP. I would be very grateful if you would go over the enclosed material with some care and then let me know at your earliest convenience whether you think I am on the right track and, if not, what track you think I should be on. It is my idea to structure the research so as to frame a problem in communication. The categories I have devised in the research design are what I conceive to be areas of research. I realize that a number of operational designs would be required for each category, i.e., community surveys, participant observation, studies of community structure, studies of organizations as groups, etc. What I am doing now is getting opinions about the method I propose from folk whose judgment about such matters I value. From the advice I receive I hope more or less to perfect the basic method and then go into the operational phase of the design, at which time I will again want to call upon you for advice and counsel.

On my return here I submitted to Les and Wiley a full account of my conversations with you, Matthews and Prothro, Heard, et al. I have not as yet discussed the matter with Les and Wiley although I did indicate in the report that I thought it would be of some importance that a decision be made about financing research at the earliest possible time.

You will, I think, be interested to know that Matthews and Prothro were very enthusiastic about the research prospects and they seemed to think it likely that one of the more serious foundations, such as Rockefeller, might be interested in participating. I had a very interesting conversation with Heard in which he indicated that he thought the "presumption" would be in favor of Rockefeller participation given an adequate research proposal and, in general, a viable research operation.

I look forward to hearing from you soon on what you think about the enclosed research design. Please remember to send me the tapes of last spring's conference.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Dr. Vines:

In thinking back over the discussions I had with you at the convention last week, I am surprised and dismayed to realize the extent to which I had been professionally isolated down here. It was as though I had suddenly moved from a world of deaf mutes into one populated entirely by intensely alert and perceptive people. I simply had not been aware that my inability to communicate down here had arisen from the same difficulty one experiences in talking to a wall.

I am enclosing a basic method and research design which I hope, with advice and counsel, to be able to get into operational shape. I would greatly appreciate having your opinion of it including primarily what you do not like about it and what you think should be changed. Do you think that this research problem would be successfully approached operationally as a problem in communication?

I think of the categories I have developed as being, in themselves, research areas and propose to develop operational designs for each of them; i.e., community surveys, participant observation. etc., once I get the basic design more or less perfected.

I hope you will let me have the benefit of your opinion at your very earliest opportunity so that I can push along with the next stage.

I submitted to Les and Wiley a written report summarizing the results of our conferences and making the recommendations for financing which we discussed last week. I have as yet heard nothing from them.

I have not yet had the opportunity to get around to Emory but hope to do so either tomorrow or early next week. As soon as I do I will let you know my impressions.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Jack:

My apologies for delaying so long in complying with your request for my observations on your research statement. I have read over the statement at least three times, and I find it thorough in every regard. But just to make sure that we are really communicating, may I indicate how what you have said strikes me. I see pages one through six as constituting a definition of terms as stated in the purpose for the voter registration project. From the bottom of page six to the bottom of page seven, emphasis is placed upon measuring inhibiting factors in voting and in voting registration. It seems to me that from the bottom of page seven to the middle of page eight you spell out the limitations inherent in a research project of this dimension. For some reason, I feel inclined to want to see on paper what are the specific questions that you would like to have answered thoroughly from the voter research project. Perhaps then we can move more easily into the questions that need to be asked specifically to those working on the project in the field. Because as I remember it, this was the central problem that you raised with me in Tennessee in November. Namely, how can we assure uniformity in data reporting necessary in the voter registration research. I am not quite sure that I have added very much to what you have thoughtfully prepared, but I shall be glad to react again anywhere along the way where you feel it might be helpful.

I have also asked the office to send to you the tape of the voting registration conference. Have fun.

Tell Jean Levine that I shall try to write very soon.

Best wishes to all,

MEMORANDUM

To: Wiley A. Branton

From: Barbara Whitaker

Re: Consultation with Dr. Samuel D. Cook January 10, 1964

Mr. Branton indicated the original request for consultation grew out of Mr. Blackwell's concern for some basic understanding of the research objectives and methods so that field visits can take on more meaning as projects are concluded. In Mr. Blackwell's absence on a field trip to Texas, discussion was generally concerned with the necessity for following more closely details in design and closing gaps in same, if possible. There was indication that we need more than just the number of people actually registered.

There is a need to study files to pinpoint statistics from the projects being supported by VEP. Need was also cited to obtain statistics from as many other sources as possible.

Dr. Cook agreed with an earlier discussion that the 1960 Census report be used as basic research figures.

It was also indicated that projects would be supported through the registration deadline for presidential election. At that point, financial support would be terminated except for limited voter education. Heavy support will be concentrated in Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

It was generally agreed that the research statement needs to be examined and, for practical purposes, reduced to a series of questions to be answered from the field. Also, there is a need to determine whether we would want different types of reports from different areas.

Concensus seemed to have been that we are working with individuals in the field who generally have no appreciation for research problems. The question seems to be how to: 1) Stimulate interest at lower levels, or 2) Take reports submitted and try to fit them to research design.

LESLIE W. DUNBAR,
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

February 5, 1963

To: Members of the Executive Committee
From: Leslie W. Dunbar

You will recall that at several meetings last year the staff was questioned on its formulation of research plans for the Voter Education Project. The subject was also discussed from the floor at the Annual Meeting.

We have now sufficient experience with our material and with our reactions to that material to describe our ideas, goals, and methods more narrowly.

The staff has just concluded a re-statement of research plans, and I send it to you attached.

We are not planning to put discussion of this on the agenda of the February, 1962 meeting. I am sure, however, that there will be time for discussion if any of you wish to bring it up. Wiley Branton, Jack Minnis, Staige Blackford, and I would be delighted to have your comments or suggestions at any time.

I am sending copies of this also to the following members of the Council, all of whom are social scientists, and am similarly inviting their study and comment:

SRC

February, 1963

A STATEMENT OF THE RESEARCH AIMS AND METHODS OF THE VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

I. BACKGROUND

A. Before undertaking the Voter Education Project, the Southern Regional Council applied for and obtained a favorable ruling from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, holding that the Project was consistent with SRC's tax-exemption. In letters to the Commissioner, dated December 14, 1961 and February 9, 1962, the Project was described. The following statements, excerpted from those letters, define the research objectives:

> 1. The purpose of the Project is to enable the Council to promote and to study and evaluate methods for teaching and encouraging exercise of the right to register and vote in areas in the South which, from the Council's past research, are known to be comparatively lowest in registration and voting. The work will necessarily largely involve the Negro population.
> 2. The purpose of the Project is to develop educational programs which will be most effective in providing voters with the knowledge and will to register.
> 3. Upon the completion of the Project... a report, analysis and evaluation of the Project will be published. Such publication will describe the Project and recommend, on the basis of Project experience, the best methods of education designed to overcome low voter registration in the various geographic and cultural areas of the South.

B. From the foregoing, it is clear that

1. VEP shall not only study registration efforts, but shall promote them for the purposes of study.

2. VEP is specifically to work and research in areas "known to be comparatively lowest in registration and voting." Indeed, this is stated almost as an exclusive interest. This was not, however, intended to be the case and the fuller context of the application amply shows that.

3. Research includes voting, as well as registration, experience.

4. This is primarily experimental research, through which VEP seeks to develop effective programs.

5. Recommendations, therefore, are to constitute a large part of the research product.

II. OBJECTIVES

V.E.P. is substantially the largest research ever undertaken by the Council. The resulting publication will be, unlike the usual SRC release, of book length.

Nevertheless, we do not intend nor should we, to depart from the established objectives of SRC research and publishing. These are:

(a) to inform national opinion accurately and with sound interpretation;

(b) as a special end, to inform southern leaders, both directly and through the press;

(c) to contribute to the formulation of public policies.

Stated this way, there is nothing to preclude research done according to the exacting standards of the social sciences. We do, however, need to keep in mind that the three objectives set out above do preclude the statement of research findings in such ways as require interpretation or translation: our business is to speak directly to the public.

Moreover, our business is to address ourselves to the concerns of public policy, and not to those of social science. As do any disciplines, the social sciences have developed problems which are largely intra-mural in their interest. All the issues of public policy are of interest to the social sciences; the reverse is neither obviously nor probably so. The VEP will not, therefore, seek to serve social science in such ways as the refinement of methodologies or the verification of statistical probabilities.

III. RESEARCH PROBLEM

The research problem of the VEP might be re-stated as:

> A study of the effectiveness of organized effort - political activity in the broadest sense - in attacking the cause of low registration in the various sections of the South.

Stated this way, the relationship between the VEP and the Matthews-Prothro work is made more obvious. For the, after close and exhaustive analysis of the social and economic variables of registration, raise the question of the relative importance of these variables, on the one side, against political and legal factors and organized Negro and white supremacist activity on the other. The following is quoted from their paper at the Duke University Conference of July 12 - 14, 1962:*

> We have seen that both social and economic factors and political and legal factors are associated with Negro voter registration in the 11 southern states. Which type of factor is more important in shaping Negro registration rates?
> ...In so far as statistical analysis will answer such a broad and complex question, it would appear that political variables are of about equal importance to socio-economic ones.
> . . .
> Moreover, our analysis suggests that substantial changes in the level of Negro voter registration can be attained by political and legal means. It is not necessary to await the arrival of basic social and economic change before attempting, with reasonable expectations of moderate success, to enfranchise more southern Negroes. The abolition of the poll tax and modification of literacy requirements to assure fair treatment of Negroes might enhance the southwide vote of Negro registration by 10 or more percentage points. Encouraging the candidacy of politicians -- both Negro and white -- who are favorable to the Negro cause should bring out many more Negro votes, even when they have little chance of success. Finally, heightened organizational efforts by Negroes would increase Negro registration levels over what they would otherwise be. All of these reforms would have a positive effect on Negro registration rates without waiting for massive social and economic change.

---

*"Negro Voter Registration in the South."

VEP can, of course, only take note of and seek to analyze and evaluate legal changes and political candidacies. This will be done. But the "heightened organizational efforts" spoken of by Matthews and Prothro is VEP's special problem. VEP is experimental research, where by organized methods VEP will seek to make the findings set down as objectives in the I.R.S. letters quoted above.

Moreover, the political process is a primary means by which the social and economic benefits of society are distributed. The social and economic variables and the political and legal variables do not, therefore, represent the two sides of a dichotomy. Rather, they represent the two phases of a process in which, at any given moment, existing social and economic conditions are conducive to or permissive of certain political and legal innovations; and they, in turn, will have their effect in altering the social and economic conditions.

The VEP will accept the Matthews-Prothro analysis as the latest authoritative study of the social and economic variables. The Matthews-Prothro analysis of racial attitudes will also be assumed,* except where explicitly questioned.

The various parts of the re-statement above may be separately considered:

(a) "a study of the effectiveness of organized effort"

VEP is dealing with a wide variety of organizations -- all devoted to civil rights -- including national organizations such as

*"Southern Racial Attitudes: Conflict, Awareness, and Political Change," Annals of the American Academy. November 1962.

NAACP, the National Urban League, CORE;

a regional body, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference;

and the unique

Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee;

including also a large number of local organizations, ranging from such sophisticated groups as

All-Citizens Registration Committee (Atlanta)

Durham (N.C.) Committee on Negro Affairs to inexperienced groups such as

Federated Organization for the Cause of Unlimited Self-Development (FOCUS) - Baton Rouge; the organizations include also ad hoc ones that VEP helped bring into existence, such as

Council of Federated Organizations (Miss.)

Jefferson County (Ala.) Voters Campaign; and popular crusades such as the Albany (Ga.) Movement.

The organizations differ greatly - in their structure, their attitudes, their methods of work, their uses of publicity, and their reputations. All of these differences are deserving of study, and of some critique as to effectiveness. The VEP should not shirk the opportunity of contributing some informed evaluations of the varieties of organized Negro political activity, at this still formative period of a relatively new development that will undoubtedly persist and grow, long after the dramatic controversies of civil rights have been ended.

Some organizations tend to work in different local situations, and this is usually a matter of deliberate choice on their part. This, itself, raises an issue of research interest, because the choices represent, to some degrees, divergent views of strategy. One view favors a concentrated, almost sole, effort in the more liberal locales, where the barriers are essentially only the apathy or alienation of Negroes. The other inclines toward work in the heavily resistant, Black Belt locales. Evaluation of these two approaches merely in terms of new registrants would be pointless, because those will undoubtedly be comparatively few in the resistant areas. The work there, however, represents a strongly held belief that political leverage can be realized by token gains, by opening the bottle, by laying the basis for court suits, by stimulating national publicity, by exposing the crudity of the segregationists' methods, and most of all, by providing the initial opportunity for residents to organize themselves. VEP cannot hope to evaluate such work quantitatively, but the notion that social science is confined to quantitative findings is a recent one, and perhaps not an unrelenting tenet. In fact, nearly all interesting social study of a quantitative sort has had to be given stimulus and direction by preceding observation, analysis, and interpretation of disciplined minds.

Another matter of great interest will be the observation of the effectiveness of local groups. As mentioned above, these include both the experienced and the inexperienced. Some operate with the support -- of various sorts -- of national and regional organizations (other than VEP), and some without.

(b) "political activity in the broadest sense."

The VEP is wisely restricted to work with non-partisan groups and efforts. Registration itself is, however, a political act, and each registration contributes a mite of influence on political alignments and decisions. How much, however, is that influence, how does it work, and to whose benefit in the differing situations of the South, and at differing levels of total white and total Negro registration? Such questions as the following are interesting:

1. does the simple act of Negro registration, or knowledge of the existence of an organized effort to stimulate registration, provoke response, of any ascertainable kind, from officials or from official bodies or from private whites?

2. does increased Negro registration stimulate white registration and voting?

3. what ascertainable increase in Negro voting is produced by increased Negro registration?

4. what are the repercussions of increased Negro registration, or organized efforts to that end, on national politics and policies?

(c) "in attacking the causes of low registration in the various sections of the South."

A great deal of research has been done in the past, some by SRC, some by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, and some by academic scholars, on the causes of low registration. These have been generally concluded to be:

1. outright governmental prohibition of Negro registration (since the outlawing of the white primary this has ended as an openly acknowledged practice and, for the most part, has ended in practice, though a few isolated instances persist where local authorities, without pretense otherwise, will not register Negroes).

2. governmental cheating, i.e., the administration of qualifications more strictly for Negroes than for whites, or the capricious or arbitrary rejection of Negroes, or the administration of registration in ways to slow or make personally uncomfortable Negro registration.

3. governmental restrictions against new registrations in such a way as to limit both whites and Negroes (e.g., poll taxes).

4. governmental harassment in reprisal against Negro registration, by such multiform devices as capricious arrest of registration workers, cancellation of governmental services for properties used in registration activities, investigations, etc., etc.

5. private harassment, intimidation, violence, and economic reprisal.

6. Negro indifference (apathy)

7. Negro alienation

8. Negro ignorance, i.e., inability to pass literacy requirements

9. Negro fear

10. in some areas (e.g., Virginia) an effective, if infrequently stated, bias against democratic control, to such an extent that voting, by either Negroes or underprivileged whites, is not part of the tissue of civic values.

These causes do, of course, have extreme variations of importance, according to time and place, and there exists a considerable body of analysis of each.

A basic research interest of the VEP will be, in each area, to appraise, against a defined pattern of local obstacles, the effectiveness of certain organizational structures and methods.

* * * * *

To sum up, the VEP, as a program of experimental research, has set itself the problem of devising, within its limited field of concern, means by which the political participation of deprived groups within the United States can be stimulated. The VEP supposes that increased political participation is a feasible means of bettering the living conditions of deprived groups. The implicit assumption is that the political process is a primary means by which the benefits of society are distributed. This assumption is, of course, basic to democratic theory.

IV. GENERAL OUTLINE

An attempt at this stage to outline the final publication would be foolhardy. The scheme set out below is, therefore, only an aid to visualizing content and a scheme for organizing work assignments.

      - economic indices (e.g., housing costs)
   c. Descriptive and interpretive essay on southern politics during period of VEP
2. VEP record
   a. a report, made up chiefly of figures, on each project and its success
   b. a concise narrative history of the projects
3. Research findings
   a. As of the initiation of each drive, what were the factors inhibiting registration?

b. Methods used to overcome

1. organizational

2. techniques

3. success

c. Anatomy of the factors

1. apathy: prevalence, characteristics, manifestations

2. alienation: ditto

3. apprehension of terror, and response

4. apprehension of white disapproval, and response

5. reaction to official cheating

d. Suitability of organized efforts to cope with the factors

4. Registration and reform

a. During the VEP period, what effects did increased registration have on elections, and also on other civil rights interests?

b. Based on observed trends, what effects can be expected?

V. MODES OF WORK

The statistical compilations and analysis noted above in 1a and 1b will be done by VEP staff, supplementing official and other published records with data gathered from the field programs.

The data required for sections 2a and b, 3a, and 3b will be obtained in several ways:

a. From field reports sent in by the cooperating agencies. VEP prescribes the forms of these reports. Many of the agencies are not good reporters, and this is hardly unexpected. On the other hand, some of the reporting has been remarkably good and valuable. (Examples of this kind of quality are the report of the Middle Tennessee Voter Registration Project: the National Urban League's report on its Winston-Salem campaign; the reporting of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee in its Summer, 1962 Mississippi work; and, among several others, the reporting of the Albany Movement.)

b. From field observations carried on by VEP staff. Limitations of staff make impossible the close field study of each project. VEP plans to visit each, however, and will do intensive field study of some, selected for distinctive characteristics.

c. From news reports, government sources including legal proceedings, correspondence and conversations with informed local persons, and other sources.

The data required for section 3c and, in part, for sections 3d and 4a will be obtained in the same manner. This is a convenient place to note specifically that rigorously controlled survey research is not contemplated as a regular research tool. The findings for 3c (as well as 3a) will be drawn from the full range of field reports and observations. Some of the cooperating agencies are carrying out interviews, and these are useful. But systematic sampling and interviews are beyond the range of our resources and research interests. VEP is using conversations heavily, and will expand these even more, but with selected informed and involved persons. These include officials, workers within the cooperating agencies, and other informed people. VEP recognizes that the selection of officials and "other informed people" will be determined not only by availability, but also by the referral of cooperating agencies and by VEP's own judgment as to the value of the interview.

The work on section 3d will be supplemented by staff review and evaluation; on 4a, by statistical compilation done by VEP staff.

Direct planning and supervision of all the above work will be the responsibility of the VEP Director.

The work of synthesis and interpretation, under 1c and 4b, will be a joint undertaking of VEP staff and the SRC Research staff.

The final ordering of data and writing will be under the direction of the SRC Executive Director.

Myrdal uses "morality" as a psuddonym for motivation. His concept of a series of conflicting valuations amounts to some of which, at a given time, are kept below the level of conscious awareness, constitutes a paradigm of unconscious motivations.

Myrdal has room here for selective perception, selective retention, and selective inattention, though he does not use them. He discusses the difference between beliefs and valuations--beliefs refer to objectively verifiable, "fact" situations and valuations refer to the individual's affect toward those facts, as he sees them. Clearly, then, facts which are perceived as conflicting with valuations are likely to be screened out of perception or to be lost as a function of the unconscious protection of the valuations. Areas of fact which conflict with valuations are likely to become the subject of selective inattention. Here may be a formulation to takecare of the persistence of the Negro and White stereotypes in the southern subculture. Valuations are formed in conformance with thedemands of the ego with reference to the cultural and social beleif patterns of peer groups and other significant reference groups. These valuations become an integrated part of the personality structure and are maintained as a part of the self-image which permits at least minimum ego-gratification. The valuations then become determinants in the screening processes of selective inattention, selective perception and selective retention.

It is important to know the extent to which.

in a given case, the beliefs upon k which a valuation is based conforms to an objective appraisal of the ~~xxxxxxxxxxxx~~ relevant facts. Here the actual information level is extremely k important. Informaton levels with reference to the particular subject matter should be studied intensively.

Gunnar Myrdal, in a methodological appendix to An American Dilemma, made a persuasive argument for, and provided an excellent example of, the extensive theoretical clarification with which a social science research project must begin, if inconsistency between premises and conclusions is to be avoided - if the project is to avoid distortion occasioned by ideological, ethical, and methodological preconceptions of which the social scientist may not be consciously aware without such clarification.

Louis Wirth, writing some four years after the publication of Myrdal's work, lamented the lack of sound theoretical explication and rational organization underlying the activities of the civil rights groups who were, at that time, operating in the field of race relations in the United States. Indeed, he quoted a high official of one of the major action agencies in the field of race relations as stating that, even if social science should show that the procedures of that agency were hopelessly ineffective given the nature of the phenomena with which it was dealing, the agency would probably not be interested in altering its mode of operation. Wirth suggested that this incident provided an illustration of one of the major obstacles to the use of the techniques of science in altering the socio-political environment: the assumption by most persons that their own perceptions define the world of social reality; their complete unawareness of the many biases which distort those perceptions.

Irving Horowitz, in 1961, decried the degeneration of the social sciences from "dangerous" to "dismal." His thesis was that the scientific study of society can be a sound basis for ameliorative action. He suggested that "what generally inspires criticism of the 'deterministic' social sciences is a distaste for the rigorous practice these sciences commit men to." He argued that "the history of science simply indicates that the success of an enterprise is greater, and better able to mobilize public support, when and where established procedures of verification and confirmation are available." He concluded that social science "can be instrumental in bringing about a more logical ordering of social relations than what we presently have, minus the pain and anguish that has attended the birth of new societies in the pre-scientific age."

The fact that Myrdal, Wirth, and Horowitz (and, of course, a great many others) advocated the use of scientific procedures in the amelioration of social evils does not necessarily mean that those procedures are either desirable or justifiable. It does, however, argue that the conditions which make those procedures necessary are very real - that the conditions are not the figment of a solipsistic imagination. Furthermore, the procedures advocated by Myrdal, Wirth, and Horowitz are those of scientific method, without the use of which our ability to deal with the physical environment would doubtless be considerably less effective than it is. They were, in short, suggesting that the tools of reason and scientific method which have proved effective in dealing with the problems of the physical sciences be used now in dealing with the problems of society.

The Voter Education Project has set itself the problem of devising means by which the political participation of deprived groups in the United States can be stimulated. It can be argued that VEP has arisen out of a growing concern among a great many people that efforts to better the conditions under which deprived groups live in the United States have lacked precisely the rational and logical approach to the manipulation of the socio-political environment that Myrdal, Wirth, and Horowitz advocated. It would, then, be ironic indeed if VEP failed to achieve its objective precisely because it failed to observe the strictures which social science in general regards as necessary for the accumulation of dependable knowledge about the environment. In order to ensure against such failure, this paper proposes to organize a research approach to VEP's objective which will, I think, meet the most exacting criteria for the dependability of knowledge.

There are two kinds of formulations which must be dealt with here. Myrdal called them theoretical and practical. I happen to prefer a different nomenclature, because I think the term "theoretical" for one of the types of formulation implies that the other type is, somehow, "non-theoretical." The two levels of formulation will be termed the methodological and the operational for purposes of this research design. Methodological formulations are designed to present what Pepper called the "world-view" according to which observations are to be made, to show the criteria of relevance according to which the data are to be selected, and to show the logical relation between separate categories of data and the research objective as a whole. This level of formulation deals with the philosophy of science which is to be applied.

Operational formulations, on the other hand, refer to the actual process of research, in whichmeans must be devised for obtaining the data which is called for by the methodological formulations. Needless to say, the operational formulations must derive from the methodological formulations, must be, as it were, an explication of the necessary implications of the methodology.

Parts I and II of this paper deal, respectively, with the methodological and operational formulations to be applied to the research objective of VEP.

But there is a series of assumptions about the nature of the phenomena with which VEP proposes to deal, which, I think, cannot be categorized as either methodological or operational. These assumptions are not explicitly stated in the research objective, but I think it important that they be examined here.

VEP supposes that increased political participation, i.e., registering and voting, is a feasible and viable means of bettering the living conditions of deprived groups in the society. Since alleviatory action against a series of problematical aspects of the environment is being directed ~~against a series of problematical aspects of the environment is being directed~~ toward a particular process in the society, the assumption must be that that particular process is the appropriate one for dealing with those problems. In short, the implicit assumption of VEP is that the political process in this society is the machinery by which the wealth, services, and values in the society are distributed to the various elements of its population. This view of the political process is a commonplace both in political science and among politically knowledgeable persons in the society. Lasswell, long ago, suggested that those most skillful at manipulating the political machinery were the ones who got "the most of what there is to get." David Easton, more recently, has suggested that the substance of the political process is the "authoritative allocation of values." There is some argument about the relative importance of the items contained in the "values" and some democratic theorists have found themselves a bit uncomfortable with such a forthright statement of materialistic goals for the political process.

But neither of these matters is crucial to our considerations. What VEP is proposing is that there must be a re-distributing of the values of the society, that this re-distribution can be effected through the political participation of the deprived groups, and that the present status quo of political institutions and processes need not be upset by the presentation and satisfaction of these re-distributive demands.

These assumptions are actually biases whose roots are in the democratic ethos of the society. It is important that they be recognized as such. This is not to say that such biases must necessarily distort the perception of reality; but only to point out that there is an opposing set of assumptions arguing that any fundamental redistribution of the values of the society must be accomplished by radically altering the status quo of political institutions and processes. In short, the extent to which means can be found to increase political participation of deprived groups, and make that participation effective in achieving the ends of such groups may very well be the measure of the viability of the democratic - capitalist theory of government.

This is a summary of conversations I had during the SPSA meeting, November 8,9, and 10, about VEP's research program. I discussed the research aspects of our project with James Moss, DonaldStrong, Kenneth Vines, Donald Matthews, Harry Holloway, James Prothro and Alexander Heard.

I found that everyone with whom I talked was vitally interested in what VEP is doing, and that all were willing, indeed, eager, to provide any assistance they can. I think it has been a mistake (largely my own) for VEP not previously to have established a close liaison with those academicians whose research interests paralle/and complement ours. I realize that the VEP-SRC research orientation is not precisely the same as that of the academicians; nevertheless to the extent that any effective research is dependent upon the design and method used to compile, process and interpret data, there is an overlap. This was the area upon which I tried to center discussions.

Moss, Vines, Matthews and Prothro told me that they had more or less anticipated our difficulties in gathering data through the facilities of the agencies conducting the registration programs. They felt that the lack of training and experience in, and lack of professional committment to, research method, coupled with the heavy action orientation of the civil rights personnel, pretty well precluded their functioning as effective research agencies. It is my opinion, as it was theirs, that this is the core of our research problem.

If this be the assumption upon which we base our approach to VEP research, it follows that/we must find a means of dichotomizing our efforts so that one operation generates data and the other, connected with the first only through VEP direction, observes, compiles and reports data. Interpretation of the data would, of course, produce the final publication on the project, plus any interim reports we might find desirable. Furthermore, such a dichotomous operation, assuming as it would the use of trained research personnel, would permit the application of a rather rigourous research design, which, in turn would ensure that the data we gather is relevant to given research objective.

The professors foresaw several difficulties in recruiting research personnel--finding students whose interests and capabilities qualify them; the possibility that the right person would not be in the right place, etc.--however they thought none of these insuperable. The one matter which must be settled before thinking along this line can proceed is the amount of money we propose to commit to research, as opposed to data-generation.

I was unable to comment upon present VEP policy in this regard, because we have never discussed the matter from this point of view. However, all this did lead naturally to one consideration which has come up briefly in some of our casual discussions--the possibility that we might want to seek additional funds to be used strictly for observing, compiling and reporting information.

The professors enthusiastically endorsed the idea and readily agreed to serve on a small, active, advisory committee which would develop a prospectus to be submitted to foundations and then participate actively in designing the research program and recruiting and overseeing research personnel. They suggested that graduate students in sociology, political science, social psychology and, possibly, social anthropolgy, might be interested in writing dissertations, theses and term papers on the aspects of VEP programs which the research design deemed relevant. I pointed out to them that VEP would not be willing to devote its efforts solely to an academic research program--that we would not make of the project a laboratory experiment designed to test pre-conceived hypotheses--that many considerations other than those of pure research must enter into the distribution of funds supporting registration programs. They regretted that VEP could not be a laboratory experiment; however they pointed out that whatever the criteria used for distributing VEP funds, the registration programs inevitably generate enormous amounts of data the importance of which both to social scientists and to civil rights organizations cannot be over-emphasized. They strongly urged that we utilize their professional capabilities and resources in order to prevent the loss of such data and to ensure that it is gathered in such a way as to make possible its meaningful interpretation.

Matthews and Prothro suggested that the Rockefeller Foundation would probably be interested in a proposal along the lines discussed above, inasmuch as it had evidenced a continuing interest in such matters over a period of some years, and considering its already rather heavy investment in their own research program. I discussed this at some length in a private conversation with Heard and he too suggested that the Rockefeller Foundation would be interested, given an acceptable prospectus and a viable research structure. He mentioned, in passing, that $100,000 might be a reasonable neighborhood in which to place such a proposal.

One alternative to seeking additional foundation support for research purposes would be simply to allocate a given proportion of our present resources strictly for research purposes. This would enable our research program to preceed on the course outlined above without the present necessity for engaging in the tedium of negotiations with foundations. It would have the additional advantage of giving us a background of serious research effort for a future approach to foundations. On the other hand, such a policy would considerably diminish the already inadequate funds available for getting Negroes registered and participating in politics.

Prothro questioned what effect a request for additional "research" funds would have upon our present research-based tax exemption. I suggested that this whole problem has arisen out of the first six months' research experience and that, therefore, such a proposal might be justified on the ground that it merely represents a different approach to the research project as a whole. There is no necessary distinction, so far as tax exemption is concerned, between funds spent to generate the data and those spent to compile and report it, is there ? The professors agreed that this sounded reasonable, but of course someone familiar with tax law would have to explore the legal implications.

It seems to me urgent that we decide upon one or the other of the above alternatives in the very near future, and that we proceed upon whatever course is selected with the greatest possible dispatch. A significant proportion of the data which will be generated during the life of VEP is already lying about subject to the attrition of time and the inevitable distortion of perspective which that attrition entails.

There are persuasive considerations in addition to the above which, I think, should be taken into accound in contemplating the dichotomization of our efforts. Heard point out that there is a certain "missionary" effect in involving academic personnel in civil rights matters. There is the likelihood that some proportion of them will continue a professional interest throughout their academic careers; and even those who do not will always retain a residuum of concrete personal experience which cannot but alter their attitudes, or reinforce the,, along lines we would consider desirable. Those who, at the outset of their academic careers, engage in this kind of research will have a vested interest in this research area, and we could expect that the interest stimulated and reinforced by the VEP program would result in considerable additional research which could only serve to benefit the civil rights movementas a whole.

Again, While VEP research and social science research have a somewhat different orientation, both must depend upon the accuracy and effectiveness of their methods of compiling information. The difference lies in the manner and purpose of the interpretation of the information rather than in the methods used to gather it. I think we would make a serious mistake if we did not avail ourselves of the opportunity to utilize the research expertise of academically trained personnel.

Too, I think we must give serious consideration to the effect the results of the VEP effort will have upon the professional reputations of us who are involved in it, and upon future evaluations of the effectiveness of the Southern Regional Council. I think that neither we nor the Council can afford to risk the general opprobrium which would attach to a $500,000 research project which failed to produce a significant body of knowledge about the subject matter with which it was concerned. I do not see how we can expect to be able to produce in a creditable manner if we do not systematically organize our research efforts along the lines discussed in this report.

Finally, VEP has a unique opportunity to assemble a body of information whose value to the future of the civil rights movement is incalculable. What part is played by discrimination in the genesis of political apathy ? What are the ingredients of white hostility toward Negro political participation and to what extent does this hostility manifest itself among whites? What are the techniques of resistance to Negro political participation and how can they best be neutralized? To what extent do fears irreconcilible with current conditions contribute to the political immobilization of the Negro ? These are but a few of the subsidiary questions we must answer if we are going to approach our ultimate reasearch objective--an evaluation of measures which will effectively stimulate and promote the political participation of Negroes. But we can provide these answers only if we compile our data uniformly and systematically according to a research design which will ensure that the information we develop will be relevant to the problem we are approaching. And I think our experience thus far amply demonstrates that registration workers are ill-equipped by training, experience and motivation to qualify as implementers of such a research program.

Gunnar Myrdal, etc.

First paragraph is one long, complex, impossible, jargonistic sentence.

I don't see the need to mention names (Myrdal,Wirth,Horowitz). Language is unnecessarily complex(solopsistic, for instance).

I would, if I were redoing his paper, start with the sentence at the top of p. 3 about the usefulness of reason and the scientific method in dealing with the problems of society.

The ideas are good, but the language is that of a scholarly paper in the stuffy sense of the term.

A Statement, etc.

I can't argue about "interpretation or translation" because that particular sentence is rather ambiguous. The discussion of public policy and/or social science in the second paragraph, p.3 would need much more room to tackle this difficult job. I don't see the need at all for the first two paragraphs on p. 3; I don't see why its necessary to state your position on this matter.

Simplify sentence top of p. 5

I wouldn't argue about the last sentence on p. 5. I'd cut it out as not necessary, though the part before the semi-colon is not provocative at all, in my opinion.

p. 6, since you say a "mite" of influence, you are right. All energy has an effect, and this certainly.

p. 6 why, in that list of questions, don't you include the repercussions of increased registration on local politics,and make this central, with the effect on nationalpolitics a peripheral question so that not too much is expected there.

See #1

p. 10, pt. 4. effect on elections shouldn't be too problematical, though effect on other civil rights interests will be difficult. But even a hedged conclusion is better than none. We can't demand exactness in social research, but probability can be a very useful concept.

p. 11 (c) It seems to me hard to indicate the "criteria of distinctiveness" before you actually go into those sources and see what's there.

p. 12 I too don't see the need for arguing against "machine techniques" etc. It sounds unnecessarily defensive. I don't understand why he calls these sources in the field "secondary".

Back to p. 5 the phrase "by stimulating national publicity" is only one of several, but some people might see that only; yet it is true. I would weaken it by adding to the list asummary of what Minnis says about"getting started" (though in such areas it will really require much more than that I'm afraid).

Some of the remarks in Wolfe's paper on the African minerals industry may be appropriate for our theory. "When it occurs that the force which the state has the right to use depends heavily on monies that come predominately from one corporation or a systematically organized group of corporations, it is the state which may be regulated." This probably is a bit over-simplified for use in the U.S. However, there is merit in the idea that lack of economic diversity within a semi-autonomous political entity ensures control of the political machinery by those economic groups who are powerful and efficient enough to dominate economic affairs. Thus, the money actually paid in taxes wouldnot be so important in determinig public policy, as would be the multi-form influence of economic dominance in ensuring the perpetuation of attitudes on the part of legislature, executive and judiciary which attitudes conform to the needs and desires of the economic dominants. A case in point might be the influence exerted upon the legislature of a state by the private power interests to avoid effectivefunctioning of regulatory bodies:i.e., the Ga. public service commission is held by legislaltive act to a budget of $270,000--this is bound to be a drop in the bucket compared to the budget that would be required for adequate supervision of the power industry in Georgia.

Considering all this, it is important to know what is the picture of the economic structure of the county in which registration is going on. If your view is that the political process is what divides up the benefits of the society, and that increased registration for Negroes is a way of advancing their position vis-a-vis the benefits of the society, and if you assume that there may be some reluctance on the part of present dominants to see a reshuffling of the distribution, you would expect that resistance to Negro registration could be traced to those dominants. This, of course, does not mean that the present dominants need be acting consciously according to a predetermined scheme with clear objectives in view and with a well rationalized reasoning behind it. The set of attitudes found in the south today can be interpreted as resulting from the ideology of an economically dominant class, more or less unconsciously developed. Thus the outlook of that class with reference to economic, social and political desiderata reflects their economic interest in a very broad sense--and they control the institutions of communication (education, church, media, etc.) in such a way as to structure the view of reality inculcated in all elements of the society. Ergo, a very large majority of the community finds itself subserving an ideology which operates directly against that majority's interest, because the ideology explains and justifys a distribution of the benefits of the society which deprives that vast majority.

THE AFRICAN MINERAL INDUSTRY AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE FOR ANTHROPOLOGICAL THEORY

(Paper prepared for presentation at the annual meetings of the American Anthropological Association, Chicago, 1962).

Alvin W. Wolfe
Washington University

The need for some sort of human organization at a level of integration superior to the war-prone nation-state has stimulated rational attempts to invent structures intended to reduce international conflict. These inventions, such as the League of Nations and the United Nations, tend to use the very units that are in contention, nation-states, and the same principles of organization, centralized power in a bureaucratic framework, that characterize the nation-state. The long history of development of human social systems suggests, however, that development from one "level of sociocultural integration," to use the concept of Julian Steward[1], to a new, wider, level involves the emergence of genuinely different principles which yield qualitatively different groups at the higher level. A tribe is not a federation of families; a nation is not a federation of tribes; neither is it likely that man's present problem will be solved by a federation of states. It may be that the current decades of enormous upheaval, of crumbling political empires, of rapid social change and population growth, and of acceleration of industrialization, will give rise to some new system of social control somewhat independent of the currently troublesome units, the nation-states. The present paper does not purport to describe a utopian system for establishing world peace. It merely calls attention to a developing system with some characteristics that might make effective an international, supranational, integrative system.

In pursuing answers to quite another question, namely, why the "wind of change" expected to sweep southward over Africa was fairly halted at the point where minerals become important, I found the mineral extraction industry of southern Africa to be controlled by an intricate system based much more on overlapping membership of a variety of groups than on a bureaucratic centralization of administrative power. The network binds groups that are different both structurally and functionally, some business corporations, some states, some families, in a modern supranational structure that is more than just international. The ties among these entities are such that the boundaries of the system are ambiguous. Though operating in a complex modern world, the structure of this system appears to the anthropologist analagous to "acephalous" segmentary social systems. An even better comparison might be with such smaller societies as those of aboriginal Australia where networks of overlapping family, horde, and totemic groups provide a high degree of order without centralized control.

Before proceeding, I should register some reservations. A system such as this is difficult to describe briefly. This preliminary report, based on incomplete data on a system that is dynamic, continuously adapting to changing conditions, attempts only to point out a few salient features which appear important for the future development of this system, and to point out some of those changing conditions to which this system seems adaptable.

INTEGRATION OF THE MINING INDUSTRY

The several hundred mining companies operating in southern Africa are integrated through a series of relationships that focus on some of the larger among them--this system I have elsewhere called the Cape-to-Katanga team.[2] Then, in a variety of ways, these corporations are linked with governments. Many of the connections are simply those of parent company to subsidiary, but the relationships most crucial to the whole system, providing its most important characteristic, are those based on overlapping membership in key groups.

Some structural principles are apparent in the mere inspection of the lists of directors of nine key companies which, with their subsidiaries and associated firms, can be seen as governing the exploitation of the mineral resources of southern Africa: Union Minière du Haut Katanga, Tanganyika Concessions, British South Africa Company, Anglo American Corporation of South Africa, De Beers Consolidated Mines, Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, Rhokana Corporation, Mufulira Copper Mines, and Rhodesian Selection Trust. Eighty-eight men occupy the 130 directorships; still closer to the hub, six men occupy twenty-two seats. Analysis of the relationships of these, and many other corporations,[3] suggests that the interlocking follows a predictable pattern: roughly, the units which are most similar in function and therefore most prone to compete need the highest degree of interlocking. Those that are functionally disparate can rely more on the market principle in their relations, while the similar companies must create the conditions for cooperation on the basis of reciprocity. Thus, Rhokana and Rhodesian Selection Trust are alike in their emphasis on mining copper in the Copperbelt, but they avoid the temptation to compete by interlocking heavily through a third company, Mufulira Copper Mines, whose sixteen-man-board is nearly filled by nine directors of Rhodesian Selection Trust and six directors of Rhokana. On the other hand, the British South Africa Company, whose place in the system is functionally unique in that it does not operate mines but "owns" the mineral resources over vast parts of the territory including the Copperbelt, needs only three joint directors with Anglo American Corporation of South Africa and only one with Tanganyika Concessions. This latter has another functionally distinct position in that it owns, in addition to much of Union Minière du Haut Katanga, the Benguela Railway, in collaboration with the Portuguese government. In the American economy, we may need to be reminded, interlocking is greatest among functionally different corporations (except of course in the parent-subsidiary relationships). That the pattern is the opposite in this international, or supranational, system is important enough to be re-emphasized. Between firms that are functionally distinct there already exists something like organic solidarity; between those that do not need each other a relationship of reciprocity is developed by the mechanism of interlocking directorates.

States, too, enter into relationship with such a system as we are describing. Portugal, a state, owns an interest, with Tanganyika Concessions, in the Benguela Railway, a private corporation controlling the most efficient route to the sea from the Copperbelt and Katanga. The Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, as a state, "owns" and operates primarily for the mining industry the Rhodesia Railways. While the Benguela Railway is a profitable enterprise for Portugal, Rhodesia Railways are an expense to the Federation government which must pay off the bonds held by the British South Africa Company.

States, of course, have considerable bargaining power vis-a-vis other social units within their territories in their having the legitimate right to use force. When it occurs that the force which the state has the right to use depends heavily on monies that come predominantly from one corporation or a systematically organized group of corporations, it is the state which may be regulated. Governments in southern Africa are weak in just this way, and the future may find these states no more than junior partners with the international corporations in a supranational system of mineral exploitation.

Those who see only the enormous growth of state power in the modern world apparently do not take into account the large number of weak states now existing, and the difficulties states encounter in attempting to form stronger units by federation. States cannot readily form overlapping systems among themselves. They can and, as we have seen, do overlap with supranational corporations.

Defining the boundaries of the behavioral system we are here attempting to analyze entails difficulties similar to those met in defining effective political boundaries for societies without state structures--the Nuer of Sudan, the aboriginal Australians, for example. In the mining industry, as in some small societies, controlled cooperation simply becomes weaker as one moves from the point of focus outward. Familiar with such systems, anthropologists are not likely to conclude therefore that systematic organization is not present. Rather, amoiguity of the boundaries can be seen as a characteristic of the system--and may even be of adaptive value in that it permits expansion when the conditions are right and tends to preserve the center, and thus the system itself, when conditions are adverse.

The nine corporations taken as the focus of the southern African mining industry derive their importance from their relationships with the several hundred other corporations and states operating in the area and then, further, with other producers and processors of minerals in the other areas of the world. It is impossible here to list all these relationships, but some indication of the way in which they move outward toward infinity can be given. Union Minière in Katanga is effectively controlled by the Société Générale de Belgique. The Société Générale shares with De Beers, Anglo American Corporation of South Africa, and the Portuguese state, control of the Diamond Company of Angola. But most of the activity of Société Générale is in Europe, where it links with some of the largest industrial and financial groups in the world. One of the numerous lines that could be followed leads through a subsidiary, Société Générale des Minerais, with ties connecting it to Amalgamated Metal Corporation in the United Kingdom. Société Générale des Minerais, together with its parent, created a company in Canada, Sogemines Limited, among whose interests are significant holdings in Rio Tinto Mining Company of Canada, a subsidiary of Rio Tinto Co. Limited, part of the Rothschild group in the United Kingdom. Rio Tinto, to quote from the Mining Yearbook, "has interests in Northern Rhodesia of which the most important is its large holding of shares in Rhokana Corporation Limited...."[3] It also has interests in South African mines. Tracing the interconnections among the groups involved in the mineral field reveals circles in circles and circles intersecting circles, so that one cannot say, at any point, this is where the system ends, all these are in, all those are out.

Similarly, despite the evidence of an orderly system, the mineral industry of southern Africa cannot be said to be under the willful control of a few men at the apex of a bureaucratic hierarchy. Certainly, differences in power are present between corporations and between men, but there is no evidence, even in the more formally organized segment of the system known as the diamond cartel, that one man or one company controls directly the actions of others. Though here much research remains to be done, the cooperation among the units in the system appears dependent on shared interests and shared information throughout the intricate network. Copper production in 1961 was ostensibly geared down in the Copperbelt region in order to conform to the world market, even though the copper industry has no formal organization comparable to that of the diamond industry.

Concerning the use of the several rail routes to the sea, attempts are made to satisfy the various states and corporations involved although there is no "ministry of transportation" to order such cooperation.

Granted that our information on this aspect of the structure is scanty, it appears certain there is no single ruler, private or public. Yet, this "tribe" pursues its goals with enough efficiency to continue to profit and expand. A positive advantage of this acephalous character is that any sort of a coup d'etat is impossible, as is destruction of the whole system by disintegration of the executive institution.

EVOLUTIONARY PROCESSES

From this altogether too brief exposition of some structural aspects of the system of mineral exploitation let us turn to view the matter in evolutionary perspective. Three on-going processes tend to foster the development of this system: First, the process of industrialization, pursuing man in every part of the earth, will continuously enlarge the already great demand for minerals. Second, the continuing process of political decolonization enhances the freedom of action of this essentially private system. Third, the lowering of international barriers to trade leaves the arena freer for the action of supranational economic organizations.

The rapid development of industrial systems in the twentieth century introduces important new factors into the ecological system within which man operates. The idea that increasing productivity is desirable has spread wherever men are. Once on the road toward higher productivity through industrialization there appears no turning back, no levelling off, without disaster. An important meaning of this is seldom recognized. In twentieth century ecological systems, minerals have become as necessary to the maintenance of human industrial systems as food is to human biological systems.

For Europe alone, projections indicate a kind of economic growth that will, between 1955 and 1970, nearly double the demand for ferroalloys, such as manganese, chromite, and cobalt, and also for nonferrous metals such as copper, zinc, tin, and cadmium.[4] Add to this the increased need for the same minerals resulting from the growth of industrial systems all over the world, and the dimensions of the ecological problem can be appreciated.

To the degree that minerals will be relatively more important in the years to come, those who control them or rather the systems involving their control, will have enhanced influence in what we now call international affairs. Representatives of political states may well become less influential than representatives of such functionally necessary systems as the "Cape-to-Katanga Miners."

Although European state power obviously made possible the establishment of such systematic control over mineral resources as is exercised in southern Africa, the current disintegration of colonial empires serves more to strengthen than to weaken the system. National state controls have frequently been used to inhibit development of wider-scale economic integration, since each corporation operates under a charter from one or another nation-state. Dissolution of colonial ties strengthens the position, relative to states, of corporations whose operations are sufficiently internationalized.

The Congo provides a clear case, almost too extreme to use as a general example, of weakening of state power relative to private "international" corporations. The Belgian-administered government of the Congo had enormous control over the economic destiny of that territory rich in natural resources. Especially was this true in regard to the mineral industry, where not only did the state own a minority interest in most of the corporations but it also had an effective device for almost complete control of the largest among these, such as Union Minière, through a parastatal corporation, the Special Committee of the Katanga, of which the government could appoint two-thirds of the directors. The Belgian state had considerable leverage it could apply toward controlling such corporate giants as the Société Générale. The dissolution of this Special Committee just before Congolese independence resulted not only in stripping the new Congolese state of much of its potential to influence the mining industry but also in diminution of the Belgian state in this regard.[5]

Numerous events in international affairs involving large states as well as small ones suggest the power of the mineral industry system. I will only refer briefly to the difficulties experienced by the United Nations, even with strong support from the United States, in dealing with the Katanga secession. The difficulties stem in part from the fact that the wealth-producing units are corporations organized supranationally, so that states and state-based structures such as the United Nations have no effective way of dealing with them. Newspaper reports in January, 1962, told that the United States was using as an unofficial ambassador to the Union Minière people, Admiral Alan Kirk, a director of several Société Générale affiliates in the United States. These reports were denied by the Admiral, who was, shortly after the incident, named U. S. Ambassador to Nationalist China (N. Y. Times, January 2, 1962 and May 14, 1962). Complications in dealing with South Africa, too, result in part from the strength of the supranationally organized mineral industry. While the United States government is opposed to apartheid there and sees much potential danger in its persistence, positive action such as participation in a United Nations boycott is out of the question.

but this is not the real reason is it? Doesn't the business about states being weaker than their industrial systems apply here too?

The supranationally organized mineral industry that finds its focus in South Africa cannot be dictated to by any states, for what they control is too valuable to any state. In the years following the Korean War, when the United States was interested in stockpiling strategic minerals and in fostering certain types of economic development at home, many federal loans at exceptionally reasonable rates went to corporate members of this African mineral system, including one hundred million dollars to a number of South African mining companies. Even the Soviet Union, a strong state, too, finds itself making contracts with the diamond-producing companies, agreements governing the production and distribution of industrial diamonds (Africa Report, November, 1961).

One should take into account, finally, the current trend toward relaxation of trade barriers--the common market in Europe, and the American legislation to this effect in 1962. Directed primarily at increasing economic activity in general, the reductions in tariffs and in national-state controls of many kinds benefit especially those firms already organized internationally. The concept of "gross national product" had already been illusory insofar as such productive units as those engaged in the African mineral industry were concerned. The increased freedom of movement of capital which is part of the Common Market plan makes the very concept of "national economy" obsolete. The corporations of this group are registered in many different nations, and are owned and directed by persons of diverse nationalities. Where one or another is registered, or where one or another director is citizen, has little to do with economic facts, to which legalisms bow. That South Africa's withdrawal from the Commonwealth involved no change in her trade and financial arrangements with the United Kingdom is a case in point. The supranational integration in the economic sphere superceded the political, international ties. The concept of "national economy" may be an illusion which must be given up if we are to understand the new world of industrial systems.

CONCLUSION

In order to understand the world that is rapidly becoming industrialized we ought to consider the changing ecological circumstances this industrialization entails. We ought, also, to open our minds to the possibility that cultural evolution may not have ended with the development of state institutions. If we organize our observations of recent history in the comparative perspective of anthropological theory we may discern some principles and structures, however incipient, of an emerging new and higher level of sociocultural integration. In this field anthropology has something to offer as well as something to learn.

THE RIPON SOCIETY
P.O. Box 138

January 15, 1965

To the members of the Republican National Committee:

This coming week the Republican National Committee will convene in Chicago for the first party-wide meeting since the elections of November, 1964. The Ripon Society has prepared the enclosed report, "Election '64" as a background analysis for all Republicans who are concerned about our party and who wish to rebuild a winning national Republican force.

The report was written before the announcement that Chairman Burch would retire and that Mr. Bliss would assume the chairmanship upon invitation of the National Committee. We welcome that accord and offer our congratulations to all those who shared in achieving it. It is an important step toward settling our differences so that we may face the future.

Yet in facing the future, we believe that our party must give sober and honest consideration to the past. The story of the 1964 campaign is one most Republicans would prefer to forget. We have recreated "Election '64" only with a certain sense of sadness. But we have done so in the conviction that candor is our party's greatest present need. For only through hard thought leading to constructive action can the Republican party regain and win the allegiance of the millions of Americans it needs to become a vital majority party. We have concluded our analysis with a series of recommendations to this end which we offer for your consideration on pages 120-124.

We in the Ripon Society feel very deeply that the Republican party must be the party of the future, the party that recognizes the nation's needs and faces them with responsible solutions. We hope that we may be able to contribute to the finding of those solutions.

Respectfully yours,

The Executive Committee,
The Ripon Society

PRESS RELEASE

FOR RELEASE 6 PM MONDAY JANUARY 18, 1965
FOR TUESDAY AM JANUARY 19 NEWSPAPERS

RIPON SOCIETY OFFERS TWELVE "FIRST STEPS" FOR REBUILDING REPUBLICAN PARTY TO MARK REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE MEETING

A twelve point program of "specific first steps" for Republican recovery, based on a careful indepth analysis of the 1964 elections, was recommended to the Republican National Committee in a report made public today. The 124 page report, entitled Election '64 and containing a state by state analysis of the past campaign, was prepared by the Ripon Society, a Republican research and policy group. (NOTE: Individual state election reports are included on pages 46-118 of the report. For the state analysis see page .)

In a cover letter to members of the Republican National Committee, the Ripon Society noted that the Chicago parley would be "the first party wide meeting since the elections of November, 1964." The Society emphasized the need for "sober and honest consideration of the past" in planning the Republican future. It stated its conviction that "candor is our Party's greatest present need." "For only through hard thought leading to constructive action can the Republican Party regain and win the allegiance of the millions of Americans it needs to become a vital majority party." The report, said the Ripon Society, was directed to "all Republicans who are concerned about our Party and who wish to rebuild a winning national Republican force."

(more)

RIPON RECOMMENDATIONS
(For complete list see pages 120-124)

In its recommendations, the Ripon Society called for a reversal of the Southern strategy of 1964, unequivocal disassociation of the Republican party from irrational and irresponsible extremist elements, more representative national party bodies, a re-examination and updating of the Bliss "Big City" Report of 1962, efforts to win back into the party Negro Republicans, efforts to recruit "qualified, vigorous, articulate, and moderate candidates" for 67 Congressional seats that could be won in 1966, and a national policy conference as suggested by the Republican Governors.

In redirecting Republican efforts in the South the Society recommended that the Republican National Committee recognize that "only by championing the cause of civil rights can it make real and permanent gains in the South and retain strength in the North." It urged Republican Negro voter registration drives and "national Party pressure [to] assure that all State party machinery and elections are administered on a completely open and non-discriminatory basis." The Ripon Society also recommended that a formal apology be extended to Dr. Martin Luther King for efforts attributed to an employee of the National Committee to induce Negro voters to waste their votes by writing in Dr. King's name in the recent election.

ELECTION ANALYSIS

The Ripon analysis concluded that issues did play an important role in the 1964 campaign (pages 12-37). It noted that "the public reaction to Goldwater's positions on civil rights, nuclear responsibility, and social welfare legislation, was so strong and universal that it far outweighed the voters' concern with their regional or socio-economic interests." Goldwater's selection as the Republican standard bearer cast many issues before he left San Francisco, the report stated. His campaign forfeited most of his remaining issue advantages. His opponents hit him both on his past record and on his consistency when he changed to more defensible positions. "Goldwater's position on national issues, clearly documented in his past statements and publications, proved to be an insurmountable obstacle to his campaign ever getting off the ground." Other Republican candidates suffered as well, the Ripon report concluded. "Ironically, the very reason that issues were dominant in 1964--Goldwater--made a moderate Republican position on them indefensible."

(more)

In recommending a national policy conference the Society noted the almost total alienation of the academic and intellectual community from the Republican party as a result of the 1964 campaign.

Much of the Ripon analysis dealt with the Southern strategy and the impact of the civil rights issue and Negro vote on the election outcome (pages 14-26). The Ripon Society pinpointed at least a dozen Southern Senatorial and Congressional races that Republicans might have gained with a healthy percentage of the Negro vote. Unless a Republican national ticket can get at least 20 per cent of the Negro vote, the report concluded, it is in "serious trouble." "The Goldwater-Miller percentage (6%) was fatal not only to Republican hopes for the Presidency, but also to countless Republican candidates who went down under straight ticket Democratic voting."

In assessing the results of the 1964 Republican campaign strategy, the Ripon Society estimated that the loss of 43 Republican seats in the House of Representatives and 2 Republican seats in the Senate were directly attributable to the Goldwater-Miller ticket. The ticket won the Party only 7 segregationist Congressmen from the deep South. The Society estimated that Republican candidates also lost the chance to add at least 13 new Congressional seats, 5 new Senate seats, and 5 new Governorships. (pages 39-41 and Table VII page 119).

The Ripon Society directed its closing remarks to the young voters of the nation who were alienated by the 1964 campaign: ". . . today no man and no Party carries the torch of our generation. This is the great tragedy of American politics--all too easily overlooked in the excitement of the 1964 election. And it is the great opportunity of a new Republican Party."

The Ripon Society is a Republican research and policy group with headquarters in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Founded in December, 1962, it was inspired by the Bow Group of British Conservatives. It draws its name from the founding place of the Republican party, Ripon, Wisconsin. Its purpose is to generate thought and debate within the Republican Party leading toward the adoption of creative, realistic, and relevant policies. The Ripon Society hopes to be a catalyst in regaining respect for the Republican Party among the intellectual community of America--and in the Party's most current crisis, Ripon hopes to help define the programs upon which Republicans can base their claim to leadership. The Society has national membership open, upon application, to younger members of the academic, business and professional communities. Inquiries concerning the Society, subscription to Ripon publications or additional copies of Election '64 should be directed to the Ripon Society, P.O. Box 138, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

Dear Mr. Marans:

Thank you for sending me a copy of the Ripon Society's press release and the report, "Election '64." Our thanks goes to the editor for acknowledging the contribution of the Southern Regional Council in the preface of the report.

I find the report extremely interesting, and it parallels conclusions we arrived at on many points which we examined in the South.

Your recommendation No. 8 suggests that, "Republican Negro voter registration drives should be undertaken immediately." Our project has just completed a 2½ year program of conducting a strictly non-partisan voter registration campaign in 11 southern states, and I am personally of the opinion that it would be better for Republicans to support some similar non-partisan vehicle for registration and then make a strong effort to attract newly registered voters (as well as old ones) to the Republican party. When our own project was launched, we received the public endorsement from the national chairmen of both the Democratic and Republican national committees, and local Negro Republicans were very active in all of our registration programs.

I would very much like to have you send a copy of, "Election '64" to a few of the people who are connected with the foundations which contributed to the Voter Education Project.

Note: As of 2/19/65, Election '64 has not been rec'd from Lewis's office.

A list of the names and addresses of such persons is attached so that copies might be sent to them, unless you would prefer sending five copies to me to be forwarded to them.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Branton:

I wish to acknowledge the materials you sent me last December for use in the Ripon Society's report on Election '64. The report is to be issued next week and includes a great amount of data based on the VEP statistics. Wherever it was practical we tried to give specific credit to Southern Regional Council for the information, and I believe the introduction acknowledges the assistance of SRC.

It is my understanding that VEP is terminating operations this year. If that is so, I hope that some agency will remain to continue the co-ordination of voter registration that your group has so well provided these last three years.

Thank you again.

BURCH ASKS G.O.P. TO REJECT RACISM

WB

Seeks to Hold Gain in South Without Losing the North

By JOHN D. MORRIS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17 — Dean Burch, the Republican National Chairman, said today that his party must consolidate its gains in the South without resorting to racist appeals, "overt or covert."

"I don't want to go into the South and lose the North," he told the Young Republican National Leadership Training School, which opened a four-day session at the Sheraton-Park Hotel.

About 500 Young Republicans are here for speeches by party leaders and seminars on campaign management, fund raising and public relations.

Mr. Burch, who will be succeeded as national chairman on April 1 by Ray C. Bliss of Ohio, got a warm reception. He was applauded frequently and enthusiastically.

The applause was particularly long and loud when he mentioned the name of former Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona, the 1964 Republican Presidential nominee.

Replies to Ripon Society

Some critics have accused Mr. Burch, Mr. Goldwater and other Republican campaign strategists of writing off the Negro vote in 1964 and catering to racial rejudice in the South. The Ripon Society, a liberal-oriented Republican group with headquarters in Cambridge, Mass., said in a report Jan. 18 that the "Southern strategy" of the Goldwater forces was largely responsible for the party's crushing defeat in the rest of the country.

A request from the audience for his comment on the Ripon Society report prompted Mr. Burch to repudiate racism as a campaign tactic. He called the report "a slanderous defamation" and said its authors were "not bothered with facts."

"It is fascinating to me," he said, "that an organization of only about 80 members can write a report and get so much attention."

Mr. Burch said it would be a good thing if 1964 could be remembered as the year that the Republican party became a national party by establishing itself in the South. However, he warned that national strategy could not be based on racial appeal, overt or covert.

Instead, he asserted, the party should appeal to the economic conservatism of the average Southerner.

"You don't have to go down there and wave the Confederate flag," he remarked.

Urges Tolerance in Party

Mr. Burch said it was "amazing" that Negro registration in the South was overwhelmingly Democratic despite efforts by local Democratic officials in such cities as Selma, Ala., to keep Negroes from voting.

He said Republicans should "take steps" to see that followers of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the civil rights leader, "don't just automatically register Democratic." But he conceded that he did not know how this could be done.

On the broader question of rebuilding the party, Mr. Burch appealed for tolerance by all factions. A political party "can't fly on one wing," he said.

"You must have a left, a right and a middle," he said. "Otherwise there is a tendency to go into a spin. I am afraid that's what happened to us last time."

Dear Mr. Freeman:

Confirming our telephone conversation of this afternoon, the Voter Education Project has distributed nearly all of the funds made available to it for field grants. There are still, in several southern states, specially attractive opportunities for work during the summer and fall. If we could undertake these, we would be able both to realize registration results from earlier organizational work and first-rate research findings.

It is respectfully requested, therefore, that the Rockefeller Brothers Fund review its file on the Voter Education Project and our earlier conversations about it. If you would find that you could grant support to the project, we would be most appreciative.

THE WHITE HOUSE
Washington, D. C.,

Dear Mr. Wofford:

When Franklin Williams was in San Francisco last week for the Peace Corp, we discussed one of our mutual interests, registration of voters. As a result, I determined to write you as the person most concerned on behalf the Administration, with voter registration in the South.

By way of background, in 1958, when C. J. Haggerty was Secretary-Treasurer of the California Labor Federation, we were successful, in California, in developing a start at a labor - NAACP - CSO (Community Service Organization -the grass roots action group in the Mexican-American communities), joint program on voter registration. The California Labor Federation supplied funds and some supervision (mostly myself). The NAACP and the CSO made their organizational structures available for this project. They also supplied the volunteer deputy registrars and the few temporary but full-time "organizers". The 1958 program was sufficiently successful to lead to a more ambitious program in 1960.

In 1960 the labor movement put some $50,000 into the registration of minority voters in California. This sum includes both the pre-primary and the pre-general election periods. About $30,000 came from the California Labor Federation and $20,000.00 from the National AFL-CIO Voter Registration Fund.

The results of the 1960 drive were dramatic enough to attract some national attention: 137,000 registered through the CSO campaign (mostly but not all Mexican-Americans) and some 73,000 through the work of the NAACP and some other groups based in the Negro community. The keys to this success, and passing them on is a chief purpose of this letter, seemed tobe:

1- The use of existing organizational structures and memberships from which to recruit the active teams. The NAACP and CSO gave institutional status to registration with people who already looked to them for leadership.

2- Full time organizers are necessary. Registration is mostly work and organization and more work, by large numbers of people at the grass roots. Few people are self-starters or will remain on an intense campaign without prodding and close contact with actively-involved local leadership. This is where the temporary-full-time field workers came in. They were assigned by mutual agreement to the key areas to work with their groups and with the other two where possible. They recruited the deputy registrars and the "bird dogs" and kept them going out night after night.

3- The crucial full-time field workers would not have been possible without the funds which the Labor Movement made available.

Recently in correspondence with people in Washington and New York I have tried to urge an early start on a long term project of registration of voters in the South, especially Negro voters. I have been a little disturbed by some of the responses which do not seem to measure up to this, the most important single need for American Democracy in 1962. I am told that Reverend Martin Luther King is prepared to give registration his first priority, and that related groups under Reverend Suttleworth and CORE will participate. I know, however, that King's hopes of last year to recruit some full-time organizers for this, have had to be postponed. I am not sure that the groups now concerned with the costs and debts of the Freedom Ride suits will be able to do as much as they want to. The NAACP has not been able to develop a really on-going emphasis on registration. There is also some lack of coordination if not cooperation between these various groups. I know that a few international unions are interested in voter registration in the South, but their own membership is somewhat limited there. When the AFL-CIO conducted a crash program on this in 1960, they did it not through COPE, but through a separate structure directly under George Meany.

Perhaps now is the time to work out a similar program with the AFL-CIO which involves some labor money and some staff people in a cooperative effort (assuming this is possible) with the groups in the Negro community who can be effective on such a project.

I am writing you on this now because:

The Administration is the most likely force for achieving the unity and cooperation of all the possibly helpful organizations, and

The Labor Movement has sometimes decided too late (for maximum achievement) to move into some "fringe area" projects. Maximum achievement in 1962 probably requires that a beginning be made now.

The South may not be the responsibility of those of us who live on the West Coast, but I am concerned that we should be able to do there, where there are the same organizations which have worked together here, a basic job of voter registration. Perhaps these suggestions will have some value.

Sincerely,

William Becker

Subject: Possible Involvement of State Councils on Human Relations in Voter Registration Effort

I think we can depend on the cooperation and support of the state offices to the extent of their ability. I think we must recognize, however, that certain problems are involved in attempting to utilize the state councils as major channels in this effort. The state councils are fairly small groups, averaging about five or six hundred in most states. As liaison or communications groups they generally include Negro representation from the professional and leadership groups. They do not, however, have vast Negro membership nor have they won the emotional loyalty or attachment of Negro communities below the leadership level. The interracial nature of the councils may be a strength in some places but a handicap in others. In some of the strongly resisting areas, an all-Negro effort at increasing the vote might meet with more success than would a door-bell ringing effort by white persons or mixed groups.

Of course, the strength of the councils varies considerably from state to state and from community to community. I would doubt that the councils would be able to launch drives of their own in any community. I think there might be a number of places where councils might be effective coordinators or catalysts to involve a number of groups. Unfortunately, but inevitably, council membership and support is lightest in the rural areas where the need for a voting effort is greatest. I think the following might be noted as probable places where council strength would enable our groups to play a significant role: Richmond, Lynchburg, Norfolk, Alexandria, Arlington, and Fairfax County, Virginia; Savannah, Georgia; Gainesville, Jacksonville, and Daytona Beach, Florida; Charlotte and ~~Raleigh,~~ North Carolina; Nashville, Memphis, and Oak Ridge, Tennessee; Houston and Austin, Texas; and Little Rock, Arkansas.

Mr. Wiley Branton

Dear Wiley:

Some random notes:

1. Telephone and air credit cards have been ordered for you and George.

2. In addition to the National Urban League, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference has told me that it is in the midst of preparing some more detailed plans. A representative of SNCC called me over the weekend and indicated that SNCC was going to attempt to draw up a detailed budget request. I replied that it would be well for them to talk with you before they got very far into this.

Somehow I have the feeling that there would be advantage to your giving SNCC and SCLC an early call and visit; these people need guidance.

3. At some time convenient for you and George, could one of you, or both, see Paul Christopher in Knoxville? I have several reasons for suggesting this. Paul is a regional AFL-CIO director; he has had considerable experience in voter registration; he has a great interest in this program; he is a member of our Executive Committee. (If possible I wish you could see him before the next Executive Committee Meeting which will be some time in early February - we'll let you know definitely when because you should attend.)

4. We are getting some letterheads designed and will send them on to you for your approval.

5. Please make a note when you are in New York to visit, if at all convenient, David Freeman at the Rockefeller Brothers Fund. David would like to meet you. This would be nothing more than a get acquainted call. RBF is not likely to invest any money in this project. Freeman is, however, a person widely consulted by others who may be interested. Moreover, if you have time in New York, I would be gratified if you could pay a similar call on Vernon Eagle at the New World Foundation.

6. Of rather more tangible importance, don't forget, when in Washington, to call Helen Hill Miller for an appointment. I hope to see her Wednesday myself.

7. Confirming our telephone conversation of Friday, it would be well for you to establish communication with Louie Martin.

Sincerely yours,

SO4 Counsel N.O.

While in New Orleans last week both Dan Thompson of Dillard, Chairman of the Negro Coordinating Council, and Harvey Kerns, Executive of the Urban League, spoke to me about possible assistance on voter registration. The Coordinating Council has just completed "their first phase" of a major voter registration effort in New Orleans. Some 200 plus voter registration schools were held throughout the city. Canvasses were taken for the most part by organizational membership such as churches, social clubs, etc., rather than by street addresses. The drive was under the direction of the Rev. Milton Upton, who was partly paid for his work. The drive had an office donated by the Longshoremen's Union, and one full-time secretary. Something in excess of $5,000 was donated for the effort by the 90-some organizations involved in the Coordinating Council. The money was expended in a drive from October through December last fall, aiming at registration for the recent mayoralty primary election.

According to Upton and Thompson, some 5,000 Negroes were added to the roles, although this was not a net gain. Around 4,000 Negroes had been removed from the roles in a recent purging of voting roles. They estimated that over 10,000 Negroes attempted to register during this period, but then more than half were turned away by a non-cooperative registrar. According to everything I could learn, this was an effective and truly coordinated effort, worthy of our attention and support. They plan to keep pushing on the effort, even though no imminent election looms as incentive. They feel sufficient momentum has been built up so that the community will continue to cooperate.

Dan Thompson states that the Coordinating Council needs approximately $6,000 in financial assistance from outside the city to make possible a full-time field man to work throughout the community in this effort. The Coordinating Council plans to raise $7,500 in the New Orleans community.

Harvey Kerns mentioned that he had seen the Urban League proposal concerning the Joint Voter Project. He commented that as the local representative of one of the major participating agencies, he would be happy to support the application of the Coordinating Council or to have the funds channelled through the Urban League to the Coordinating Council, so long as the League has sufficient representation on the voting committee of the Coordinating Council. He indicated he thought it probable that the local NAACP would similarly support the idea of channelling support to the Coordinating Council.

While in Virginia last week I talked with Dr. Waldo Scott of Newport News, Virginia, Chairman of the Peninsula Coordinating Committee, and with Lester Banks, the Executive Secretary of the Virginia NAACP.

Dr. Scott is known to me as an effective and able man. I thought you would be interested in the enclosed flyer from the Peninsula Committee. Like everyone else, he asked about possible assistance from your project. He stated that the NAACP was one of the sponsors of the Committee. I suggested he write you and also call the Committee to the attention of the NAACP. Lester Banks claims that the NAACP is all geared up for a major effort in the 4th Congressional District of Virginia, a strong South Side Byrd district, and that they wait only the launching of the Voter Education Project. I don't know whether this effort is covered in the NAACP memo on the project. I think that Banks heads the most effective NAACP organization in the South and one that will probably produce. The major problem here may be that the Virginia Christian Leadership Conference may also lay claim to leadership in Virginia.

I would suggest that at some point you confer with Johnny Brooks, Director of Voter Registration and based in Richmond. Perhaps you have already done so. I believe that the NAACP plans for the project were developed primarily by Brooks.

Enc.

The facets of our total needs in the community which can be effectively met by the Peninsula Coordinating Committee are many, and the benefits to be gained are tremendous.

Nothing worthwhile is cheap, and in this effort, we solicit financial help and cooperation from the community of which each of you are a part.

Newport News, Virginia

WHAT IT IS . . .

The Peninsula Coordinating Committee describes an organization formed in 1960-61 in the City of Newport News to fill what is felt to be a serious need confronting the Community.

There are at present many organizations such as lodges, fraternities, sororities, voter's leagues, professional organizations, civic and social clubs, etc. A great problem has been to coordinate their efforts for more effective work toward the goals of citizenship to which we aspire.

We realize there are many sincere and dedicated persons in the community — but entirely voluntary leadership has proven inadequate for the type of program needed. For that reason, a paid Executive Secretary has been employed to coordinate these efforts.

WHAT IT HAS DONE . . .

The Peninsula Coordinating Committee opened an office on July 5, 1961, where records and voter registration files have been set up and a Resource file is being assembled for the benefit of the various organizations in the community.

On August 5, 1961 the PCC launched it's first major project, "Operation Doorknock—#1"—a registration drive to increase the number of registered voters in the City of Newport News.

In November, "Operation Doorknock—#2" followed with concentration on payment of Poll Taxes and Registering. A total of over 250 volunteer workers have helped in both projects—over 400 voters were added to the Registration Books thru these two efforts which extended over a period of 4½ months in 1961. A permanent Precinct Organization has been established to function under the Voter Registration Committee.

On December 2, 1961, the PCC co-sponsored an Institute on Community Problems in conjunction with Virginia State College.

A club directory has been compiled and distributed. A business directory is on the way!

WHAT IT WILL DO . . .

I. Continue the drive to increase the voting strength in the community working on a year-round basis.

II. Work for the Improvement of the Economic Status of the Negro in the community, thru investigation of Government contracts by business and concerns on the Peninsula; thru selective purchasing to achieve many goals such as employment as salesmen, in clerical positions in city government; to increase pride in our own businesses with support that will reflect in expansion and a capacity to render greater service.

III. Work for the Improvement of the Social Status of the Negro in the community. This embraces the educational, health and cultural concepts. We have not, prior to the PCC, had a central organization with an office to which could be brought complaints and objections to the inequities to which we are often subjected.

Subject: Use of SRC restrooms by second floor offices

I have the impression that Mrs. Paschal may not be aware that no restroom facilities go with the office she occupies across the hall from the VEP. If this is so, it is likely that she will expect to use the SRC restroom, and I thought you might want to consider what may be involved in this before it is formally brought to your attention.

1. The women's restroom is now uncomfortably crowded at times, and the addition of Mrs. Paschal, her secretary, and visitors will make this considerably worse, not to mention the added confusion in the SRC office generally as these extra people run in and out of the office all day.

2. If the SRC restrooms are open to the use of all offices on the second floor except that of the Merry Way Employment Service, the only office on the floor not engaged in human relations work, this may seem to smack of discrimination in reverse.

What position you will want to take on this I don't know, but it seems to me that if you are going to let the Episcopal Society and the Georgia Council use the restrooms at SRC, it might be a good idea to send a memo to all the offices on the floor saying something to the effect that SRC offers its restroom facilities to the second floor offices, but because the restrooms are small and the number using them will be large, SRC must ask that only staff use the restrooms, and that they not be made available to visitors to the offices. (SRC visitors to be the exception, of course.) This is far from an ideal solution to the problem of congestion that is probably inevitable under the circumstances, but after much consideration of this from many angles, it's the best suggestion I can come up with.

In view of this situation, the Council would like all of its co-tenants on this floor to know that these restroom facilities are available to the above organizations and their staffs. In the original request to the Internal Revenue Service, dated December 14, 1961, it was stated:

> "The purpose of the Project is to enable the Council to promote and to study and evaluate methods for teaching and encouraging exercise of the right to register and vote in areas in the South which, from the Council's past research, are known to be comparatively lowest in registration and voting. The work will necessarily largely involve the Negro population."

This study or research project will be carried out by the Project. Grants of funds to organizations in the field of Voter Registration will be under the following conditions.

1. No program will be approved which does not provide that the program, its employees and agent will refrain from any partisan political propaganda or activity aimed at information legislation or supporting any political party or the campaign of any candidate for election to public office. (Page 2 IRS, 3-22-62)

2. Responsible organizations will be permitted to participate in the program when said organization is willing to submit in writing for approval by the Project a proposed program in keeping with the purpose of the Project.

3. Such organization must be able to show that it has a background or experience, knowledge and personnel adapted to carrying out such a program.

4. Such request must be accompanied by detailed budget on line-by-line basis. Said funds granted in light of the budgetary request will be held in a separate bank account from other funds of the organization, with all expenditures from said account supported by vouchers. Significant deviation from said budget will require project concent.

5. Semi-Annual detailed accounts, reports, expenditures of the budget supported by vouchers, will be required. In addition the applicant for grants agrees that project staff may at any time have the right to examine the pertinent accounting records dealing with the grant of the applicant.

6. Any applicant for grant agrees to provide the Project with the names of its key personnel and what their duties are and in what particular areas.

7. Project commitments will be on a yearly basis, when warranted. Grants in light of said commitment will be on a quarterly basis with it expressly understood that if an applicant fails to follow the fuide lines of the Project the remainder of said grant will be cancelled.

8. Applicant of grants, if from a particular geographical area, should include in the request for grant any knowledge or information that he may have as to other Voter Education Projects being carried on in the area, which they propose to operate, and the status of such project.

9. Applicants for grants should include in the request for grants certain basic statistical data which should include but not be limited to the population of the area in which they intend to work. The break-down of said population by age, sex, and race, and some indication of the concentration of certain population groups. When available, figures on registrations should be by race.

10. Said request should also express a willingness to cooperate with the project in the gathering of statistical data for the purpose of research. Said cooperation should be in the form of an undertaking on the part of the applicant to provide the Project with whatever forms or reports or data the Project may require from time to time of the progress of applicant's program.

11. Applicants for the funds must be able to give reasonable assurance to the Project that the activities carried on by the applicant as a result of the grant from the Project will be separate and apart from any other activities which the applicant may be carrying on at that time which are not exclusively charitable or educational so as to be exempt by the IRS.

Subject:

Here are some various things I have been meaning for some time to bring up with you. I decided the only way I could do so is to note them on paper. I will be glad to discuss any of them with you at any time you wish.

(1) You and I need to get together fairly soon to discuss the VEP budget.

(2) As you know, I have tended always to think that you should have two helpers. Perhaps when we really get rolling there will be a need for more, but I doubt that you will be able at any time to get by with less. I more than ever believe that you would do well to consider choosing one of your helpers to be a sort of combination research and field man. I think we need to be more clear than we are about the division of research responsibilities between your office and the Director of Research. Generally, I have always seen it this way: basic responsibility for SRC's research planning and subsequent publications should be over here carried on, however, with your close participation and advice; responsibility for carrying out SRC's research plans should be over here but again in intimate association with you; what we might call operations research, that is, the fact-finding needed for field programs, the assembly of statistics and other information needed for field programs, and the observation of programs should be your responsibility primarily and the Research Director should provide only advice and services.

(3) We should give a lot of thought soon to the possibility of VEP preparing literature that could be used by all of the agencies. I notice in the minutes of the meeting of April 17 that Henry Moon brought this up again. This would be another example of the usefulness of your having on your staff a person with research and publications skills.

(4) I would like to reiterate that George Barrett can operate under your direction as long as you feel that he is needed but that when you prefer he can be reassigned and taken off your budget. I say this neither to encourage you one way or the other, but merely to emphasize that you should feel completely free to decide his status as you think best in the interest of VEP. It is, of course, possible that we can use George on other assignments as well as and at the same time as VEP and this kind of flexibility would possibly be best all around. If we do this there should be some budgetary adjustment.

(5) It seems to me imperative that files be set up on each of the places where VEP has undertaken program. As per your letters of May 4 and, of course, including the earlier Atlanta and Durham commitments. We shall have to be in a position to have some documentation in our records of what was done and what was achieved in each of these places.

(6) In the above connection, I think one of the more interesting things which came out of last week's meeting was the willingness of some of the professors to select for us graduate students who could write up local situations. I don't think you would necessarily want to do an extensive report which would require this kind of added staff in each case, but I believe you might well consider the possibility in some few cases especially if the services of the graduate students could be obtained at a reasonable cost. I think we should approach the professors with the assumption that this is as much an opportunity for their students as it is a service to us.

(7) The Atlanta registration drive is now over. I wonder if we should not move promptly to write up a report on what has been achieved here.* Some of the newspaper coverage has indicated that there have been fairly substantial gains made. If this is true, we should not lose any time in writing our report of it; especially because it could be of probable value in fund-raising.

(8) Now that we have got the 90-day wonders off, VEP needs to be drawing long-run plans. I would define this to mean plans for field programs during the remainder of this year, plans for staff and organizational preparation -- both done with an eye on 1963 and 1964.

(9) You and I should now give first priority to preparing a memorandum for Harold Fleming indicating projects that cannot be financed with present funds at all or to the degree we would like.

*Perhaps George could do it?

From: LWDunbar

The Executive Committee meets May 30th and I would like to resume the practice which we formerly followed in sending to the Members reports of program activities. This both cuts down on the amount of oral reporting that must be done at the meeting and makes possible more thoughtful questions from committee Members.

May I please, therefore, have from each of you a short, concise statement of the activities of your programs since January 1, 1962? This should include activities completed, in progress, and definitely commited; please do not report on plans and ideas unless definitely decided.

One or two pages will be enough.

I shall need these reports by MAY 16th.

INTEROFFICE MEMO

Date May 17, 1962

To: LWD, BM, A. Spearman From: Paul Rilling

Subject: Field report on Charleston, S.C., Visit of May 14 - 16, 1962.

The Negro boycott of King Street merchants is now in its eighth week. The Rev. Ben Glover, Chairman of the local NAACP and of the boycott, estimates effectiveness at 50 to 60%. Other estimates range somewhat lower, but there seems little doubt that the boycott is hurting the merchants. This was confirmed by second hand reports from several white persons. The boycott is aimed only at King Street merchants, and will continue until the bulk of the merchants have agreed to go along with some changes in employment patterns. Around 8 stores have already made some adjustments, and approximately 3 or 4 others have promised to do so soon. As the stores come into line, pickets are withdrawn from those particular stores, but Negroes are still encouraged to stay off the entire street. ~~Boycotting~~ Picketing is carried on Friday and Saturday by approximately half and half teen-agers and adults. Flyers are printed every week and circulated at meetings and churches. The leadership of the Negro community seems to be fairly well united behind the effort, although there is at least some criticism of Glover's management and direction from a technical standpoint. Esau Jenkins, particularly, is critical of Glover, probably reflecting the competition for leadership between the NAACP and the Citizens Committee.

The major push in the Negro community seems to be on Merit Employment and Voter Registration; the NAACP is heading up the job push, the Citizens Committee the Voter effort. Prior to the boycott there were several months of effort concerning Federal employment and contract industries. Help was received from the President's Committee and Glover reports 76 Negroes employed in non-traditional occupations in these offices. The Citizens Committee continues program of voter education schools and Esau Jenkins donates four hours a day to the work of the office. Results of the voter drive are somewhat hard to come by, however. Jenkins is somewhat discouraged and feels that the major barrier is apathy. He reports that the registrars are reasonably good. Glover conceeds that the Citizens Committee is handling the voter education effort.

Jenkins is proud that he has been able to carry on without outside help. He feels that the NAACP should have "first chance" to assist program. This indicates that any voter funds probably should go through the NAACP to Charleston. Both groups would accept this and some or all the money would be channeled through the Citizens Committee.

Esau Jenkins emphasized that he is "not yet" affiliated with the SCLC, even though their recent publicity concerning King's tour identifies him as "SCLC's man in Charleston." He indicated he had been under heavy pressure from SCLC and had been offered money for voter work. He is a great admirer of King and recently brought him to Charleston, but is a little cautious about this kind of affiliation. Glover is strongly counseling him against ~~it~~ affiliation and states that he is "somewhat worried about" SCLC's method of operation. In case SCLC is claiming an operation in Charleston it should be noted that they have none at present, except to the extent that Mrs. Septima Clark is residing in Charleston and somewhat active in between assignments at the Dorchester Citizenship School.

~~Late~~ last fall a small interracial committee was formed. The white persons on it are primarily those referred to in Ben Muse's last report (Rabbi Padoll; Mrs. Thomas Tobias; de Rosset Meyers; Rev. Osborne, Unitarian). Most of the recognized Negro leaders were related to this group although Glover did not personally attend any of the meetings. The group was somewhat helpful in arranging for the employment of Negro bus~~-~~ drivers and then addressed itself to the task of persuading the Mayor to appoint an official body. They were in communication with us and others at that time. They tried to get Tom Waring and the Mayor to go along with them. Waring refused and the Mayor likewise. They then went to the Merchants Association and tried to set up some form of negotiation of the employment picture on King Street, where ~~patrons patrons~~ patronage is predominantly Negro. This failed. At this time the Committee, somewhat discouraged, disbanded and the white members agreed that the time had come for more direct action by the Negroes. The boycott was launched approximately one week later.

Like all situations that in Charleston is unique in some ways. The Negro leaders are unusually reasonable, moderate, and responsible. They evidence very little bitterness or hatred. Jenkins, particularly, is almost unbelievably patient and trustful of appeals to reason and good will. The ~~will~~ white powers are unyielding, but in a sophisticated and responsible manner. ~~they~~ The ~~pl~~ police force has been correct and fair, according to the Negro leaders, and has permitted the picketing. ~~they~~ There seems to be little violence potential in the situation. The local press, of course, completely omits any mention of current activities. The current effort seems to have attained some results on King Street, but none of the big establishments have as yet cooperated and there is certainly some doubt as to whether the boycott can be maintained until effective results are achieved. Several white persons with ~~s~~ whom I talked expressed the opinion that the general community was almost unaware of the effort and that the only ones really concerned were the merchants on King Street themselves.

There seems to be virtually no activity on the school front and no case pending. Five Negroes did try to register some time ago. They were not accepted by the board on various individual reasons. They went through the administrative appeals but did not go to court. Several white liberals expressed some irritation that they were not too well selected and could not pass individual evaluation. There seem to be no plans afoot for the coming fall. Hallinan, before coming to Atlanta, had announced desegregation of Catholic schools next fall. No one I spoke with seemed to know the status of this or what will happen.

There seem to be woefully few forces for support in the white community. The Chamber of Commerce will do nothing. The Ministerial Association likewise; the Ministerial Association is completely inactive on such matters, so are the United Churchwomen, the YWCA, etc.. There are the usual group of well meaning liberal and sympathetic whites, some of them fairly well placed. Even more than in most Deep South cities, they seem to be out of touch with each other and with the Negro community. My contacts were as follows: 1. The Rev. Ben J. Glover, minister, AME Emanuel Church, 110 Calhoun Street, office phone: Raymond 2-2561, residence: Raymond 2-6301. Glover is President of the Charleston branch, NAACP. He appears to be an extremely able, sharp, balanced individual and the key Negro leader in Charleston at the moment. He impressed me as knowing exactly what he is doing and his work indicates a good degree of planning and organization. He is a sick man, suffering from hernia difficulties. Just prior to the boycott he returned from John Hopkins Hospital, where they wanted to hospitalize him for a year. He indicated he was "too busy" and came home. He recently told his friends he was giving himself three hours a day therapy because he could not afford the fees for therapy at the nearby hospital. All of this information came from others.

2. Esau Jenkins, chairman of the Citizens Committee. Jenkins is well known in the Civil Rights field. He is also a successful businessman, operating a motel and restaurant for Negroes in Charleston and several other restaurants on St. John's Island. He is from the Islands and has the difficult Island accent. He is a man of very little formal training, and this is somewhat evident in his manner of talk. He is a man of great heart and total commitment, surprisingly trusting and optimistic. He sees his role and that of the Citizens Committee as assuming greater importance than does Glover. The nearest thing he has to an office is the Registration Information Center at 41 Cannon Street, Telephone Number: Raymond 3-2908. His business is the J & T Cafe and Motel, Telephone Number: Raymond 2-9621.

3. Rabbi Burton Padoll, leader of the Reform Jewish Congregation, address of study: 90 Hazel Street; Office: Raymond 3-1090; Residence: 723-1086. Padoll is from Boston and has been in Charleston about one year. He worked hard on the interracial committee and has spoken on racial issues to his congregation.

He has received more criticism than support from within the congregation. He is currently somewhat discouraged and disillusioned. He feels that he has little influence anywhere, and is a little touchy that Negro leaders have not kept him closely informed since the boycott began. A young man, late thirties, he seems to be able and committed, somewhat impatient and idealistic.

4. Mrs Thomas Tobias (Rowena). Mrs. Tobias operates a public relations-advertising business at 121 Church Street, telephone number: Raymond 2-4438; Residence: Raymond 3-2414. Mrs. Tobias is Jewish, old Charleston, well placed in the business life of the city. She is fortish, vivacious, energetic, balanced, optimistic. Has well placed contacts throughout the white community and makes no secret of her views.

5. Herbert U. Fielding. Mr. Fielding is chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Negro PTA. He is a businessman, fairly affluent, operates a funeral home, etc. Considered, although fairly young, representative of the more conservative school of the Negro leadership, seeking accommodation, etc.. He is, however, working with the Citizens Committee on the Voter effort. He is quite defensive about a recent PTA project which resulted in the construction of a new Negro school because of over-crowding. Emphasizes that this was not because the PTA was opposed to desegregation, but...etc.

6. The Rev. William Kirkland, Rector of St. John's Episcopal Church in suburban Oakland, study telephone: Snow 6-6231, home: 766-3466. Kirkland is fortyish, quiet, extremely concerned, feels somewhat helpless. He is well thought of by Jenkins and Glover, seems not to know most of the other white liberals. Has been in Charleston less than a year. Indicates he would just as soon get out because of the repressive atmosphere which cuts across all fields. Was quite eager to talk with me. Suggested that some sort of one or two day workshop be organized quietly to pull together white and Negro leadership for some mutual planning and discussion with the help of outside consultants. I gave him encouragement on this. He will check it out with others. Was formerly in Milledgeville, Georgia, where he was involved with the Georgia Council and was smeared and isolated, he says, because of public identification with Guy Wells. Is anxious to make a greater contribution in Charleston if he could but see how.

NOTE TO LWD, AND FOR OFFICE USE ONLY:

The white liberals are generally not related to the South Carolina Council and not familiar with Alice Spearman. Several of them know of her somewhat vaguely. Mrs. Tobias is a member of SCCHR but does not take it very seriously. Alice is well and favorably known to all of the Negro leaders, who smile at her but respect and appreciate her. SCCHR is not strong or effective in the Charleston area, which was a major reason for my visit.

Subject: Telephone conversation with Bob Thompson, Atl. Urban League

Bob Thompson called this morning to discuss a program Jim Forman had brought to him. Why Forman had gone to Bob is not clear.

Forman wanted to go to Little Rock with a group of students to work on the problem arising from the Citizen's Council sending Negroes North. It also was not clear to me what unique service these students could offer that could not be offered by those already in Little Rock.

SRC came into the picture Because Forman and Thompson had decided that the ideal way to finance this program would be for the VEP to grant money to the students to do registration work. They would work "50 - 75% of their time on voter registration and the rest on the problem."

Forman will talk with Branton about this tomorrow (Friday).

For the record, I think we should note this rather disturbing interpretation of the Voter Project, the use of its funds, and the method by which SNCC, in this instance, chose an area for registration work.

RE: South Carolina Project

I met with Ira Kaye and his associates on Saturday, July 7, in Sumpter, South Carolina. Present were Ernest A. Finney, Jr., who is responsible for Lee, Clarendon and Williamsburg Counties; Newton Pough, North Boulevard Street, Orangeburg, who is responsible for Calhoun, Bamberg and Barnwell Counties; and Charles E. Washington, Jr., and Alfonso Pendergrass from Beaufort (the latter is Washington's partner and is participating in the project), who are responsible for Jasper, Hampton and Allendale Counties.

We discussed the project at some length, and I get the impression that all of Kaye's associates understand that the purpose of the project is to determine any relationship which may exist between Negro political participation and the manner in which Federal farm programs are administered in the nine counties and in South Carolina as a whole. We worked up a series of questions which will be administered by the attorneys to twenty farmers in each of the nine counties. The farmers to be interviewed will be selected by each attorney, using as a criterion of selection the information he is able to derive about the farmers of each county. Selection of respondents will be designed to maximize information rather than to randomize a sample. The reason for this is that we could not possibly interview a sufficient number of farmers in each county to make a random selection at all meaningful statistically. Thus, it appears advisable to point the interview program toward getting interviews from those farmers who are more likely to be able to give us the information we want.

~~Miscell~~
1-VEP Inter-office memos (miscell.)

Kaye will be out of town for the next two weeks, but the lawyers feel that they should be able to complete the interview program during his absence and that all of the data should be in Kaye's office by August 1. We should be able to expect a final report on the project from Kaye, along with all of the project data, shortly after August 1.

One of the lawyers, Charles Washington, says that he will try using a tape recorder for his interviews. If he succeeds, we may want to think about this mode of interviewing for any further projects of this kind. All of the attorneys agree that the best mode of reporting on the interviews will be a narrative summation of the interview content derived by reconstruction of the interview from notes taken during it. At the completion of the project then, we should have 180 such narrative reports.

The lawyers have asked for a $100 advance each as soon as possible. If I understand correctly Moss's letter to Kaye of May 22, such an advance would be within the terms of the original agreement.

So that I can finally throw away my pencilled notes on our September meeting in Washington, I would like to record a couple of items which came out of that conference. I know that you have considered them and I believe you have decided not to act on them, for justified reasons. I suspect, however, we may hear of them again and should, therefore, be prepared to speak to them.

1) The proposal that we coordinate an audience with the President to emphasize the terroristic conditions in some of the Black Belt.

2) Fleming's proposal for widespread and advance publicity for a voting campaign in a hard core county.

3) This was not exactly a suggestion but you will recall John Brooks statement that what he needed was money for additional field personnel.

Dear Vernon:

Early last September, as you may recall, a home was shot into out in Sunflower County, Mississippi and two girls staying there were badly shot up. Ironically, neither of the girls had been participants in the voting registration which was the cause of the shooting, but were merely stopping over as guests on their way to start back in college at Jackson. They have missed a term as a result. The girls now are out of the hospitals and their bills, we are told, are about $300. We have asked to see itemization and we are also hopeful that some current efforts will yield help to their families in paying the bills. But it this doesn't prove to be the case, or if the full amount cannot be obtained, would you approve of Contingency money being given for this purpose; it would, of course, have to go to some organization in Mississippi which we will select.

Best wishes.

On November 9, 1962, we furnished the Executive Director of each of the state councils with a copy of a schedule of VEP Participating Programs, as of November 1, and solicited their cooperation for all VEP programs within their respective states. Heslip Lee was furnished this information. It is our intention to up-date this schedule and distribute it in the same way from time to time.

We are enclosing a copy of a letter to Heslip Lee as a result of your memmarandum of January 21.

Dear Mr. Lee:

Paul Anthony has passed on to us your request for current information on VEP programs in Virginia. Subsequent to the schedule of VEP programs which we mailed you on November 9, 1962, we made a small grant to the Northern Virginia All Citizens Committee, 307 W. Fairfax St., Falls Church, Virginia. Dr. Edwin B. Henderson is Co-Chairman. This group is to carry on limited voter registration activities in the following counties:

Alexandria	Prince William
Arlington	Warren
Fairfax	Clark
Loudon	Fauquier

We have under consideration at this time requests from the Peninsula Coordinating Committee (Newport News) and the Voter Registration Project of Norfolk.

It is our intention to update the schedule of participating programs from time to time and you will receive such schedules as we do.

Very truly yours,

Representatives of Aetna Life Insurance have been trying very hard to persuade us to adopt their hospital and medical plan instead of Blue Cross-Blue Shield. They have asked for an opportunity to talk with you, and because Aetna has been most cooperative with us recently in regard to straightening out some problems in our group life policy, we have agreed to call a staff meeting at 3:30 p.m., FRIDAY, JUNE 7, at which time Aetna representatives will be here. The situation is this.

SRC and VEP now pay the entire cost of Blue Cross-Blue Shield. I do not think that we can, at this time, add anything substantial to this cost.

The Aetna program would cost more. On the other hand, there are substantially better benefits. I have not studied the matter closely, but it seems to me, on the basis of such study as I have made, that the additional benefits are worthwhile, and fairly cheap.

The only basis on which we can, at this time, adopt the Aetna program would be for employees to contribute the difference in the cost. This is entirely up to you, and I don't even have a recommendation.

You will decide (a) how the question will be decided. That is, whether ~~shall~~ by majority or unanimous vote or what; and then, (b) you will decide whether you want to make the change.

Subject: A Critical Examination of VEP

Registration for voting in the Negro community is running a poor second to many other programs of less significance, all of which appear to be motivated by a deep-felt need for personal recognition. This is not a conclusion that one finds pleasure or ease in articulating, nor is it a conclusion that is profound, novel, or new. It is precisely the same problem that manifested itself at other periods in history by the buying of gold teeth with money that should have been spent on food, or the buying of old church pianos when no one in the family could play. This quest for recognition has reflected itself sometimes in the decision to buy an expensive automobile or join social clubs.

This kind of thing is now reflecting itself in the degree of support that a demonstration for public accommodations can command as compared with a program to obtain jobs. Sit any Negro down and ask him, "Is it more important to be able to spend a dime than it is to be able to earn one?" and he will answer with an unequivocol, "No". And yet, we hear so much about public accommodations. I suggest that this movement has spread from city to city much like a fad. Can this be so? Is there greater interest in public accommodations than in jobs - the right to vote? The answer to this question is, to a degree, to be found somewhere in the quest for recognition.

Among the cruelest things that has happened to the Negro people in America has been to inflict him with a kind of illness that has caused him to be constantly torn between a quest for personal recognition and a quest for things fundamental.

Understanding and appreciating this problem in its fullness would require professional training in psychology. However, we do note that most of the people that we have worked with seem to be very much involved in a quest for personal recognition. It is this very thing, we have concluded, that is responsible for Robert Adams', up at Huntsville, refusal to follow what has proven to be a successful method of conducting a drive. It is also responsible for Mr. Leflore's refusal to throw his influence in the program that is being planned for Mobile. To a degree, it figures into the conflicts that we see developing between organizations.

It would seem to me that we of the VEP staff have the task of deciding whether we will present voter registration on its own merits, or whether we will present it in a way as to afford honor and recognition to those that become involved. If we decide to present it on its own merit and worth, we will surely miss many individuals that we could involve. If we decided to present it as a program in which individuals can obtain recognition and honor, then we will surely be strengthening a value system that I rather suspect that we all reject. A decision in this regard is needed. I don't think it has to be a totally black or white one. But we must decide where the emphasis will be placed.

I came back to the office from the last two field trips with the conviction that if large numbers of registered voters is what we want, then we need to find ways of satisfying the craving for personal recognition.

If large numbers is what we want, then I propose:

1. That we start now to establish the impression that VEP is the only organization capable of passing judgment as to who is doing real work in voter registration.

2. That we start, as soon as possible, the publishing of a news letter in which we can give recognition to those that are working, using pictures wherever possible.

3. That we establish a system whereby we can hand out certificates and trophies for those that are willing to work in voter registration.

As field director, I need the reaction of the staff to this memo.

MEMORANDUM

To: Wiley A. Branton

From: Jack Minnis

Blackwell and I have developed a formula for establishing county by county quotas for registration programs to be conducted during the coming year. Our primary concern has been the request made by Mr. Reese during his recent visit here. It is our understanding that Mr. Reese is concerned to produce the greatest possible number of new Negro registered voters at the least possible expense, and without the creation of public disturbances which might further embarrass the administration. (This was the substance of Mr. Reese's remarks to us during his visit.)

We do not think that the utility of the program we have outlined is necessarily restricted to any participation in VEP by Mr. Reese and the Democratic National Committee. What we have attempted to do is estimate the number of new registered voters which we may reasonably anticipate as a result of VEP operations during the coming year, assuming that this program is adopted by VEP.

We have selected in all the southern states (except Texas and Arkansas), those counties in which Negroes of voting age represent 30% or less of the total voting age population, in which the total number of unregistered Negroes of voting age is 1000 or greater, and in which 50% or less of the Negroes of voting age are registered. We reason that a concentration of 30% or less of voting age Negroes is a handy index for measuring the likelihood of die-hard resistance to Negro registration. The 30% figure is more or less arbitrary and represents no more than an informed guess. We feel we should concentrate our meager resources where the pool of unregistered's is largest - hence the 1000 minimum. We used the 50% breaking point to exclude areas where the cream may have already been skimmed. In the states of Georgia and Tennessee, there are a number of counties for which we do not have Negro registration figures and therefore, for which we have been unable to use all three criteria. Once the counties were selected according to these criteria, we then set quotas of 20% of the unregistered Negroes of voting age. This percentage was, like the other percentage, just an informed guess. Then we assigned quotas equal to 10% of the Negro voting age population.

We think the next step in establishing a program for the coming year should be a field trip by Blackwell into each of the states in order that he may personally judge whether the quota for each county is a realistic one in the light of conditions which will be peculiar to the county, and which are not taken into account by our selection formula. Too, such a field trip is required in order that contact may be made with persons in the county who will be willing to undertake registration activities, and with whom we are not presently in contact through a participating agency. When this field inquiry is completed, (and we see no reason why it cannot be begun immediately on a state by state basis beginning with South Carolina), we think we will be in a position to recommend a series of what we have called "Plan B" programs (see our memo of March 10, 1963), and also make recommendations with respect to the programs which are presently underway, and which should be initiated under "Plan A".

We are attaching quota sheets for each of the states except Texas and Arkansas. Because of the peculiar nature of registration in these two states, computation of quota is a bit more complicated, and will require another few days. It should be emphasized that these quotas are tentative, and some of them will undoubtably have to be altered as a result of the field inquiry. The total quotae in the states excluding Texas and Arkansas comes to 287,119. We expect that the tentative quota including the other two states will reach 350 to 400,000. After the state by state qeeding-out process is completed, anticipation for the year should be in the neighborhood of 300,000.

We are giving you this memo now so that you may use it if you feel it advisable to correspond with Mr. Reese immediately. You will recall that we told Mr. Reese we would have this information for him by the end of last week. We felt that perhaps you would not want to delay any further correspondence with him.

Dear Mr. Harris:

I believe the material Professor Morroe Berger had in mind, and which you refer to in your letter of July 3, was some field reports received from workers of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee engaged in voter registration activities in southwest Georgia and Mississippi. This is, as I recall, what we showed Berger when he was here.

These particular field reports are indeed intriguing, but they are a part of an accumulation of reports on the progress of our Voter Education Project. The Project, which began Spring a year ago, will run through the Fall of 1964. It is a large effort to define, through practice, the most effective methods of increasing Negro registration in various areas of the South. When the field work of the Project is completed, we do intend to prepare a book about it, which will draw on and, I suppose, include some of the reports which Berger saw.

We have not even begun to form publication plans, but if such a book would seem of interest to you, we would be pleased to discuss it further.

Sincerely yours,

Re: "If We Must Die" by Junius Edwards

Wiley, this is a brief novel of some 130 pages (reading time about 2½ to 3 hours), which dramatizes the voter registration situation in the hard-core resistance areas in the South today. It is, I think, a first-rate piece of work - both from the point of view of literary quality, and from the point of view of historical accuracy.

In the book, Will Harris is a southern Negro who has just returned from the Korean war, and to whom, largely through the influence of his mother and his war experience, the right to vote symbolizes everything that American citizenship is supposed to mean, and everything he had supposed he was fighting for.

By detailing these specifics of Will Harris' attempt to register and the bitter consequences which follow, rather than by amassing a catalog of abuses, Edwards portrays very movingly and within brief compass, the tragic political fraud that passes for Democracy in many parts of the South.

The book is of importance to VEP, I think, for two reasons. First of all, its subject matter is exclusively voter registration and the southern Negro. Therefore, I think we are particularly competent to make some kind of public comment upon the book, and also particularly responsible for making such comment. I think anything we can do to promote the widespread distribution of this book would be appropriate to our objective, because the book depicts with great clarity, one of the principal problem areas of voter registration in the South.

Secondly, if the American people are going to act through their congressional representation intelligently upon the civil rights legislation, they must have such information as is contained in this book.

I have discussed the book with Blackwell, although he has not yet had an opportunity to read it, and he suggests that if the book is as I have said it is, it could well serve the purpose for the 1960's which Harriet Beecher Stowe's writings served during the Abolitionist period.

If, after reading the book, you agree with what I have said about it, I would like to suggest that the following action might be appropriate for VEP:

1. A letter by you, either to the publisher or in the form of a press release, commending the book to the public as an accurate portrayal of conditions in many parts of the South. I have no doubt that the publisher would be eager to take up such comments for use on the dust jacket.
2. You could suggest to the participating agencies that they undertake to promote the widespread distribution of the book throughout the country.
3. Organizations other than participating agencies such as fraternities, professional associations, et cetera, probably would respond to any suggestions you might make about the desirability of calling the book to the attention of their membership.
4. The National Student Association, the American Civil Liberties Union, and possibly such outfits as the League of Women Voters, would probably respond similarly to a suggestion from you.
5. I think you could appropriately urge SRC to activate all of its facilities for distribution of the book.
6. Perhaps some of your friends in COPE could be induced to use the facialities of the AFL-CIO to call the attention of Labor movement to the book.

I would suggest that if we are going to take any such action as recommended here, we incur as little delay as possible in doing so.

Subject: New Employees for the Voter Education Project

In light of your suggestion of some few days ago, I have checked out the persons among my acquaintances that I feel would have a contribution to make to the program of the Voter Education Project. In this regard, I would like to recommend Mr. Charles Ray, Jr., who is known to me as a person capable of serving the Voter Education Project in some two or three capacities.

I have known Mr. Ray for several years as a student of mine, and later as a professional educator in the Huntsville, Alabama, community. I would estimate that Mr. Ray is about 28 or 30 years old. He was a better-than-average student at the Alabama A. & M. College, with ability to be an excellent student. I have had the opportunity to observe Mr. Ray in the capacity of a teacher, and as an assistant director in a local funeral home. In both regards, I can say that he has acquitted himself to be a person of mature judgment, sound and sober values.

I can testify of my own knowledge to the fact that he makes an excellent presentation of himself, and that he meets people easily, and that he is reasonably effective as a platform speaker. If we should, at some future time, undertake the political climate creation idea that we have talked about, I am sure he could handle such duties effectively. As a former clerk in the military, I am certain that he could handle voluminous correspondence. He types, and also has the skill necessary to oeprate duplicating machines.

Mr. Ray has been active in most of the social action projects of the Huntsville community, and was chosen state president of the now defunct Alabama Student Union, an organization that was put together by college students to do work in registration and voting among Negroes in the year 1959.

I talked with Mr. Ray by phone, and he indicated that he would be willing to consider a job with the VEP for a salary of $5500 or better, per year. I explained to him that there was no certainty that the VEP would be able to give him a contract that would extend beyond one year. I take pleasure in recommending Mr. Ray, feeling certain that he will serve well any job that he accepts.

MEMORANDUM

To: Wiley A. Branton

From: Randolph T. Blackwell

Subject: "A Proposed Plan of Operation"

In the month of February, it was proposed that VEP recognize and promote a program that would consider two types of projects. For want of better names, these projects were to be called "Plan A" projects, and "Plan B" projects.

"Plan A" projects were to be the projects that the VEP would make financial grants to; "Plan B" projects were to be those that were to be encouraged and supported by the giving of advice and registration material.

At the time of this proposal, it was theorized that:

1) A survey of the South would reveal that there is some kind of registration organization in just about every community that could be fitted into our description of "Plan B" projects.

2) That these small organizations can be encouraged to do registration work if VEP would merely express an interest in what they are doing - cause them to feel that they are a part of a big south-wide movement - keep them informed as to what is happening, and advise them as to how they might improve on what they are doing.

3) That these "Plan B" projects would require little in the way of finance, because the program would be administered largely through the mail by one person out of Atlanta.

This theoretical framework is affirmed by almost every field trip, the most recent example being Oconee and Union counties, South Carolina. (See "Field Report to Oconee and Union Counties, South Carolina" dated August 8, 1963).

It would appear that "Plan B" is a desirable way to get the necessary activity going on all over the state, at the same time that it is necessary to obtain large numbers of Negro people registered in the face of the one day per month limit so common in many South Carolina counties.

Promotion of "Plan B" becomes even more important when we examine critically the program of CORE as it operates in the V and VI congressional districts in South Carolina. As best as I have been able to determine, CORE in South Carolina consists of only two men, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Brown. Both of these individuals are sincere and work hard, but they cannot be expected to do the job desired. No two men can - especially if they are ineffective at involving local people of the community in which they are working.

Therefore, I propose that VEP hire immediately, a man to conduct the "Plan B" program. He would have as his responsibilities:

1) Assembling and putting in a usable fashion, a leadership list for the entire area in which VEP operates.

2) Establishing contact with the persons on this list.

3) Searching out information of his contacts where registration work is being done that VEP is not aware of.

4) Handling the distribution of the VEP newsletter.

5) Getting started, as soon as possible, programs that would create a climate favorable to registration in each state (in much the same way the Billy Sunday, Billy Graham used mass psychology).

I recommend:

1) That the "Plan B" program be started at once.

2) That Mr. Charles Ray of Huntsville, Alabama, be hired for this job.

3) That a working budget be assigned so as to afford some freedom in the conduct of this program.

I have made a preliminary inquiry into the availability of Mr. Ray. (See memo "New Employess for the VEP" dated August 6, 1963), and will proceed to try to arrange an interview between Mr. Ray and the project director within the next five days unless advised otherwise.

Field investigation and other factors dictate the desirability of pursuing this course.

Subject: Resolving Research Problems

Les, this is the one-page memo involving my proposals for resolving what I consider to be our research problems.

As I indicated to you in my last research memo, and in our conversation the other day, I think the time has long since passed when we can continue reasonably to expect the kind of reporting from the agencies which will develop data which would support a respectable study of VEP.

I am therefore recommending that we hire one additional person whose primary duties would be field observation and reporting. You will recall that you suggested that one research absolute should be a description of the community and its problems at the time the project gets underway, along with a rationalization of the problem-solving facility of the techniques to be used in the project. You will also recall that I agreed at the time that this was a necessity. I do not think that this kind of thing can be done from the office here in Atlanta. I think it requires some on-the-spot observation, interviewing, et cetera.

In addition to performing this service, the individual would really spend the bulk of his time - at least in the beginning - in providing us with on-the-spot research reports from each and every project which we are supporting. I think the great burden of this kind of reporting could be completed within 90 days after the individual began. And then, he could do such field reporting and observation as was necessary, as well as spend some of his time in the office helping to distill from the agency reports, such information as is of immediate use to VEP.

I should imagine that an individual with the skills we would require would expect to receive somewhere in the neighborhood of $6000.

Does this make any sense?

Subject: "If We Must Die" by Junius Edwards

Wiley, in connection with this book, I would suggest, first of all, a letter from you to Louise Thomas, Director of Public Relations at Doubleday, 575 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York, saying something like the following:

> All too frequently, fiction which attempts to serve the purpose of social protest can be comfortably dismissed with the argument that it is, after all, fiction, and does not necessarily conform to the situation which actually exists. I think the American people need to know that such an argument is wholly invalid with respect to Mr. Edwards' work. Those who read it - and I think it extremely important that it receives the widest public attention - will doubtless be uncomfortable at the conflict between the conditions which the book presents on one hand, and the kind of society which we should all like to think America is on the other. If such discomfort cannot be alleviated by rationalizing that the book is merely fiction, then perhaps the American people will be more inclined to take the action which is necessary to remedy the conditions.
> For more than a year, our organization has been granting funds for the support of registration drives among Negroes in the South. Since our primary purpose is that of research, we have taken the trouble to assemble a large body of data concerning the conditions with respect to Negro registration throughout the South. The story which Mr. Edwards presents in "If We Must Die" could have been taken, almost in its entirety, from any one of dozens of files in our office. I say this to point out that while technically Mr. Edwards' book is a work of fiction, as a matter of fact, it is an accurate description of conditions which exist with respect to registration and voting for Negroes in many parts of the southern United States as of today.
> If you think any part of this letter would be of use to you in increasing the distribution of Mr. Edwards' book, please feel free to quote it at your discretion.

Now in addition to this, Wiley, I would suggest that a note from you to the appropriate persons in the civil rights agencies might get them to use their facilities to call the book to the attention of those whom they can communicate with and influence. I would also suggest a similar note to the appropriate functionary in your own fraternity and other fraternities and sororities; to the National Student Association, the League of Women Voters, and if you think appropriate, the American Civil Liberties Union, along with the appropriate functionary in the AFL-CIO.

If you do not have time to undertake this, just scrawl a note across the face of the memorandum, if you want, and I will draft the correspondence and forward it to you in New York for your approval and signature.

I talked today by telephone to Mrs. Holmes in the office of the registrar of voters in Birmingham. She is the chief clerk in that office. She said that from April 1 to the present date, there have been about 4,000 new registrations in Jefferson County. She said that she was unable to estimate the number of Negroes in this 4,000.

I had called Mrs. Holmes because Andy Young had asked me to see if I could straighten out the mix-up about how many persons have been registered in Birmingham, and I felt that it was important to do so in the light of Mrs. Johnson's letter of August 17.

Andy called me today on another matter from Dorchester, and since I had been concerned about the content of Mrs. Johnson's letter, with respect to the relationship with the young people who had been working in voter registration, I asked him his opinion of the breach between Mrs. Johnson's group and the young people. He said that he had known of one instance in which an SCLC bus was used on a weekend bit of skylarking, by the youngsters, and he had been aware that many of the young people accustomed to finding a certain amount of recreation in the bottle. It was his feeling that persons could not reasonably expect such youngsters to become overnight converts to middle-class respectability, and that if they proved to be effective workers in voter registration, it was worth the trouble to try to get along with them, and see to it that their pleasure did not interfere with their business.

He said that on one occasion, the youngsters went to the ASCARV office to get some materials from Mrs. Johnson, and she severely limited the number of hand bills which she would give them to distribute. Andy did not comment on who he may have thought was in the right and who was in the wrong in this conflict, but he seemed to feel that the conflict itself was probably inevitable. He and I had more or less concurred in this view at the time we discussed it during my last visit to Birmingham.

In view of the proposal contained in Mrs. Johnson's letter of August 17, I asked Andy whether he thought the program using the youngsters could be re-activated in Birmingham, and would be likely to be as effective as it has appeared to be in the past. I recalled that SCLC was running the program with the youngsters for a cost of a little over $1,000 a month, whereas Mrs. Johnson's proposal involved something over $3,000 a month.

Andy said that since some of the young people would be going back to school, and would probably be fully occupied with carricular and other school activities, he felt it probably would be inadvisable to try to re-activate the young people's program at this time. He suggested that the ASCARV people be given an opportunity to see what they could do now. He said that he was thinking of taking the young people with whom he had worked that were not going back to school and using them in the joint SCLC-CORE program which is in the proposal stage for Louisiana.

As you will recall from my report of my last visit to Birmingham, the day or so that I spent there, left no question in my mind about the effectiveness of the program that the young people were running at that time. As I recall, no one with whom I discussed that project felt that the youngsters might be suffering from an over-developed sense of social propriety. Nevertheless, with either Andy or Jim Bevel, or Dorothy Cotton there to smooth out some of the roughes spots, and to act as a kind of liason with the more respectable adult registration people, an effective program was possible.

Andy says he thinks that he will try tp get some of the same young people down to Dorchester for a week or so this coming January, and that then, SCLC might want to run a project in Birmingham using them. If this takes place, I would strongly suggest that we remember this difficulty in considering the possibility of coordinating such a program with existing programs which may be in effect in Birmingham at that time.

MEMORANDUM Septemb er 11, 1963

TO: RTB
FROM: WAB
RE: August 27 memorandum on South Carolina

I am particularly pleased about the valuable information and the manner of presentation of your recent field reports from South Carolina.

In other South Carolina reports you have recommended that we reserve a certain amount of money for a particular area and notify the people in that area of our action and inform them that the money is available whenever they can come up with a sound program. I am opposed to this policy as I would rather encourage people to come up with a sound program for presentation to us before we make any commitmenet whatsoever, including the encumbrance of funds.

In your membrandum of September 3 you suggested that we try to interest SECC or some other organization in working with CORE in the 5th and 6th Congressional Districts of South Carolina. I would be opposed to this suggestion unless you first discuss this with the CORE people and make sure that this is something which they could work out.

Replying specifically to your six recommendations contained in your Augusy 27 memo, my answers are as follows:

1) VEP has already assisted the expansion of the Citizenship Classes in Charleston and Berkely County by paying for six citizenship schools for a period of 3 months.

2) The idea of the proposed leadership meeting at Charleston on September 21 is hereby approved.

3) The $300 budget to cover the cost of this meeting is hereby approved. In view of the fact that this meeting will be conducted away from Atlanta you probably will have to take some cash with you and prepare vouchers in support of the cash expenditures. Wherever possible, we would like for payment to be made by check. Vernon Jordan is hereby authorized to approve payment of this budget if I am not available.

1- Interoffice memos

4) I have no objection to a change in the 30% formula previously adopted and you and Jack Minnis should discuss a new formula for that state.

5) The only grant which we are likely to make in South Carolina prior to September 21 would be in Clarendon county but that grant will not be made without prior consultation with you.

6) The working formula of $1.00 per new registered voter is approved as a basic formula, but I would remind you of our staff conference yesterday morning when I stated that this formula should never be made known outside of VEP. You should always inquire first as to how many new voters an organization thinks it can get registered and the formula is purely for your own information in helping an agency to prepare a budget for final VEP consideration.

MEMORANDUM

September 25, 1963

TO: RTB
FROM: WAB
RE: 1st Congressional District Meeting, Charleston, South Carolina September 21, 1963

I have read your memorandum of September 23 regarding the First Congressional District organizational meeting and am pleased to know that you regard it as a success. I am unable to determine whether you envision a district-wide VEP program such as we have in the Second District or not. If so, when is the best time for the program to start and what kind of budget will it require? How would the existing programs in that district be involved?

I note that you recommend that a similar district meeting be conducted in the 3rd and 4th Congressional Districts. It would seem to me that such a meeting ought to be called first in either the 5th or 6th Congressional District so as to see what we can do to boost the CORE effort which we have been supporting so long. What do you think?

I am concerned about the matter involving your decision to have Janet Shortt attend this conference in Charleston. No such request was ever communicated to me and it is my understanding that the request was not made of Vernon Jordan until late Friday afternoon. Vernon made a policy decision that VEP would not approve her trip under the circumstances. It would seem to me that this would have ended the matter but apparently it did not. When you told me late Friday night that Janet was flying up to Charleston I told you then that I thought this was an unnecessary expense as you should have been able to get someone there in Charleston to take care of all of the secretarial duties which you wanted Janet to handle, particularly since we are supporting the Charleston County project. I thought after you remained in Washington until Thursday that you would have gone on down and checked our long overdue Norfolk area projects and come on back by way of Charleston without having to come to Atlanta and turn around and go back to Charleston.

I assume that Janet knew that Vernon had denied your request that she be allowed to go to Charleston and, therefore, it seems to me a matter of poor judgement on her part to proceed to Charleston without check further with Vernon or me even though you had agreed to pay her expenses. What I am concerned about here is the matter of policy decisions and support of those decisions by everyone on the staff.

Youth Shot By City Policeman

"Lord, I hate to tell you, but Ronnie just got shot."

This is how Mrs. Annie Lowery heard from Mrs. Daisey Campbell, 118 Bertrand St., that her teenage son, Ronnie Lowery, had just been shot by a city policeman.

The shooting climaxed three hours of sporatic fighting between 12 Negro youths and 20 to 30 white boys.

Ronnie Lowery, 16, of 119 Bertrand, explained the chain of events in this way:

"I was on my way to the football game at East High when I met about six of my friends running. They told me that some white boys had jumped on them with sticks, chains, and bricks. I asked them why, and they told me that they didn't know."

Gerald Bluford, 15, of 1700 McCalla, in a later interview, said that he and five other boys had gone over to watch East play. "We usually stand up on the hill and watch the game from there," Buford explained. "We have been doing this for years and never had any trouble. The white boys stand up there and watch Austin's games and we never say anything to them."

Buford said that four or five white boys came down out of a tree and said something to him and his friends. One of the boys picked up a stick while the others called some of their friends

Police Refuse Crusader Press Card

By Sheila Michaels

"Well, I won't issue a card to any paper that's continually on the police department," said Chief Harris when he was approached for a press card by a Crusader editor, on Monday, September 23.

When I called the department, I was told Chief Harris issued the cards. Our conversation follows.

I gave my name and asked Chief Harris if he issued the press cards. He said he did, and which paper did I work for? When he heard "Knoxville Crusader," he replied, abruptly:

"Well, no ma'am!"

"Why not?"

"Just, no, ma'am. I don't know who you are."

"Well, shall I send you a copy of the paper, and then you can see . . ."

He interrupted and said that he had seen a copy already, and asked where I was from. I asked, "Why?", and he repeated his question. I answered that I lived in Knoxville, now. He cut in to repeat his question.

I'm a native of the mid-South, but felt had had it been Nairobi or Stockholm or Harlem it would still have no bearing on my claim to a press card.

I asked "Well, what does it matter?"

AUSTIN HIGH INADEQUATE

Too Many Pupils Too Few Teachers Too Little Space

By SHEILA MICHAELS

A teacher at Austin High has described the curriculum as offering arts and crafts instead of vocational training, and frills instead of remedial courses. About 30% of our students go on to college, the rest go to menial labor or domestic work or unemployment. The vocational courses Austin offers won't help them get jobs around here, and if they take the vocational curriculum they don't get enough academic courses to help them pass job examinations; so they don't have much to offer anyone."

Austin suffers from having too many pupils, too few teachers, not enough space or classrooms, a shortage of textbooks, outdated vocational courses, and absence of a remedial program. The causes of this situation have been attributed to a lack of funds and segregation.

When asked about conditions been approved, he said, "I don't see any reason why they've slowed down, and someone will have to do them if it's the county court or the city council.

"We started running when fifteen or twenty white boys came over to help the others out," Buford said. "We ran down several streets before one of our boys was caught and beat for a few minutes. He got up and we all kept running until we met Ronnie and told him what happened."

Lowery said, "they decided to go over into the projects and get some other of their friends. We got about five or six other boys to go with the six of us back to the game. We had radio antennas and sticks."

Lowery explained that they met two or three of the white boys who had attacked his friends. The Negro youths ran the white boys down Jefferson before they lost the boys. Lowery said that they did not see any other white boys and decided to go back home.

On the way home, a white man, who had seen them chasing the white boys earlier, tried to run over the Negroes, according to Lowery and several of the youths.

"I had a pistol that shoots blanks and I pointed it at him. He got scared and ran away."

The next series of events happened very rapidly. According to police, a white man parked in the Magnolia Lanes parking lot accused the Negroes of trying to steal his hub caps. The Negro youths denied this saying that they had gone to find some more sticks. Lowery also said that he shot his "blank" pistol at the unidentified man.

The Negroes ran when they saw city policemen arrive. One youth, John Parker, 1704 Jasper, was arrested as they tried to run away.

Lowery, according to Inspector W. G. Pace, city policeman, ran and started firing his blank pistol at officers. Sergeant Odum, one of the officers on the scene, shot Lowery in the hip.

Lowery said he did not know he was firing at police officers. "I thought they were some more white boys coming after me."

Mr. Lowery

When police later learned that Lowery had only a blank pistol, Inspector Pace stated that it was fortunate that the boy did not get killed.

"Why, we don't wait and ask a man if his gun is real or not, we just try to protect ourselves."

Lowery and Buford accused the policemen of hitting them several times while the boys were in the police car. Inspector Pace denied that this happened.

Mrs. Annie Lowery came to the Crusader's office to report what happened. She said University of Tennessee Hospital officials did not treat her son's wound properly. "Why, I had to take him to my private doctor. The only thing they did out there was to X-ray him and put some dressing on his wound. We went back out there Wednesday, September 25, and they told me to bring him back October 25. By that time his leg would have rotted off."

Which ended his definition of freedom of the press.

On September 26, Marion Barry called and got a milder response: Chief Harris said he would issue a press card if the Mayor ordered.

About 30% of our students go on to college, the rest go to menial labor or domestic work or unemployment. The vocational courses Austin offers won't help them get jobs around here, and if they take the vocational curriculum they don't get enough academic courses to help them pass job examinations; so they don't have much to offer anyone."

Austin suffers from having too many pupils, too few teachers, not enough space or classrooms, a shortage of textbooks, outdated vocational courses, and absence of a remedial program. The causes of this situation have been attributed to a lack of funds and segregation.

When asked about conditions at Austin, Superintendent of Schools, Thomas N. Johnston, said that the School Board was "aware" of the conditions at Austin. That their correction had "high priority on the list" but that it had been "slowed down" for the past six or eight months, because of the confusion over who would issue bonds" and other factors dependent upon School Consolidation.

When asked why the Consolidation issue had been allowed to affect plans which had already been approved, he said, "I don't see any reason why they've slowed down, and someone will have to do them if it's the county court or the city council.

THE BUILDING

Austin High was built in 1952 to accommodate a maximum of 750.

"But," says Austin Principal O. T. Hogue, "That's on paper. The school really accommodates 600. And we have 815 students, now."

"When they built Austin, I was in on the planning. I asked for eight academic classrooms and only got six. Last year I asked for three more classrooms, and that was with the understanding that Beardsley was to be enlarged and continue through the 12th grade. This year I would have to ask for four more classrooms,

CONSOLIDATION ---- FOR AND AGAINST

Editor's Note: In keeping with its policy of bringing important issues to the public, the Crusader asked two Knoxvillians to present arguments for and against consolidation.

FOR

Dr. James Colston

Dr. James A. Colston, President of Knoxville College, had this to say:

"As a member of the Commission that drew up the plan for consolidation of the Knoxville-Knox County School Systems, I firmly believe that a consolidated school system will provide better educational opportunities for all concerned — the students, the teachers, and the taxpayers. If I did not believe this I never would have, as a Commission member, voted in favor of it.

Because of the measure of fiscal independence provided for in the merger plan, the plan offers the community a greater assurance that the educational levels of our schools will be raised than is now provided in either the City or County school systems. For example, if a budget for school purposes is now presented by the City School Board to City Council and City Council says it does not have the money to support it, then the City Board of Education has no further recourse. The same thing is true in the county; however, in the consolidated plan if the Board of Education presents a budget to Quarterly County Court and the Court indicates that it does not have money to support it, then the Board can take its claim to the people. If the people want better education, then they can provide the support for it and force the Quarterly Court to meet the expenditures.

Not only does the Plan guarantee that there shall be no diminution in the highest level of education in either system, it also provides that there shall be improvement in the level of education provided all of the children of Knox County. The Plan thoroughly protects the welfare of all of the teachers, their salaries, tenure and retirement benefits. It also protects the taxpayers. Without consolidation county taxes are going to skyrocket because the taxpayers will have to support a small, widely dispersed system around the edges of the county. This will certainly not encourage new industry to come to Knox County. In fact, it might drive industry already here out of the county because of the high tax rate.

My personal interest is in the welfare of all the people. As a teacher myself, I would of necessity be interested in the best welfare of all of the teachers; and if the Plan did not provide for it. I would be solidly against it. I am also interested in making it possible for all people to have jobs —more and better jobs. With the encouragement of existing industry to remain in our county and more to come in will mean that more jobs will be available and surely this will mean more jobs for Negroes. I fear that a reduction in job opportunities may work to the disadvantage of the Negro.

On the basis of my knowledge of the provisions of the Plan for Consolidation, my faith in the people you will elect to administer it, and my deep interest in the welfare of all of the people, I recommend this plan without any reservation whatsoever and urge you to vote in favor of it."

AGAINST

Mrs. Charlene Michael

In the last few years the Knoxville Teachers League and the Knoxville Education Association have worked together on some issues and projects; such is the case on the matter of consolidation. In light of this we hereby present the statements as adopted by the Executive Boards of the Knoxville Teachers League and the Knoxville Education Association on September 5, 1963:

Knoxville Teachers League and Knoxville Education Association oppose consolidation because:

1. The plan does not, in reality, provide for improved education for the children involved.

2. The plan does not create a new school system but rather provides for an all-inclusive County system.

3. The legality of major advantages which have been claimed for the plan has been questioned by the State Commissioner of Education and other legal authorities.

GO TO THE POLLS THURSDAY AND VOTE.

Every citizen of Knoxville who is eligible to vote should go to the polls and vote Thursday, October 3. You will not be living up to your responsibility as a citizen if you fail to vote.

We are fortunate that here in Knoxville we can vote without fear of economic or physical harm. In Mississippi and some other Southern states there is this fear. We all remember Tent City in Fayette County, Tenn.

Salutes Crusader For Printing Truth

Dear Sir:

The Complimentary Issue of the Knoxville Crusader was received with gratitude by quite a number of persons interested in promoting better human relations in the Knoxville Community. I am one of such persons.

The call for leadership is long overdue. Realizing that there are too many "big" people in Knoxville doing little, and too many "little" people doing nothing, I salute you and your diligent staff of tireless workers.

Negroes, as well as whites, need to know the facts about city employment, public facilities, and political factors in our cities. Only now do we see the first real attempt to print such material. I salute you and your staff again for being courageous enough to print that which is true, and not which we would like to be true.

This is 1963 and the Negro community is awakening to the injustice and unequal treatment it has received for so many years. I only hope that the community will open its eyes wider and see that there are persons who will support it, if it will give support in return.

I salute you and your staff once more as you take a stand for complete integration. With you stand the open-minded, and just, the non-violent, the sincere, and the freedom fighters, as well as those others who support the Knoxville Crusader. I want to be counted as a member of the informed citizenry.

Yours truly

Dear Editor:

I read with interest the complimentary issue of the Knoxville Crusader. There were so many things that were said, about which the Knoxville population is so unaware.

We have needed a paper like this in our community for many years and especially in the last few years during the push for equality of opportunity.

When we remain uninformed on existing conditions, we get the feeling that everything is fine.

I do wish your paper the best of success and hope that the people of Knoxville will give you the necessary support.

Enclosed is a check for $4.25 for 1 year's subscription.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Your paper has an extraordinary value for this day, time, and place. In this city where, as you pointed out, we fail to be recognized as first-class citizens, there is no alternative for true leadership than the one you so magnaminously have undertaken.

I have read with deep interest and shocking revelation the conditions under which our city is handcuffed by the police department and the city administration and I shall call upon the people of my parish, not only to support you with their finances but with their prayers for your success.

The United States Commission On Civil Rights

Briefly stated, the Commission's function is to advise the President and Congress on conditions that may deprive American citizens of equal treatment under the law because of their color, race, religion or national origin.

The Commission has no power to enforce laws or correct any individual wrong. Basically, its task is to collect, study, and appraise information relating to civil rights throughout the country, and to make appropriate recommendations to the President and Congress for corrective action. The Supreme Court has described the Commission's statutory duties in this way:

. . . its function is purely investigative and factfinding. It does not adjudicate. It does not hold trials or determine anyone's civil or criminal liability. It does not issue orders. Nor does it indict, punish, or impose any legal sanctions. It does not make determinations depriving anyone of his life, liberty, or property.

In short, the Commission does not and cannot take any affirmative action which will affect any individual's legal rights. The only purpose of its existence is to find facts which may subsequently be used as the basis for legislative or executive action.

Journal Finds Dr. King Guilty

In a recent editorial, the Knoxville Journal used the Birmingham dynamiting of innocent children as an excuse to hurl charges at Dr. Martin Luther King, whom the Journal blamed for the deaths equally with Alabama Gov. Wallace. The morning paper charges that both King and Wallace are "responsible for such eruptions of violence" as the church bombing. In typical fashion for this newspaper, the Journal accuses Dr. King of "threats of violence," which presumably incite Negroes and whites to violent action.

This kind of journalism is the trademark of the Journal, which seemingly has enjoyed a long history of allegiance to racists and their methods of white supremacy. Consequently such attacks upon Dr. King are not unusual or surprising. Because of their misleading character, however, the Journal's statements should not be allowed to pass by entirely without correction.

Blaming Dr. King and other protest leaders for racial violence is like blaming early Christians for their own persecutions. The Romans threw the Christians to the lions for refusing to bow down before their pagan gods. Die-hard segregationists throw home-made bombs and dynamite into churches because the Negro refuses to bow down any longer to the gods of White Supremacy.

Dr. King, a Christian minister, is reviving the early Christian message of love and forgiveness for the whole world by leading us through the wilderness of hate and oppression toward the land of freedom. As it was with Peter and the early Christians, King and other leaders will not be turned back by the deathbombs hurled by Hate and Ignorance.

The Journal accuses Dr. King of "threats of violence." Accusations such as these are typical of the Journal's editorial policy. Every informed person knows well that Martin Luther King preaches love and non-violence, that he has dedicated himself totally to the philosophy of Christian non-violent proest of oppressive racial practices.

Oppressed peoples of other countries have overthrown injustice with the sword. America is fortunate to have King and other leaders, who resort not to the sword but to peaceful demonstrations seeking only the rights of ordinary American citizens—rights that are long overdue. In its pretended ignorance, the Journal fails to note that assemblies protesting injustice are exercises in the best American tradition and replace bloody revolutions in countries which suppress peaceful petitions.

Editorially the Journal also speaks out against civil rights legislation and suggests that the courts should be used to fight injustice. Again the Journal pretends ignorance in opposing Negro freedom.

Even the Journal knows that the courts are of little use without legislation and that Negroes cannot get justice in local courts where white racist judges refuse Negroes their Constitutional rights.

Time and time again the morning newspaper makes its position against Negro freedom quite clear. Its opposition to Martin Luther King and civil rights legislation is just one more effort in the Journal's continuing campaign to keep freedom's door locked and to preserve full American citizenship for the lily-white.

Sermon For The Week

By Rev. Robert J. Tolbert, Pastor
Lennon Memorial Methodist Church

Text: "But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the temple." Matthew 12:6.

Christianity is not an "it." It is not a "lism" or a "tism" or an "ism." It is a way of life. It is a commitment not to some thing but to a person, God through His son Jesus the Christ. Anything living or dead that obstructs or takes the place of true fellowship or communion with God is idolatry.

I love education. How thrilling it is to take advantage of some of the vast knowledge at our fingertips today. I like to think of how in the early days of our country and religion locked arms and enabled education to lift the bonds of ignorance from many people.

But if education does not cause me to get along better with my fellowman, if it does not somehow make our community a better place to live, if it does not enhance my life to the point where I can have a more vivid contact with God, it has not served its purpose: it is idolatry.

I love the Church. I admire all for which it stands. I often like to think of the many saints it has produced. However, if the Church does not somehow serve as the instrument through which I can have fellowship with God, it has not served its purpose: it is idolatry.

Someone is doubtles saying to themself, "Well preacher I have a problem. I want to do more for my Church and for my community, but I am an alcoholic."

Without the help of God through His Son Jesus the Christ, there is no help for one who has become victimized by alcohol. Many records will attest to the fact that there have been many people caught in this predicament. Some have turned themselves toward God. Many have channeled their aspirations through Alcoholics Anonymous.

With much faith, discipline, self-restraint and determination a large percentage have emerged victorious. It didn't happen over night, but now many of those people are making great contributions to their Churches and communities.

In the story of our text Jesus is concerned with the importance and worth of the human personality. His Disciples have been accused of breaking the Law by pulling off ears of corn on the Sabbath. Apparently the Disciples were hungry.

As they proceeded to give nourishment to their bodies, as they passed through the corn field, they and Jesus were confronted by the Pharisses, who were strict observers of the Law. It was a question of which was the more important, the Law or man?

Jesus told of two occasions where their ancestors had committed similar acts on the Sabbath in connection with the temple and were blameless. Jesus not only asserted that the human personality was of more worth than the Law but he went to tell them, "That in this place is one greater than the temple."

Whatever our problem might be, in our individual or social life, there is One in our midst who is greater than the forces that would prevent a true fellowship or communion with God.

Specifically, the Civil Rights Act of 1957, as amended, directs the Commission to:

Investigate formal allegations that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote and have that vote counted by reason of their color, race, religion, or national origin;

Study and collect information concerning legal developments which constitute a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution;

Appraise the laws and policies of the Federal Government with respect to equal protection of the laws under the Constitution;

Prepare and submit interim reports to the President and the Congress and a final and comprehensive report of its activities, findings and recommendations.

The material on which the Commission's reports are based has been obtained in various ways. In addition to its own hearings, conferences, investigations, surveys and related research, the Commission has had the cooperation of numerous Federal, State, and local agencies. Private organizations have also been of immeasurable assistance.

Air Force Refuses To Place Selma Off Limits

WASHINGTON, D.C. September 23 — The Air Force has declined to act on a request from the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) that Selma, Alabama be declared off limits to personnel from Craig Air Force Base.

The request was made by Worth Long, SNCC staff coordinator, in a conference with Craig Commander Richard Ault on Monday, September 16. The request was reinforced with a telegram from SNCC Chairman John Lewis to Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara after Long's arrest and beating in a Selma jail last Monday evening.

The Department of Defense said here Colonel Ault had turned down the request because "the commander may not intervene on behalf of persons not under his command."

After the first refusal SNCC wired McNamara and Colonel Ault, again asking that Selma be placed off limits to help settle racial problems there.

Sixty-eight demonstrators were arrested there Monday, Sept. 16, and Long, who was an observer at the demonstrations, was arrested and beaten by Deputy Sheriff W. T. Marvel in the jail.

Over 100 demonstrators have been jailed there in a week of protest.

In Atlanta, SNCC Chairman John Lewis said demonstrations would continue there until "every vestige of segregation has been removed."

Rev. Percy Smith, Jr., pastor of Clinton Chapel A.M.E. Zion Church, and his congregation will worship with Rev. John Robert Culum and his congregation. The joint worship service will take place at Rev. Culum's church, the A.M.E. Zion Church of LaFollette. After the service a basket dinner will be served to be shared with all friends and visitors.

The women of First A.M.E. Zion Church will be celebrating "Women's Day" Sunday, September 29, 1963, at 4:00 p.m.

The speaker for the occasion will be Mrs. Lillie Powell Lindsay, a prominent citizen of this city. Mrs. Lindsay was one of the persons speaking out for integration and recently wrote an open letter to the Knoxville Journal deploring the delay in justice to Negroes.

The Roger's Memorial Women's Chorus will render music, and after the service there will be a fellowship hour. Mrs. Henrietta Harper is General Chairman and Miss Ruth Morgan is Publicity Chairman.

The climax of Seney Chapel Methodist Church's "Miss Personality" contest will be Sunday, September 29. The contestants are Mrs. Margaret George, Miss Elouise Johnson, Miss Elizabeth Wilburn, and Mrs. Marion Lyons. The congregation of the church is divided into four groups, each of which is to support one of the contestants. Rev. Maceo Cox is pastor.

Rev. Percy Smith, Jr., was in Salisbury, North Carolina, the latter part of this week visiting his family and Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Gilliam, his in-laws. Mr. Gilliam, Mrs. Smith's, father is seriously ill and she is helping to care for him.

Knoxville College held its opening convocation on September 25, 1963, in the Giffen-Alumni Memorial Building. At this program full time students who have a cumulative averaged of at least 2.0 (out of a possible 3.0) were honored. Knoxvillians honored were Phiefer L. Browne, Beverly Y. Chandler, Wallace Madden, Joyce Riddle, and 1963 graduates Gloria Burgess and Barbara Ivey.

just to handle the students I have this year."

"East High School has about 623 pupils, and a capacity somewhere around 650," B. A. Bible, Principal of East High, reported. "We have 24 academic classrooms."

When asked if he could absorb the overload from Austin, Mr. Bible said, "We could handle some." Asked if he had any objection, he replied, "When the regulations are off, we have no objection."

NO ROOM

"I could use another English teacher, and social science teacher and other math teacher," said Mr. Hogue, "as it is, 50 students have to go over to Vine Jr. High to take Algebra I. But if I could get the teachers, I have no place to put them."

Because there are not enough classrooms, two classes are held simultaneously in the cafeteria four times a day, and home room is held in the auditorium.

"A number of teachers do not have their own classrooms, or even their own desks," Mrs. Carriella Thomas, a teacher at Austin, reports.

"Because the cafeteria is so small, there are lunch hours every fifteen minutes from 11:45 until 1:30, creating so much movement in the hall that it is almost impossible to teach for two hours a day," Mrs. Thomas stated. "After they finish lunch, the students must go to the auditorium to wait until their lunch period is over to return to class."

"By law, the cafeteria is supposed to accommodate one-third of the student body at a time" Mr. Hogue explained. "On paper our capacity is 750, and the cafe-the school should be painted every three years," Mr. Hogue said, "Last year they started to paint. They got the outside painted, but they didn't get to the inside because of annexation, and they had to go paint some school that had just been annexed.

They say they'll get back to paint the inside sometime around Christmas; but that means they'll be painting while the kids are in school, and that's just too much confusion."

"We could use another janitor," he said, "The PTA recommended to the Board that we get another, but we just haven't gotten one. We have all those vocational classrooms to clean, and it's just too much for them to do."

"Only some of the students have lockers," Mrs. Thomas reports: Although there are two students to a locker already."

SUPPLIES SHORT

"There are movie and slide projectors, phonographs and tape recorders; but the other language teacher and I must supply our own language instruction records, and the tapes that accompany the language texts belong to the principal," Mrs. Thomas said.

Mr. Hogue says that the "records and tapes will be forthcoming when it's decided what kind of language laboratory they want. One of the classrooms that was supposed to be added would be a language lab."

"One American government class has no textbooks at all," Mrs. Thomas claims, "there should be one textbook for each pupil. Most other courses make do with a serious textbook shortage. There is one day a month for requisition slips to be turned in, and the textbooks have been requested each month, but the order has never been filled. The requests have been tabled until the Consolidation issue is settled."

U. S. CHARGES MISS. POLICE

The Justice Department has charged the sheriff and police chief of Winona, Miss., and three other policemen with beating and kicking five Negro prisoners.

Four of the victims, Miss June Johnson, Miss Annell Ponder, of SCLC, and Mrs. Fannie Hamer, Mr. James Jones, and Mr. Harold West, of SNCC, were arrested last June at the Winona bus terminal restaurant. The fifth, Mr. Lawrence Guyot, 25, a SNCC field secretary, was arrested after going to Winona to seek their release.

It was clear, the Attorney General said, that Sheriff Payton and Chief Herod acted under authority of their office and the laws of Mississippi. They are charged with beating and kicking Miss Johnson and Miss Ponder on June Several Austin students spent worthwhile summers this year engaging in such activities as Boy's State, Girl's State, summer school, Life Sciences Institute and the usual summer jobs.

Those students who engaged in these activities rather than just sitting around and loafing this summer will be well prepared to face the present school year.

Boy's and Girl's States, sponsored by the American Legion, are held yearly in Nashville, Tennessee, to acquaint boys and girls throughout the state with the structure and the ideas upon which the government here in Tennessee is based.

Representing Austin and the Knoxville community were eleven young people possessing all the desired qualities of leadership. The young people were: Boy's State—James Bussel, Marc Chandler, Reginald Felton, Melvin Huff and Ralph Smith; Girl's State—Angela Cherry, Rosalyn Frazier, Barbara Rodgers, Haywoodene Settles, Louella Settles, Connie Taylor and Norma Tench.

These young people carried home to Knoxville the offices of Supreme Court Justice, County Judge, City Clerk, Police Chief, U. S. Senator, State Senator, Cabinet Posts, and just missed bringing back the Governorship by one vote.

Also in Nashville this summer were three other Austin students, Charles Howell, Christopher Robinson and Alfred Babington-Johnson, who participated in a Life Science Institute sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

The Institute was held for eight

Austin High and the Knoxville Community as well as they did in as many fields as they did.

We would like to take this opportunity to encourage the community to support Miss Connie Taylor, an Austin senior who is running for "Miss Democrat", a contest sponsored annually by the Women's Democratic Society, at the Auditorium Coliseum. The candidates for "Miss Democrat" are four white girls and Miss Taylor, who is a Negro.

NAACP Demands Advertising Desegregate

The NAACP met with the American Association of Advertising Agencies in New York on September 5th to present a program for the use of Negro actors and models in mass advertising.

The program reads in part: "We demand the recognition of the simple truth that 20,000,000 American citizens are colored and each one a consumer. . . . All future advertising . . . must reflect that these 20,000,000 consumers are in every stratum of American life.

"We demand merit employment by all advertising agencies within their own organizations. We demand the use of colored models in advertising . . . including newspapers, magazines, billboards and posters.

The list ended with a recommendation that a committee be set up to insure compliance with just to handle the students I have this year."

"East High School has about 623 pupils, and a capacity somewhere around 650," B. A. Bible, Principal of East High, reported. "We have 24 academic classrooms."

When asked if he could absorb the overload from Austin, Mr. Bible said, "We could handle some." Asked if he had any objection, he replied, "When the regulations are off, we have no objection."

"I could use another English teacher, and social science teacher and other math teacher," said Mr. Hogue, "as it is, 50 students have to go over to Vine Jr. High to take Algebra I. But if I could get the teachers, I have no place to put them."

Because there are not enough classrooms, two classes are held simultaneously in the cafeteria four times a day, and home room is held in the auditorium.

"A number of teachers do not have their own classrooms, or even their own desks," Mrs. Carridella Thomas, a teacher at Austin, reports.

"Because the cafeteria is so small, there are lunch hours every fifteen minutes from 11:45 until 1:30, creating so much movement in the hall that it is almost impossible to teach for two hours a day," Mrs. Thomas stated. "After they finish lunch, the students must go to the auditorium to wait until their lunch period is over to return to class."

"By law, the cafeteria is supposed to accommodate one-third of the student body at a time" Mr. Hogue explained. "On paper our capacity is 750, and the cafeteria holds 175, so it was short to begin with. Two years ago the plan was approved to enlarge the cafeteria to hold 250. Now we have 815 students. If I even had a cafeteria to accommodate 250, I could release teachers from the auditorium to supervise the cafeteria."

"I also asked for Beardsley to become a Senior High. As it is, it goes to 10th grade, and then they come over here. The plans were drawn up and the land was reserved, and they were supposed to go ahead, and then I found this summer that the Bearsley pupils were coming here instead.

We weren't prepared for them and we can't contain them. We didn't even have the textbooks ordered for them. We ordered them at the beginning of the year, but it first has to be processed, and it's going to be a while."

"Some of the elementary schools go up to fourth grade," Mr. Hogue explained, "then the students switch over to another school. Beardsley goes to 10th grade, and Vine Jr. goes to 9th grade, so they come over here at different times. It's a mess." Asked why the schools were not run on a single plan, he said, "Segregation brought all this about."

Because the auditorium is too small, two assemblies must be held, instead of one, to reach all the students.

"Equipment is short. There are not enough desks; many of the children sit on folding chairs, and sometimes folding chairs run short," Mrs. Thomas said.

"There are only three janitors for the entire school," Mrs. Thomas stated, "and it impossible for them to keep the school clean in its overcrowded condition. The walls have not been painted in years, and the heating plant breaks down continually during the winter."

"The regulations specify that they didn't get to the inside because of annexation, and they had to go paint some school that had just been annexed.

They say they'll get back to paint the inside sometime around Christmas; but that means they'll be painting while the kids are in school, and that's just too much confusion."

"We could use another janitor," he said, "The PTA recommended to the Board that we get another, but we just haven't gotten one. We have all those vocational classrooms to clean, and it's just too much for them to do."

There is one day a month for requisition slips to be turned in, and the textbooks have been requested each month, but the order has never been filled. The requests have been tabled until the Consolidation issue is settled."

Mr. Bible, Principal of East High, said his school was "short in some classes."

Mr. Hogue reports he has 33 teachers at Austin, ten are vocational teachers, and only 16 are fulltime academic teachers for the student body of 816.

"We have about 623 students," East High Principal Bible reports "and we have 28 teachers, two for shop and one for home economics."

TEACHERS OVERLOADED

At Austin each teacher carries five classes, one home room and one study hall each day. The average English class has 35 or more pupils, although the State specifies 30 per period as a maximum load.

Language classes average 25 - 35 students, Mrs. Thomas states. "Last year, the French teacher wound up with one class of 81 pupils. I had to take half of her class, which still left us with 40 and 41 pupils apiece. Language classes should be about 20 pupils."

She further maintains that overcrowding is especially serious in segregated schools, because most of the children come from low socio-economic backgrounds. The teacher often has to provide the first regulated environment the child has.

In overcrowded and under-equipped schools it is impossible to give the child even the minimum attention it needs, and supply all the needs the community has failed to provide. The child, therefore, cannot learn, and as a result of this segregated background, Mrs. Thomas estimates that ⅔ of the students are simply not ready for high school.

Because of lack of space, the second part of this story will appear next week.

Maximum penalty for each would be a year in prison and $1,000 fine on each of seven counts. The charges are based on Section 242, Title 18, of the U. S. Code which makes deprivation of rights by law enforcement officers a federal offense.

Spending his time just as wisely was Charles Michael who received a Reader's Digest Foundation Scholarship in Drama and Music to attend a camp in Inter-Lochen, Michigan, where he could receive the instruction that would enable him to realize his full potential in drama and music.

We would like to congratulate all these young people for their ability to see far enough into the future as to use their summers wisely. I would also like to congratulate them on representing Austin High and the Knoxville Community as well as they did in as many fields as they did.

Diane Bevel called this morning to ask for help. She says she had just received a call from a Mrs. Jessie Foster, 606 Chrisman Avenue, Cleveland, Mississippi. Mrs. Foster has been very active in the registration campaign over there. She runs a cafe at 606 Chrisman. Either the city or the county authorities have threatened to revoke her license. In an attempt to recoup her business which has been falling off due to the general economic conditions, Mrs. Foster arranged to open another cafe in Cleveland. She has tried several times to get either the city or the county authorities to inspect the premises and issue a license to operate. As yet, she has not succeeded in getting the inspection. Sheriff Jewell Pace, Bolivar County, recently told her husband that the authorities would see to it that the Fosters ran no more businesses in Bolivar County, because they had been hauling Negroes into the courthouse to register.

Diane says this harassment has been going on for about three months. This is as specific as Diane could be about details. She wanted to know what could be done. She said she felt that Burke Marshall had really given the registration workers a "snow job" when he told them some time ago that the Justice Department would leap to the defense of registration workers who were harassed. I told Diane that I could think of nothing she could do for Mrs. Foster other than to inform Marshall's office in as great and specific detail as possible about Mrs. Foster's trouble and hope he would elect to take some action.

RE: Teacher Questionnaire

Several months ago VEP, in cooperation with the American Teachers Association, sent out questionnaires to school principals in several of the VEP states, seeking information regarding registration and voting by teachers. The questionnaires were mailed out from the Montgomery office of the ATA when George Jones was Executive Secretary, but the returns were to be sent here to Atlanta. Mr. Jones has been replaced as Executive Secretary by Dr. Joseph T. Brooks and the office has been moved to Atlanta.

Because of the continuing interest which we have in the problems reflected by the questionnaire, and the investment in time and money which we have already expended, I think it is important that we analyze the returns with the idea of making use of the information. Janet Shortt transferred some of the information to index cards and I would like for you to check on the status of the survey to determine what information it reveals, with as much geographic breakdown as possible. As soon as you have familiarized yourself with the information which is available (in advance of actually compiling it) I would like to discuss this survey with you.

Re: Comments on the Gadsden, Alabama, Trip Report Memo

The matter of data collecting raised in your memo of October 30, 1963, has been for some time, and is, at present, very much with us. And yet, you are absolutely sound in your conclusion that much is being lost. However, I do not feel that the suggestion of making use of Mr. Watters would substantially improve the problem.

I have no doubt that Mr. Watters, with his reporting skills, would be able torreport what is communicated to him orally. However, much of this will depend on the questions asked. I rather think that questions to ask will depend largely on the interpretations that one gives on the spot to what is said.

Our experience tends to indicate that there is a very great problem of helping individuals discover and articulate what they do in fact think and feel. This, it appears, would require a keen knowledge of the historical, as well as social, role that Negro people have been compelled to play in American society.

It is precisely this kind of thing that makes the differences between studies done by Charles S. Johnson, E. Franklin Frazier, and Olive W. Cox.

Subject: GADSDEN, ALABAMA TRIP REPORT

My trip to Gadsden, Alabama, on Sunday -- where I talked at some length with the Mobile, Alabama VEP workers, occasioned this little thought.

I was very much impressed with the many narratives related to me by the various field workers from Mobile. They talked about the problems that confront them daily as they try to motivate Negroes to register, and what happens once this motivation is culminated into actually taking these persons to the polls, as well as the registration process itself. Upon inquiry, I found out these persons are not including these problem narratives in their reports to us. Consequently, I believe we are missing much of the meat that will ultimately be needed when the VEP story is told.

I suggested to the group that they write up the various narratives weekly, compile them, and send them to Jack for his use and information. My experience with the Mobile people leads me to believe that there are many untold stories and problems in our projects that we really need to know about.

Pursuant to this, I would like to know what your response would be to taking advantage of the availability of Pat Watters, on the SRC staff, to visit certain selected projects, talking to the people, and writing up the various problem narratives. Pat is a good reporter with real experience, and I am sure he could do a job.

I mentioned this briefly to Wiley coming back from Gadsden Sunday and he seemed to be amendable to the idea. Jack and Randolph may have similar ideas along this line.

The VEP should see regularly all clips and other materials related to suffrage and Southern politics. It seems to me that the best way to do this might be for your staff to deliver to VEP every Monday morning all items which were received and categorized the week before. Will you please give the necessary instructions to your staff, and make the necessary arrangements with Wiley for custody and return of the materials?

RE: Compliance with procedures outlined in VEP Policy and Procedure Manual

I call your attention to those items in the Policy and Procedure Manual pertaining to the following areas in which we still seem to be having difficulty. Compliance with this manual has assumed even more importance now that we are in new quarters and communication is a little more difficult than before.

SUPPLIES:

All supplies are to be ordered through the Administrative Secretary in order that the Project Director can approve all expenditures of VEP funds. This includes supplies for all office equipment as well as portable equipment.

JOB DESCRIPTION - ADMINISTRATIVE SECRETARY:

"Requests for services of non-professional staff, except as outlined in their job descriptions, should be cleared through the Administrative Secretary." Specifically, the services of the Clerk-Typist should be requested through the Administrative Secretary in order that the office work load can be evenly distributed.

TELEPHONE PROCEDURE:

"The Project Director's calls will be referred directly and immediately to the Administrative Secretary for handling or transferring to him. This is the procedure to be followed by anyone answering the VEP telephone." The only exceptions to this procedure will be Mr. Branton's family who will identify themselves and Leslie Dunbar, who also always identifies himself. Otherwise, even if the caller asks if Mr. Branton is in, the call should be referred immediately to the Administrative Secretary who can answer the question in accordance with instructions Mr. Branton will have given her.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

There are a few other administrative "bugs" which need ironing out, especially now that we are in new quarters, which are not covered in the P&P Manual. These concern filing and supplies.

In approving the expenditures for VEP and in examining the monthly financial statements I have been aware for some time of the rather large amount of money we are spending for office supplies and I ask the entire staff to exercise care and discretion in the use of supplies. If an unusual project arises, either in the office, or in the field, which require the use of office supplies, advance notice to the Administrative Secretary would be helpful.

Cooperation by all members of the staff should be given and some thought is in order because of the difficulty we are all having in finding materials quickly. I have noticed that this has been due, quite often, to the fact that the filing is getting quite a bit behind. Could we all be thinking about this problem.

May I ask the cooperation, also, of the non-professional staff in making certain that file folders are put back at the end of each day and that all files are locked before the office closes at night.

Thank you.

Re: Auto rental information for those who find it necessary.

Because of the increased competition in the auto rental field it is possible for one to get more favorable rates in certain cities by simply taking the time to compare costs. It has been my experience that if one is going to drive a long distance and can rent from one of the independent smaller companies under the economy plan where you agree to pay your own gas bill you will come out much cheaper then you would if you let the company pay for the gas at a higher rate per mile.

You also save money by using compacts, but in some instances, if you have heavy highway driving, it might be better to have a standard size car. An Air Travel card or a Hertz Car can be used for identification with most of the small companies and they will bill you personally.

In the case of Hertz, Avis or National you should always inform the agent that we are entitled to a 20% discount and make sure that she writes this on the bill. We are not entitled to get a discount from the smaller independent companies or "economy" companies as their rates are lower, but it is wise still to ask for it as some of them do give a discount, generally not as high as 20%.

Can any of you think of any routine method whereby it will automatically come to my attention when projects end, are cancelled, or are extended. This is the one area where I am having a great deal of difficulty in keeping the current projects list up-to-date. The reason it is difficulty is that these changes sometimes occur in a manner other than through letters which WAB dictates (where I would routinely get this information) and I can't think of any signaling method.

Randolph, I look to you for a great deal of creative thinking on this since I will be forever indebted to you for originally dreaming up the voucher-check system for financial reporting. Can you come up with another brain storm?

MEMORANDUM

To: Wiley A. Branton

From: Barbara I. Whitaker

I had delayed submitting this memorandum for some time due to a number of factors which I hoped would be sufficiently ameliorated with the passage of time. However, this has not occurred, and I feel compelled to set forth my thinking at this time.

I. I am concerned that the VEP policy and Procedure Manual does not yet contain a job description for Research Assistant. I recognize this is a new position, but I am laboring under a disadvantage in not knowing exactly what is required. While I am quite willing to "play it by ear," I am confused when 1) ~~[illegible]~~ statements such as the one made recently to Mr. Patton that I was assuming most of Zack Minnis' duties; 2) When I see correspondence to participating projects indicating that all mail formerly addressed to him should now just be addressed to VEP. If at all possible, could I see the job description for Research Director and have spelled out for me where my responsibilities end? I find it awkward to be an Assistant when there is no Director and must frequently ask myself, "To whom am I Assistant?"

It becomes increasingly obvious that there are serious gaps in our research files. I feel we should expend ourselves to close these gaps, especially with the current projects. I do not profess to bring to this assignment any vast knowledge of political science (although I am studying and am willing to learn), but I do bring an understanding of behavior (of individuals and groups), which I feel will serve the Project. I am seriously concerned that some of the implications, other than political and economical, of registration and voting patterns in our project population are going to be dismissed as unimportant. After a recent consultation with the Research Consultant, I was left with the impression that the final product of this research undertaking will be political science oriented. I feel strongly that the materials which come to the Project have implications far beyond this scope. I hesitate to be too adamant in my expression of ideas since I am not really sure "who I am" in the VEP constellation.

II. In thinking about VEP and its contribution to the advancement of voter registration, and education, I cannot help but concern myself about the effects after the period of research is over. A project which has spent as much as VEP should leave, I feel, a more lasting legacy than "X" number of new registrants in each state. I regard as extremely valuable the work which Randolph Blackwell is doing in South Carolina and question why a similar procedure cannot be followed in other selected states. Actual registration is not even half the task in the states in which we work. It would appear that motivating people to actually cast ballots is the crucial problem. In checking statistics, actual voting is lowest in the southern states. It would seem that a year in which a presidential election occurs would be the psychologically right moment to foster such organization.

III. I request clarification on the matter of overtime for the professional staff. I note neither the VEP nor SRC manuals cover this item. I do not object to the extra hours necessitated by field trips, meetings, conference, etc., but I would like to know the official position on this subject.

BUT WOULD THEY RESTRAIN THEMSELVES FROM "HELPING" US BY PUTTING THEM BACK. In the long run it is definitely to our advantage if we retain the responsibility for refiling any materials removed from the file drawers, including entire file folders.

MEMORANDUM

Re: Conference Between Wiley A. Branton, Barbara I. Whitaker, Randolph T. Blackwell, and John Due on Field Trips

(This conference was called by WAB on 3-9-64 to discuss the most recent field trips made so that the highlights and most important aspects of these trips could be examined as soon as possible. This was done in order to keep everyone abreast of what is going on since the trips may not be put into written form immediately. At the time of this transcription, the only field trip reports completed are the ones by John Due to Macon, Georgia, and Orangeburg, South Carolina, dated 3-9-64.)

WAB went to Winston Salem, North Carolina, on Wednesday, March 4, and had a meeting with the leaders of the Voter Registration Project of Winston-Salem (NAACP-CORE), among them, Dr. Jackson and Mrs. Louise Wilson. WAB said that his visit there disclosed the fact to him that this project is an interracial one, and that after talking with the leaders, he is convinced that the work there promises to be even more successful with the coordination of the organized groups in the community.

WAB has extended this project to May 15, and a supplemental grant has already been sent in the amount of $500 on March 5, with two additional ones of $500 to follow on or about April 1 and May 1.

BW had asked WAB prior to his trip, to inquire about the reporting of the Winston-Salem group. In response to this, WAB was able to report that all reports through December 28 will be sent as requested. The reason for the gap in dates is because the books were closed during the first two weeks in January, and very little registering was done. Even though the office was closed, registration was permitted even though those registering at that time could not vote in the current election.

Also, some of the reports we have said are missing are supposed to be in our possession. We are to search our unfiled materials and if these reports are still missing, we are to request copies of the ones we do not have.

BW also brought up the question about the use of the word "apathy" in some reports, and she had wondered if a great deal of this seeming indifference on the part of the people was due instead to ignorance, and this was not being understood by the registration workers.

Inter-Office Memo

We are also to receive a cut of the mobile unit they have in operation.

With this extended grant, WAB feels that a realistic estimate for a 10 week period is 2,000, however, the committee thinks 2,500 will be registered in that period of time. He inquired if there is any work being done in the counties at present, and he found that it is limited. Plans are being made to step up the pace in the near future.

WAB also mentioned that there are two Negroes running for office. One for county commissioner, and one for the state legislature. He mentioned that he met Dr. Williams, President of the Winston-Salem College and his son, who is very active in the registration and integration efforts in that city. He also met the Negro alderman, _____.

RTB's Trip to Orangeburg, South Carolina:

(JD accompanied RTB on this trip.)

RTB said that this statewide meeting was supposed to be with the leaders of the six congressional district leaders, mainly for the purpose of submitting budgets and a history of their respective organizations. He says that we now have in hand three budgets out of these six districts, and three are in the mail. There seems to be some difficulty with the 3rd and 4th districts (the Spartanburg and Greenville areas), and Rev. Newman is checking to find out what this difficulty is.

Representation came from the 4th district in the form of a letter from Dr. Beck, followed by a call. Dr. Thomas' 2nd congressional district budget is here in the office.

WAB asked about CORE's involvement in this program. He wanted to know if the people in the 5th district are agreeable to having Frank Robinson and Ed Brown serve as the coordinators for the district. RTB replied that the question was not raised. He stated frankly that he thought they would want someone else to serve in this capacity, but that they were mainly interested in getting the job done. RTB also stated that as he has mentioned before in previous field trip reports, Robinson and Brown spend too much time talking about what people won't do and try to do the whole job themselves, which is too much of a task. They have little confidence that the people can be pulled together to work effectively.

WAB said that the people feel that they are working under the banner of CORE if Robinson and Brown are involved, and introduced the idea of getting the people together and suggest to them the idea of giving them money to assist them in their efforts, but say that we want a coordinator to work with them on a non-partisan, non-organizational program, and that we are willing to send help in the person of Robinson and Brown, and the salaries would be paid by us or by CORE. When asked if this could possibly be a palatable approach, RTB answered yes. WAB said that VEP needs to know, as soon as possible, what solution would be best, because it will affect the kind of grant given. Also, it was agreed that before a final decision is reached, a table should be prepared showing the amount spent on a quarterly basis to compare the results achieved.

RTB cited which districts are organized on the precinct level, and which ones needed strengthening. All of these points will be given in detail in his field report.

WAB wanted to know how long it would be before we have all the budgets, and RTB said it would be about the end of the week.

WAB mentioned that John McCray, political leader and newspaperman from South Carolina is going to join the staff of the Atlanta Daily World, and we should get together with him and compare notes.

WAB wanted to know how long the program needs to run. RTB said in the 3rd and 5th districts, from March though September, according to the request from the people in the field.

RTB's Trip to Texas:

RTB says he has brought back a new film on the Coalition from Texas that gives more consideration to the other organizations that the other film did not do.

WAB wanted to know the results of the free registration, and was disappointed when RTB reported that Larry Goodwyn announced the registration would only exceed 60,000. He says this is because of the way the announcement came out, and they only had 17 days to work. BW brought out the point that the term "free registration" made people feel as though they were accepting charity, and that people felt ashamed to want to vote in federal elections and not in the state elections. WAB said that a counter campaign should have been formed to rebut this attitude.

RTB cited the differences between the Texas Council of Voters and Larry Goodwyn. He said that the TCOV wanted to run the Council as it has always been run, while Larry Goodwyn wants to inject new ideas and new ways of doing things. Because of this difference of opinion, the Council feels that Larry wants to tell them what to do, and feels there are ulterior motives in his desires, when this is not so, RTB feels.

RTB discussed the Erma Leroy situation, and mentioned that Phil Weightman is unhappy because Mrs. Leroy is not getting the recognition she should get. He pointed out that all of Mrs. Leroy's contacts are elderly, when the leadership trend is now with the 35-and-under group.

WAB said that Phil is a very capable persons, but his loyalty is definitely with Labor, and strongly so. He said that Mrs. Leroy came up working with Labor, and her whole approach is going to be Labor-oriented. WAB also pointed out that Phil is not too much interested in working with Negro groups who are not pro-labor groups, and that he prefers a Labor group.

RTB says that he did not contact E. Bryce Cunningham because he was unavailable, and that the matter of taking Mrs. Leroy off the payroll came through him.

RTB did contact A. D. Thomas and Walker. They were very complimentary about the NAACP in Texas, but the people in Houston and Dallas had nothing to say about NAACP's operations.

BW Trip to Macon:

(BW was accompanied on this trip by JD.) His report on

The workshop was a departure from the previous workshops she has attended, BW said. The attendance, in general, was good. Young people were very much in evidence, with the average age being 21 and below. The youth in the group were very active, also. It seemed as though the older leaders were at a loss when it was time to work. Miss Hayes did not give instructions in regard to Georgia law, and his caused some confusion during the segment of the workshop that was called the "Demonstration Segment."

BW says she talked with Mrs. Lewis and workers. Horace Reed gave a report. So did a representative of the St. Augustine committee. The Jacksonville campaign workers did not attend.

John Edwards and John Brooks were absent from the meeting as far as BW could tell. Brooks or Alexander were supposed to come in the next day for a presentation.

In the course of discussion between WAB, RTB, BW, and JD, BW brought out the fact that it is very evident there is some dissention between Patton and Pearson. This led to a discussion about ways to handle the problems that arise from so many communities not realizing that their activities are actually supported by VEP and not solely NAACP. WAB asked the group if they thought a form-type letter congratulating the local people for working with the project would help. Something to let those local people know that they are a part of something big. For programs that have expired, he suggested we could have another form letter of thanks. It was readily agreed by all that it is important to let people know VEP made available to NAACP money for voter registration work in their communities. WAB suggested that we should run a few surveys where we would go in communities and ask people what services did Mr. Patton provide. Jacksonville was cited as a choice example.

It was agreed by WAB, RTB, and BW that they are all disturbed by the abruptness Mr. Patton uses not only with VEP personnel, but with people in the field as well. WAB stressed the point that when conditions exist with any of the projects that need straightening out, it is necessary to do this in the best way possible, as soon as possible. In handling different difficulties with various individuals or agencies, WAB said that if a harsh letter has to be sent out, and a person in the field, such as RTB, has to come in contact with these individuals and representatives of the various agencies, it should be diplomatically stressed that WAB does not have time for personal and organizational jealousies, etc., and that the important thing was getting the registration work done.

RTB said that the week of the 15th through the 21st, his plans included working in North Carolina in a concentrated fashion, and that it was his hope that Mr. Due would be able to spend the same period of time in South Carolina pulling together some important loose ends.

WAB referred RTB to his letter to Morsell in regard to NAACP work in North Carolina, wherein he suggested that NAACP submit a proposal to VEP for prior approval for work in North Carolina before any money is expended there.

The meeting was then closed.

A word of explanation is in order for the last three grants (or grant numbers) VEP 4-5, VEP 4-6, and VEP 4-7.

VEP 4-5 was inadvertenly assigned to the Alabama ASCARV program before the grant was made. It was easier to reserve this number for them until the grant is actually made than to rescind the number which would have entailed writing and perhaps confusing them. You will be notified when it is official.

VEP 4-6 is a grant made to the Education Film Associates for the filming of a documentary on voter registration. It is being administered only by VEP and, therefore, except for financial reporting to JL and occasional reporting to WAB the rest of the staff need not take any action on it.

VEP 4-7. SPECIAL NOTE TO JS AND BSimon.
This grant is one made to SCLC for work in Atlanta only. Since correspondence and reporting on this grant will contain the names of people ordinarily associated with the All Citizens Registration Committee, special care will have to be taken that it is not misfiled in that project folder.

All of the above grant numbers may be listed now on your chronological list of programs.

Re: CONFERENCE BETWEEN WILEY A. BRANTON, RANDOLPH T. BLACKWELL, BARBARA I. WHITAKER, AND JOHN DUE

The conference was opened with a discussion between WAB and JD concerning his field trip report on Mississippi, submitted on March 23. WAB stressed to Due the importance of making it very clear in his reports whether what is being said is something that has been represented to him, or if it is the result of his own observations.

WAB also asked JD about the racial identity of Albert Jones. JD said that he understood that Jones was a Negro, but that he was not sure, and that he would check to make certain. WAB voiced the opinion that he doubted Jones was a Negro because to his knowledge, there has been no official Negro representation at the Democratic National Convention, as was stated in Due's trip report. Due is to check also on Jones' relationship with the Democratic National convention.

JD was asked to explain more fully the paragraph which contained the statement, "....they were now angry at VEP." JD said that after all the organizations had said what they were going to contribute to the COFO summer project, he was put on the spot as to what VEP was going to do. WAB reviewed what was said in the briefing session with JD before he left Atlanta for Mississippi. Due was told that he was to explain, if the question came up, that he was merely an observer, and that he had recently joined the VEP staff, and that would let him off the hook as far as having to commit VEP in any way to any promise of financial support. Due had been instructed to observe, and report back what had happened at the meeting.

WAB wanted to know who exactly was angry at VEP. JD said that it was not stated specifically by anyone, but the expressions of those present gave away their feelings. WAB reiterated that the background information was given to Due in the beginning so that VEP's position could be stated, if necessary, and that no commitment was to be made.

WAB brought out the fact to the entire group that JD's report was the first information we had received on the COFO summer project, although he had requested this same information from Moses back in December.

Inter office memo

RTB Trip Report on Albany:

(WAB received the report on this trip just prior to this conference.)

WAB, after having read this report, commented on the statistical results contained therein. He said that he feels the Albany Crusade for Voters campaign was good compared with the results for the same period of the SNCC program in the same area, and mentioned that the change in the attitudes of the officials and the fact that there has been night registration has evidently aided the program tremendously. RTB commented that the protests were all a part of the change in these attitudes. (The protests referred to a letter that Willie Bolden had written on March 9 to the Attorney General, and one written by WAB to Bolden with a copy to Robert Kennedy on March 12.)

WAB stated that Andy Young of SCLC had requested that the unused money from the Danville account be transferred to the Albany account for use for a program in Albany. WAB feels that since the only argument SCLC had used for continuing a program in Albany was simply because of a desire to aid some of the people who had been affected by the Justice Department action in that city. On the basis of this alone, WAB feels that he could not agree to such a program.

In a discussion between WAB and RTB on the budget proposed for the Albany project, RTB said that he stepped up to the amount of $600 monthly in his recommendations in lieu of the $500 monthly previously allocated so that there would be money available for an attempt at committee organization. WAB said that he would be willing to put the program on the same tentative basis, just as the Savannah program was initially started. That is, the grant would be dependent upon satisfactory progress and financial reporting.

RTB Report on Florida:

WAB asked RTB about his other reports that had not yet been written up, and RTB said that he would like to talk about the ones which seemed to be priorities. WAB commented that he would like to discuss the Tallahassee trip, mainly because W. C. Patton had telephoned, wanting to know what RTB's report reflected concerning NAACP in regard to that city.

Tallahassee: RTB said that NAACP had two offices in Tallahassee, and that the personnel moved freely between these two offices. He added that he found that Rev. Still is the example of the leadership in that city since he is involved in all of the functioning organizations.

He is an office holder in NAACP, SCLC, and the Community Awakening Committee.

In further discussion, it was brought out that the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity and the Negro superintendent of the public schools had done a tremendous job in voter registration. RTB had found, on the other hand, that the NAACP's attitude was that they were the only ones doing anything there (although there are several independent organizations working in registration), and that the Sigmas were only creating a lot of confusion. RTB feels, as a result of these observations, that if VEP spends any money there, it should be with one of the independent organizations.

WAB concluded that VEP will not spend any more money in Tallahassee. He feels that every organization should supply most of their own money, and VEP should assist by supplementing only.

BW asked WAB if it would be possible to know specifically who has the responsibility of the CORE Tallahassee office. WAB said that possibly JD could clarify this (since his wife, Patricia, is involved with the CORE project there.) JD answered that it was planned that Judy Benninger would take care of the Tallahassee office, but in the past two weeks, Patricia has had to spend some time there and assist her.

JD went on to say that the main problem in Tallahassee was due to the fact that the registrar would not divulge the number of people registered until the books were closed in April. (It is necessary then because the figures are released then to the Secretary of State.) BW commented that the reports we have received from Patricia reflect that she was primarily stimulating activities throughout both Leon and Gadsden counties, instead of concentrating on actual registration. RTB cleared this by reporting that he had found that while they are interested in actual registration, they are going about it in a more organized fashion. Right now, Patricia is busy organizing small meetings and trying to get someone to assume responsibility. The books will open again in late June, and he says that perhaps then we can expect more up-to-date reporting. He says they understand that VEP support of the CORE project in Tallahassee officially ends March 31.

Jacksonville: WAB asked RTB if he had talked with Rutledge Pearson and RTB answered that Pearson was caught up in a sit-in situation, and he was not able to ask him questions at that time.

RTB said that he had talked with one other gentleman, Mr. Torrence, (NAACP), and he had questions as to the way the funds had been handled. There was also some doubt as to how much money there was available to spend.

RTB Report on Savannah:

RTB reported that Hosea's program is still going along at a good pace. He said that he has three fellows working with him. WAB asked about demonstrations. RTB said that he would rather not say what Hosea would do in regard to this. WAB brought out that he had written Hosea a letter warning him that his VEP funds would have to be discontinued if it was found that he was participating in demonstrations.

WAB said that Patton had told him that NAACP was going to run a program in Savannah. BW injected that we had already received two reports from NAACP on their project there. WAB wanted to know that even though VEP money is not being used, should we take any position on the expenditure of non-VEP funds and discourage the opening of a separate program, or would a separate program help stimulate things? RTB felt that it would create further disunity in the community.

BW raised the question concerning Helen Hayes salary as to whether it was paid by VEP, because she was the individual that went into Tallahassee and Savannah to stimulate those separate programs, and she was the one who made some disparaging remarks about Hosea, causing the alienation of people in Savannah. After discussing whether VEP should take an official stand in NAACP campaigns where we are supporting other campaigns, it was decided that there should be some clarification with Patton around the use of personnel pay with VEP funds to stimulate non-VEP supported activities.

RTB said that he felt that NAACP should not compete with Hosea for the Savannah area; that Hosea had undisputedly earned the right to this area, and NAACP should leave this particular section to him.

RTB Trip to North Carolina:

WAB wanted to know from RTB if he saw Mrs. Eva Clayton. RTB said, that he had. WAB said that he had received a letter from Ethel Johnson, and it only contained information on one county - Enfield. Because of this, WAB wanted to know if RTB had discussed the idea of a congressional district program with Mrs. Clayton.

RTB said that he had discussed this with Mrs. Clayton. RTB said that if there is some desire on the part of VEP to do something in Warrenton County, it should plan to include Vance and Franklin counties, also. He has found that Warrenton County has the only mature organization in the area. Mrs. Clayton quite frankly told RTB that the Multi-County Committee meets regularly, but hasn't the maturity to go further than these three counties. RTB says that he did not urge upon her the idea of attempting anything further than the multi-county idea.

RTB has observed that the two counties that are organized and ready to move are the Enfield and Halifax counties. He recommended that we consider grants to them as separate organizations.

RTB says that he and Rev. Ward (whose group has received $3000 from NAACP in an effort to tie Halifax county to the organization), spent four hours talking about a statewide drive. RTB says that he asked him if he would consider concentrating in one area. He feels that it is impossible to do all the groundwork necessary at this late date to try and take on too much. RTB added that he hoped that Ward would concentrate on one definite area. Ward is anxious to get out in Eastern North Carolina, and the people in Warrenton and Halifax counties are more acceptable to the idea of Ward opening a program in these areas because these are areas of extreme brutality.

South Carolina Voter Registration Memo: After reviewing the budgets submitted by the various organizations in the First Congressional District via RTB's memorandum dated March 24, WAB stated that he felt the programs should run at the same time, after noticing that the dates submitted did not concur. RTB agreed that it would be convenient for the programs to begin and end at the same time. Brown and Robinson were included in the budgets as coordinators of the program in the Fifth and Sixth Districts.

This ended the discussion that centered around RTB and his field activities.

Georgia: BW discussed briefly the NAACP drive in Fort Valley. She brought out the fact that though this grant was to be for the tri-county area, in his reports, Patton had included Crawford and Taylor counties as well. She wanted to know that since the $1,000 that was allowed for the tri-county area had not been spent, would WAB consider letting Appling go ahead and work the tri-county area as well as Taylor and Crawford counties, with a common understanding between VEP, NAACP and Appling as to what NAACP's responsibility would be.

WAB answered: yes.

Atlanta: There was some discussion as to who Andy Young would leave in charge in his absence while he is overseas with the National Council of Churches. WAB telephoned Edwina Smith, his secretary, and learned that she will be held responsible while Andy away. Edwina told WAB that Jesse Hill will make decisions on expenditures in Atlanta, and that he is working very cooperatively with her. The matter of VEP receiving delinquent reports was cleared up, and it is understood that we should not have a recurrence in the mix-ups of future reports.

Alabama:

WAB visited Tuskegee, Alabama, and talked with W. P. Mitchell, who heads the Tuskegee Civic Association. They spent considerable time discussing the organization and the progress being made in that city. WAB feels that they are proceeding in a very wise manner. The Negro voting strength now exceeds the white voting strength. They have decided not to put up anyone for office until they gain more experience. They want to make sure they know all the "ins" and "outs" before attempting such a venture. There is no economic intimidation there; no one has been intimidated for trying to vote.

The field trip reports on Virginia, including visits with Norvealte Downing, Moses Riddick, John Brooks, and Lester Banks will be dictated later by WAB.

With most of the trips brought up-to-date, and the grants decided upon, the conference was then closed.

In a visit to the office on 4/17/64, Vivian Henderson indicated that at least eight Negroes have announced their candidacy for public office in the eastern North Carolina counties where we are considering grants for voter registration campaigns.

Since these counties are of interest for a number of reasons, I am suggesting that we subscribe for a three-month period to the following newspapers:

The Enfield Progress
James A. Bateman, Editor

The Warren Record
Bignall Jones, Publisher

These papers are both published weekly on Friday.

Ruth, Wiley may have told you that I am going to continue to be responsible for the same financial routine I have been following for VEP agency reporting, follow-up correspondence, and monthly reports to WAB and LD.

I will report my hours and expenses to you bi-monthly prior to end of each pay period as I have been doing in the past.

The only change this method will require is that when you give the pink VEP check carbons to WAB monthly would you also staple a slip to them showing your current VEP book balance. The reason for this is that I will only be working on Saturdays and your lovely presence, unfortunately, will not be available to me.

Thanks for this extra cooperation.

RE: Procedure for Processing Financial Data

I have reached an agreement with Jean Levine whereby she will continue to look after the financial aspects of the agency grants. Since Jean is now working elsewhere it will be necessary for her to do this work during hours convenient to her and I have asked her to work through a procedure which will guarantee prompt and accurate handling of financial data since this aspect of VEP is familiar to her. I am requesting all the staff to read through this procedure since it is conceivable that all of you may, at some time or another, have information to contribute to grant finances.

* * * * * * *

I. INCOMING MAIL.

A. Financial forms, vouchers, check carbons, etc., are to be returned to the envelope in which they were received and the envelope is to be date-stamped and given to WAB.

B. If letters are enclosed with above mailings which refer only to financial reporting they, too, are to be returned to original envelope, after date-stamping, and given to WAB.

C. If letters are received in VEP office which refer primarily to other activities (Research or Field) but contain any financial information whatsoever, a photocopy should be made, marked "Financial" in red pencil across top, and given to WAB.

II. NEW GRANTS AND SUPPLEMENTS.

When new grants and supplements to existing grants are made:

A. Three vouchers (an original and two carbons) are to be filled out with all specific information contained thereon. (Beginning and terminal dates; city and/or county (s) covered; amount, grant number and, of course, name of agency).

B. Distribution is as follows:

1. Original (signed by WAB) to RHA for check writing.
2. One carbon to proper project file folder.
3. One carbon to WAB.

III. VERBAL INFORMATION RECEIVED.

It is extremely important that all staff members make written notations regarding any financial information given them in oral communication and this notation is to be given to WAB.

RE: Telephone Conversation with the Rev. James Bevel (A Local Call)

I talked to day with the Rev. James Bevel about the Montgomery program, expressing to him the fact that VEP has never been entirely satisfied with our problems in that area, and that we were considering an intense examination of the community in an effort to try to come up with something that would possibly be more effective. I told him that we had stayed our plans because we were favorably impressed by what his group had done last month. Rev. Bevel indicated that they had not considered their effort any ringing success. He indicated that they could have gotten many more people registered if they had had more transportation, a matter that was left in the hands of Mr. Lewis.

Rev. Bevel stated that the MIA had found it necessary to relieve Mr. Lewis of his responsibilities as its registration man because he seemed at this time not to be unable to get beyond the matter of who the MIA will support in elections.

Rev. Bevel expressed regret about this because he said that as they moved around, they have found the people very responsive.

Bevel said that MIA had chosen Mrs. Idessa Wlliams to conduct its voter registration program, and that he believed that Mr. Lewis would not fight her because they have worked together for a number of years.

He said that his plan included recruiting a large number of students to do registration work, indicating that they were having considerable success in this regard.

I am to talk with Rev. Bevel this afternoon in detail about these plans. I will then go over to Montgomery and make an onthe scene investigation.

Re: Telephone Conversation with Dr. T. Y. Rogers, Jr.

Dr. T. Y. Rogers, Jr., Executive Secretary, Tuscaloosa Citizens for Action Committee, was contacted on this date. Dr. Rogers indicted that there was a biracial negotiating committee currently engaged in trying to solve the problems which precipitated the demonstrations. He felt that they would be successful and stated that demonstrations had been halted. He stated that the suit requesting an injunction to restrain city officials from interfering with demonstrations is scheduled to be heard next week. He felt that whether the injunction was granted or not, demonstrations were definitely not a part of the plans for the moment. He strongly indicated that in the event demonstrations are resumed, he definitely would not be a participant. He indicated that he will be in charge of the voter registration campaign, and recognized the need to keep the two activities, direct action and voter registration, separate and distinct. He expressed the feeling that the problems in Tuscaloosa had to be attacked from varied angles, and felt the demonstrations had served both to dramatize their plight and to motivate Negro citizens. His plan is to capitalize on the interest created during the direct action and use it in the voter registration campaign.

Regarding the effect of the recent demonstrations, Dr. Rogers felt they would have not adverse effect on the attitude of the Board of Registrars. He went on to say that during April when few people applied, they had no difficulty. In May, when Negroes stood in long lines waiting to be registered, various slowing tactics were employed by the registrars. The office was sometimes closed early and the vouchersystem was rigidly enforced. It was his feeling that the number of Negroes who apply for registration influences the Board more than any other factor.

I neglected to ask Dr. Rogers to send you a letter, per your request, confirming the information contained in this memo. However, I was impressed by the deliberate and seemingly sincere manner in which he expressed himself. He appreciates the concern about his being involved in direct action while conducting a voter registration campaign.

These look good. Two comments:

(1) My guess is you will have a hard enough time getting data on one back election and one 1964 election. These forms seem to be asking for data on every election during this period.

(2) I don't understand why form #2 asks for the same information as form #1.

In trying to evaluate the fruits of VEP, we are in great need of registration and voting figures. We are chiefly concerned with the impact of VEP on the outcome of primary and general elections. It is necessary to compare figures after* ~~1961~~ 1962 with those prior to 1962 in order to evaluate our progress. Therefore, we will need figures from 1962 to 1964. We need figures for all primaries and elections--state, local, congressional and presidential.

Re: Summary Memo on Messrs. Brown and Robinson of CORE

The following events drawn from memos as dated will reflect our efforts to cause Brown and Robinson to organize local organizations in the 5th and 6th congressional districts. While there does exist organization in these areas, it cannot be said that they are responsible. I believe that both of these men know the desirability of such organization, which causes me to question their ability to this kind of organizing. I do feel that once the organization is put together, they can monitor it in the absence of any personality blocks.

RTB

RTB:js

August 8, 1963

August 3, in the city of Newberry, I met with Mr. Frank Robinson and Mr. E. Brown, the coordinators for the CORE program in South Carolina. CORE is assigned all of the 5th and 6th congressional districts, as well as Clarendon County in the 1st, Sumpter County in the 2nd, and Spartanburg in the 4th congressional districts.

I was told in great detail of the plans that these men have for these 18 counties assigned to them. Aside from Williamsburg County and Spartanburg County, I was not able to find information of any organized effort of the kind we need being made.

There is no question about the time that these men are putting into their work, but I do question that this assignment ought to be re-evaluated.

Mr. Robinson reported to me the breakthrough in Williamsburg County (Kingstree). July 5, 96 citizens applied for registration,-and 65 were successful as compared with May, in which 238 applied, and only 16 were successful.

It is now time to begin to pin this operation down.

I shall, unless advised otherwise, request of Mr. Robinson that he supply us with a list of the people that he is working with in each of the 18 counties assigned to CORE. This, I would like to have before I finish my county-by-county visits in South Carolina.

October 16, 1963

October 4, I went into Sumter, South Carolina, to argue with Frank Robinson and Edward Brown about the CORE program in the 5th and 6th congressional districts. This turned out to be a very reqarding visit. Somehow, it appars that in all of our previous conversations, Frank had not fully understood the basis of my great concern about this program. He had assumed that the reports that he had been sending to New York had been coming down to us in Atlanta. We had not gotten his reports, and thus I had assumed that very little was being done. We were both pleasantly shocked when we learned the source of our problem. Frank showed me some of the reports that he had sent to the national office. An abstract of his August report is attached here. Frank promised that he will, in the future, let us have copies of his reports direct.

I was particularly delighted to find that Mr. Robinson and Mr. Brown are taking seriously the insistance upon their developing local leadership. It will suffice for this report to say that we are pleased with t the progress that has been made in this regard. The contact list, here attached, reflects to some extent, the nature of the work being done in the business of developing local leadership.

May 11, 1964

In Sumpter, I visited with Mr. Ed Brown and Mr. Frank Robinson. In this regard, we were interested in checking to see how these men viewed their relationship with the 5th congressional district leaders in light of the fact that Mr. Haile had indicated some displeasure with these individuals as district coordinatore.

Mr. Robinson was, as usual, emphasing what people will not do rather than what they will do. Robinson contended that Mr. Haile is a "Johnny-Come-Lately" to voter registration, seeking only an increase in his personal status and influence. He suggested that Mr.Haile is a very thin-skinned person who wants you to pay him a lot of personal attention.

Robinson said that he felt that successful work might have to be accomplished by by-passing the local leadership. It was interesting to note that he (Robinson) did not have an organized plan of by-pass. I continue to be impressed with the fact that Brown and Robinson always seem to dwell on the negatives rather than the positive aspect of everything. At one time, it may have been effective motivation to paint the ugliest possible picture; however, I am not sure about this technique for the present.

Robinson and I went from Sumpter to Florence to attend the 6th congressional district meeting.

CONFIDENTIAL

MEMORANDUM by WAB

Re: The Halifax Voter Project (VEP 4-14)

On Monday, June 29, 1964, WAB was visited by Rev. Dunlap and Mr. A. Reed Johnson of Enfield, North Carolina. Barbara Whitaker sat in on the conference.

WAB had expressed serious concern regarding the participating by John Salter and SCEF in the Halifax County area, and had held several discussions with the VEP staff regarding the problems which might arise over Salter. WAB had seen an article in the Baltimore Afro-American concerning voter registration in Halifax County, and it was apparently released to the press by Salter. The article implied that Salter and SCEF were actively involved in the registration program, and it made no mention of the local leadership of the Halifax voter movement. WAB sent a copy of the article to A. Reed Johnson, leader of the Halifax voter movement, to inquire as to his opinion regarding such publicity, and while Johnson replied to the letter, he did not really answer the question.

RTB subsequently made a visit to Enfield, and learned that Johnson would like to come to Atlanta and talk with WAB in person, and this was the purpose of the June 29 meeting. Although Johnson denied that either he or the Halifax voter movement was under the influence of John Salter, the following facts stand out:

1. John Salter appeared on the scene suddenly during the demonstrations in Enfield several months ago, and remained to help in organizing the local community.

2. Salter has worked very actively in the total program of the Halifax movement, and is highly regarded by the leadership and apparently has done a very good job.

3. When the registration books opened in May, and there was a slow-down in the registrar's office, it was John Salter who suggested that an injunction be sought, and his recommendation was followed.

4. When the question of legal counsel came up, Salter suggested that he could get lawyers to come in, and Morton Stavis of New Jersey came down and obtained the injunction. There was no discussion or agreement regarding the payment of lawyer's fees or expenses by the Halifax voter movement. Johnson states that he wired the Justice Department and state officials and got no response regarding instructions to the law suit being filed. Stavis obtained results in his law suit, and the effect of the injunction was felt in other counties.

5. A. Reed Johnson's wife was fired from her school teaching job, and again he turned to John Salter for advice, and Salter obtained the services of Kunstler, Kunstler, and Kinoy of New York, and they filed a suit against the School Board.

From the above, it was apparent that John Salter strongly influences the activities of the Halifax voter movement, and it is quite possible that Johnson and the others are too closely involved to realize the influence theyaare under. Johnson wants VEP to support a summer project which will involve a number of citizenship schools. WAB felt that this is something that SCLC could support from their separate Field Foundation grant, but agreed to consider any proposal which the Halifax movement wanted to submit. The books will not reopen in Halifax County until October, and WAB said he would consider another grant during the actual period of registration in view of the tremendous results which were achieved in May.

Johnson inquired as to whether or not VEP would reimburse Dunlap and him for travel expenses to Atlanta, and WAB authorized Johnson to reimburse themselves from their VEP grant in the total amount of $148.98. It appears that they do not have this much money left in the grant, and upon receipt of an up-to-date financial report, WAB agreed to send a supplemental grant of approximately $100 to the Halifax movement so as to enable them to take care of the transportation bills.

STAFF MEETING MINUTES

Attended by: Wiley A. Branton, Randolph T. Blackwell, and Barbara J. Whitaker

WAB opened the meeting by stating that he had talked with Jesse Hill that morning, and he told him that there was going to be a program on the 30th honoring the people who had worked in the Atlanta registration campaign. Mr. Hill had called to find out if he could prepare and make a speech for the occasion. He said that he would have a number of speakers to get up and say something at the gathering. No commitment has been made as yet. (Hill)

WAB said that Mr. Hill mentioned that he was going to try to get some neighborhood registration started, and he feels that VEP should support this effort.

NAACP Convention: WAB brought the staff up-to-date on his attendance at the NAACP convention held in Washington June 21-26. He said that this trip was very profitable because he got a chance to talk with many people working in voter registration, among them Hugh Love, some people from Memphis, Brown and Newman from South Carolina, and others. He said that he attended two workshops, one of which included Ruby Hurley's district. He also said that he met privately with people from Virginia who are interested in voter registration in the Eighth Congressional District. RTB asked WAB who it was he talked with from the Eighth District, and he answered that the individual was Dr. Harris. WAB mentioned that he had talked with Lester Banks, and with Johnny Brooks. Banks contributed very little to the conversation, he added.

The South Carolina Voter Projects: A discussion of the various reports we have received from the South Carolina districts then followed.

WAB said that we had received a report from Florence, S. C., from Dr. Beck, Sixth Congressional District, and asked BW re her notation on the report which said, "Let's discuss it." BW said that this notation was made because of the fact that Dr. Beck's and Robinson and Brown's reports do not coincide. She says that she has written to Robinson and Brown asking them to clarify the matter, but to date, has received no reply.

A discussion of Mr. McCain's district, the Third, followed. WAB asked RTB to put into a memo the fact that the two McCain's are not related, so that there will be no question from the Treasury Department. RTB made a brief report on the area in question. In regard to the questions about the vouchers, he says he found nothing out of order. It was just that the people in charge used a different terminology than we are accustomed to, to explain their expenditures.

Bearden, of the Fourth District, has reported to WAB that no money has been spent by his project as yet.

Haile, Fifth District, asked if he could hire a full-time secretary, in a letter written to WAB. He says that the work load has increased so that this is a necessity. RTB commented that the work in his district did not require such additional employment.

In further discussion, it was agreed among WAB, RTB, and BW, that Haile wants to be in the position to supervise Brown and Robinson's activities. WAB asked RTB and BW their opinions as to whether it should be stated again what was to be expected in the way of reporting. BW brought out the fact that the requirements of the program they are running have already been set out in the initial letters to Haile, and this should be unnecessary. It was agreed, however, that we should inform them that we need a narrative report fiving information for the month, and that the statistical reporting should be left with one person, since it is obvious that Brown and Robinson have not been supplying us with reliable information, and we have instances to substantiate this. It was further decided that if we desire, these two are to stay on as field workers, but that we should be firm as to what w we expect of them from here on out. RTB was asked by WAB to relate in a separate memo the progress or lack of same, of Robinson and Brown, in terms of the Fifth and Sixth districts. (See RTB's memo dated 6/26/64 re this.) WAB says that in view of these events, there is apparently no communication between Haile, Robinson, and Brown. RTB interjetted that there is some communication between Beck, Robinson and Brown, however.

WAB said that he would call McCain concerning this problem tomorrow (6/26). WAB said that he feels the only solution to the problem is to give a supplemental grant to Haile's and Beck's programs to hire directors, and give CDRE a nominal grant to carry Robinson and Brown to the end of theyyear.

WAB mentioned that Dr. Thomas (Dr. C. H.), of Orangeburg, S. C., sent in a fiscal report which included an item of payment to a Mr. Zimmerman for advertisement and another for secretarial hell which included "honorarium." He says that he will take this matter up with Dr. Thomas himself.

WAB also brought up the matter of $1,688 being requested by the American Friends Service Committee for a program, which he rejected, and now Dr. Thomas has the Committee coming into that area. WAB said that he felt that after reviewing the matter entirely, he would still have to stick to his original decision. RTB agreed. This group had asked for $6,000 for a three-month program, when $6,000 was previously asked for from June to December.

Other Reports: WAB said that we had received reports from Eastern North Carolina, one of which he thought was very good on SCLC, but he said he wondered who prepared it. He asked BW to check into this.

In discussing Q. D. Adams of the Citizens Improvement League, he feels that he should have put the project on a $100 a month budget, in view of the activities of that group. They only registered 33 persons in June.

WAB said that the film, "Right Now" was ready, and that he would get a letter off telling Newman to send our copies here. It was understood that if we want a trailer, we will have to do it ourselfes.

A discussion of the John Salter-A. Reed Johnson situation followed. The memo on RTB's reaction to this [illegible] entitled, "Field Trips to South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia." His comments re his visits to these areas are also contained herein.

BW asked what we plan to do about the Georgia situation. WAB said that we will let the agencies know we are willing to renew projects, especially where we have had successful operaions and coopeaation.

RTB asked if we had heard from Idessa Williams and Secozy Williams in Montgomery. WAB said that he had had a letter from Andy Young, and that he didn't know whether Andy was suggestin g that we give a direct grant to Tuscaloosa, or to SCLC, but that he(WAB) would rather give the money to SCLC so as to have financial reporting coming from Edwina, who keeps up with these matters pretty well.

Probable programs in Atlanta, Rome, Fort Valley, and surrounding [illegible] came up in the discussion in a spot-check manner, and it was agreed that programs in most of these communities would get favorable consideration if outlines were submitted.

With all of the current business completed, the meeting was ended.

Will you please read over the entire VEP Annual Report and check for errors. If you are satisfied with it then please give to B. Stewart to cut the stencils (letter size).

Jean Levine will bring the financial report which is to be included and which will also require a stencil.

The statistics(VEP Results) which I gave you to figure a percentage column will also be included. I would like for this to be a one page (the VEP results) deal if possible as we will probably send out many more copies of it than we will the annual report, although that page will form a part of the report. We will also make a cover page similiar to the one used last year and an index would be helpful.

TO: J. SHORTT

Please prepare the cover sheet and index page for the Annual Report. BS could start numbering the Report with page 1 where the "Background Statement" appears as any statistics or financial information can form an appendix. If you and BS could get the stencils cut and proof read this week then we could run it off Monday.

I noticed an error on the Arkansas Report which I am taking with me. The percent Negro of the total registration for Craighead County should read "1.9", not 19.0 . Make a note to change this (by hand) on your other copies. I will change the ones I have.

From: MMJ

As you all know, LWD will be away from the office on vacation for three (3) weeks, beginning Monday, August 10. He has expressed a desire not to talk with anyone unless it is ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY. Therefore, he has asked that the following procedure be adhered to during his absence:

LWD will call into the office about twice a week. He will call person-to-person to MJ who will talk with him only when a matter is so urgent that it cannot wait until his return, or only if the matter cannot be handled by another staff person. He has asked me to ask you to inform me in advance (each day) that you would like to talk with him, but only should you request to talk with him unless the matter about which you will talk is equally as urgent. If when he calls and MJ has been so informed, and if in her judgment the matter needs to be brought to LWD's attention, she will accept the call; otherwise the operator will be told that MJ is away from the office and the call will be ~~xxxx~~ canceled.

LWD is at home today, but will be leaving town tomorrow. Anyone who needs to be in touch with him before he gets out of town should call him at home today.

RE: Special Bank Account

It appears that VEP will be getting a large number of requests for small amounts for crash registration and education programs prior to certain deadlines in the various states. It takes several days to get voucher checks printed, and it is difficult for many people to follow our financial instructions. I also note a tendency on the part of some projects to "spend up" their funds because of the feeling that VEP is going out of business.

I have therefore decided that VEP should open a special account to handle some of the grants which we are likely to make in the future to some of the independent agencies. I am therefore setting up a bank account at Citizens Trust Company under the following name: Southern Voter Project. Any two of the following persons will have to sign all checks written on this account: Ruth Alexander, Jean Levine, Vernon Jordon, and Wiley Branton. The procedure which we intend to pursue is as follows: When I have approved a grant to an individual agency and am of the opinion that it would be best to handle the grant through our special account described above, I will prepare a voucher request that a check be issued to "Southern Voter Project" in lieu of the normal procedure of making it to the recipient. The check will then be deposited in our special account. The participating agency will be given a special voucher form on which requests will be submitted for checks to be issued to certain designated payees. Upon receipt of the voucher from the participating agency, VEP will then write a check on our special account, and send it tothe payee or agency. Checks will only be written in payment of proper expenditures in accordance with an approved budget. A copy of each check written will be filed in a separate financial file for each agency, and a copy will be kept in a master file for the special account.

We probably will have to send a small petty cash fund to each agency, but VEP will retain control of most of the funds.

RE: Plaquemine Louisiana Report

I have previously discussed with you in person some of the contents of your report of August 30, 1963, regarding your report concerning your visit to Plaquemine, Louisiana, on August 14.

I admire your candor in setting forth in detail your observations, participation or involvement in local situations where you have gone on VEP trips and without the honesty of your own reports I probably would not have reason to be so concerned about some of your actions.

I shudder at the thought of the "suggestions" which you made at the meeting as referred to on page 4. As a policy matter, VEP staff members simply should not make any suggestions regarding demonstrations of any kind, including those having to do with voter registration activities, particularly where arrests are likely to result.

I do not say that VEP staff members should not attend these meetings if they care to but where there is activity relating to demonstrations of any kind then VEP staff members should do nothing more than observe the proceedings and they should not become involved in the discussions pertaining to the demonstrations.

The Southern Regional Council believes these two editorials, from centers of Deep South resistance to civil rights, are thoughtful and important expressions from states recently troubled by race violence and faced with desegregation court rulings. The STATE TIMES editorial is one of a series on Mississippi race problems, inviting public discussion, which appeared also in the MCCOMB ENTERPRISE JOURNAL.

The editorial from the BIRMINGHAM NEWS appeared shortly after a court decision had been handed down. However, the city of Birmingham may respond to this decision, the editorial is still pertinent and deserves thoughtful study throughout the Deep South.

A Positive Plan To Help Solve Our Racial Dilemma

By OLIVER EMMERICH

The citizens of the State of Mississippi are confronted with this question: Do we want to be constructive in coping with our disturbing racial situation?

If the answer is in the affirmative then two conclusions appear to be reasonable. First, the racial dilemma in Mississippi will grow worse, not better, unless we meet it with a forthright sense of maturity. Second, positive action, not mere negation, is essential if our conflicts are to be met with mature judgment.

Twice within this decade the State of Mississippi applied positive action and reaped the benefits of success. Positive action was evinced in the legislative decision to equalize white and Negro teachers' salaries. Positive action was applied in the legislature's decision to spend 150 million dollars for needed class rooms—95 millions going to Negro schools and 55 millions to white schools.

Herewith we submit four additional positive steps—steps which if taken by the State of Mississippi can contribute much to the solution of our impending problems.

—I—

The sword of Damocles that dangles over Mississippi is the threat of what can happen as a result of the mass voting of illiterate and untutored individuals. Our people are as apprehensive over this threat as were the citizens of Galveston on the eve of hurricane Carla. This fear stems from earlier Mississippi history when Negroes, untutored in the responsibilities of citizenship, voted en masse and became easy prey of unscrupulous white men—politicians who used them for selfish designs and bankrupted our government.

The negative pattern applied generally in Mississippi today is stimulating rather than inhibiting this ominous threat. Anti-franchise efforts founded essentially in race serve only to stimulate bloc voting. The positive step is to remove the impediments to qualified Negroes who want to vote. Qualified voters, regardless of race, recognize the handicap to good government through the unrestricted voting of the unqualified. By removing the impediments to qualified Negroes we reduce the danger of mass voting of the unqualified.

Where shall we start with this emphasis on qualified voters? The answer: Our school boards of trustees at the local level, sanctioned by the State Department of Education at the state level, should at the time of employment make it clear to all teachers, white and colored, that they are free from impediments to franchise—and that if a teacher is not qualified to vote he or she is not qualified to teach.

—II—

The abundance of unskilled labor in Mississippi, white and colored, constitutes a tragedy. This is why our state has the lowest per capita income of any state in the Union.

The mechanization of Mississippi farms and the switch from row crops to pastures have thrown thousands of farm workers out of employment. This has been partially offset in this decade through Mississippi's acquisition of 927 new and expanded industries which has created 75,901 new industrial jobs.

The positive step in this area is for Mississippi to make an all-out, sympathetic effort to find gainful employment for our white and colored people.

Where shall we start? It is suggested that the Mississippi Agricultural and Industrial Board appoint a committee of its membership to earnestly survey this situation. It is a problem of education, planning and dedication—but progress can be made in a state-wide effort, substantiated with research, and purposed to improve upon the job opportunities of our people, white and colored.

—III—

A third positive step should be made in the field of court justice. There are many excellent jurists in Mississippi, men who preside over our courts with dignity and justice. Nevertheless, there are recorded cases of injustice resulting from the pressure of racial feeling.

The positive approach to this problem demands that our courts abandon the double standard of justice—one standard for whites, another for Negroes. Admittedly, this double standard of justice has worked two ways. It has caused injustices to some Negro defendants. On the other hand many judges have been lenient with Negroes and after taking many factors into consideration, have given them lighter sentences as compared with similar offenses by white defendants.

How shall Mississippi initiate this positive step? The answer: The Mississippi State Bar Association is an ethical and respected professional organization. It is suggested that the Mississippi Bar Association name a special committee to survey this situation. If the field is properly explored an answer can be found by which court justice can be enlarged upon for Negro people.

—IV—

The emotional reaction to racial disturbances has caused many of our people to view one another with distrust and suspicion. Frustration is general—and we cannot solve our problems in an atmosphere of frustration.

Communications must be established between the white and Negro leaders of Mississippi. This positive step is necessary because our problem is not of short duration. Long after the courts have handed down their legal opinions in this field the problems will still be with us. As the years unfold Negro people will recognize that their future is tied closely to the white citizenry of our state and our white citizens will recognize that the Negro is an essential factor in our economy.

This fourth positive step will not be easy It will require a wealth of patience, courage and wisdom.

And where shall we start? It is suggested that Gov. Ross Barnett use the prestige of his office and cooperate with the mayors of our municipalities and other local leaders—and that unofficial bi-racial committees be named at the local level to work with these problems. Vital to the success of this step is that sound-thinking, level-headed people be appointed to these committees.

Time and understanding are the ingredients essential to the adjustment of negation. And so far negation has plunged our state deeper into misunderstanding and frustration.

The editorial below confronts a question before many cities of the South. Although Southern Regional Council does not agree with some of the opinions in it, we regard this as an honest, able statement which should be widely read.

DESEGREGATING, PERMITTING "a little mixing" if Negroes insist on intruding, or closing public facilities is no longer Atlanta's or Nashville's or New Orleans' problem. It is now Birmingham's, too.

The ruling of Judge Hobart Grooms of federal district court here affecting parks, swimming pools and a number of other specifically defined facilities, was expectable.

Judge Grooms seemed to go out of his way to emphasize that his ruling was not something over which he had judicial latitude. He cited previous rulings of both the U. S. Supreme Court and the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Ruled unconstitutional was section 859 of the Birmingham City Code. It embraces a number of facilities "to which both white and Negro persons are admitted."

The city has said it will appeal. If the appeal is carried through, it will go to the Fifth Circuit Court, decision of which Judge Grooms cited as a basis for his ruling. In short, the appeals court has already made a decision in a similar case.

IT WILL DO no good to try to find a rosy side to the issue. It is entirely likely that if the appeals court elected to review the case, judgment would uphold Judge Grooms. It is hardly conceivable otherwise when Judge Grooms himself cited the appeals court as basis for his own decision.

Some aspects of the case remain unclear in the public mind and may be unclear in the minds of legal authorities. These could involve the matter of such as Legion Field or the Municipal Auditorium, which are leased for specific games or presentations.

The legal question of leasing in connection with publicly-owned facilities is arguable. There have been previous cases elsewhere involving leasing. Outcome of further contest on the leasing aspect could be open to legal debate. In the last, courts have sought to assess relationship of use of the facility leased to its public ownership. Leasing to avoid race mixing has not stood up. But leasing over many years with such aim not even considered is something else. The right of private management has entered into debate in some such cases, and has been upheld in instances even though private leasing was of publicly-owned facilities. Here a great deal depends on the nature of the leasing.

IF IT IS assumed that Judge Grooms' ruling will stand, and that is a reasonable assumption in light of similar cases, no matter how much the ruling is regretted it has to be faced.

Birmingham citizens are up against a very real question in their own front yards. Anger at a small group of Negroes pushing for such a court order is more than understandable. It is undoubtedly true, in The News' opinion, that very few Negroes really want to mix in swimming pools or on playgrounds, or elsewhere, with whites.

But passion or logic in judging what most Negroes may or may not want does not alter the need for Birmingham citizens to look closely at the matter. Decisions they now make may be long-lasting. They could seriously, and adversely, affect this city for years to come.

It is a time for the coldest kind of thinking. We can't afford anger at a mix move by an out and out Negro propagandist. We should not let ourselves come up with hasty, poorly-thought-out answers to the problem.

THE PUBLIC FACILITIES involved for both Negroes and whites have been built up in our city over many years. Parks, playgrounds, pools, auditorium, art museum—all cost enormous sums. If closed, what a terrible waste they would be—silent wastelands, or mausoleums shuttered and barred. Negroes would suffer along with whites.

The recreational, the cultural, the normal life of this active city would be drastically, painfully altered.

This is what Birmingham citizenry must think about before it makes a decision.

There is talk of the city selling facilities now affected, or which could be affected. Such sale could be contested. There is a possibility courts might not allow such sale if the purpose was to avoid compliance with previous order. This has come up elsewhere and there is basis for concern as to whether such a maneuver would, in the end, work.

Citizens of Birmingham finally must face a simple enough question: Do they want their public parks, playgrounds, pools, the auditorium, possibly the art museum and a number of other facilities closed in order to prevent compliance with the court order?

CITY OFFICIALS in some utterances have seemed to assume that this is the wish of a majority of the people. This may be a correct assumption. It is obvious a vast majority of Birmingham residents want to preserve segregation. But they have not yet had to face the question whether they want to prevent any integration at cost of closing public facilities.

It is certain that absence in Birmingham of public parks, playgrounds, pools, an auditorium and other facilities for recreation and cultural development would enter consideration of business enterprises in the future which might be considering this city as a location. Birmingham citizens already are feeling the bitter lack of business growth and job dislocations.

It is certain that we would, possibly for years, have to live with the decision which now must be made—and it must be made, there is no longer any escaping it.

AT PRESENT the three elected city commissioners and the mayor-elect have this terrible burden solely on their backs. It would be helpful if in this time of trouble these officials could have the fullest expression of public opinion. They need to know how Birmingham citizens feel.

Some have suggested a referendum might be a desirable method of learning what is Birmingham public sentiment—both white and Negro—as to closing of parks, etc. Such action might help Birmingham officials in deciding issues before them.

The matter is no longer something for abstract thought. Opinions which do not specifically help come to wise decisions are a luxury we cannot afford. Passion is no good. Anger leads nowhere.

Birmingham has to think as coldly and as precisely as does the surgeon at the operating table. A life may be at stake. It could be Birmingham's.

Richmond Quietly Leads Way in Race Relations

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

RICHMOND—In 1957, Editor Virginius Dabney of the Richmond Times-Dispatch wrote with accuracy and a heavy heart: "The tragic fact is today that hardly any liaison remains between the white leadership and the Negro leadership."

A year later, Editor James Jackson Kilpatrick of the Richmond News Leader wrote with his typical fiery zeal: "Speaking for those of like mind, let us say this: We do not yield. We do not expect to yield ever."

Dabney's lament and Kilpatrick's proclamation were voiced in the troubled days of "massive resistance" in Virginia and general defiance in the South of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. Their views reflected the situation then in Richmond, where traditional moderation, understanding and well-mannered discussion in race relations had been shelved.

Yet today, the progress that has been made in desegregation and non-discrimination in Richmond is one of the exciting racial stories in the South. Its pace astonishes many Richmonders, white and Negro.

Key to the Council

THE NEGRO VOTE, once the kiss of death, now is an asset; no candidate for City Council can afford to offend it and expect to win. The City has adopted a fair employment policy in municipal jobs, unique in the South, and Negro Richmonders have better job opportunities than ever before.

Negroes may stop at several formerly white-only hotels and dine at several formerly white-only restaurants. Some 130 Negro children, probably more, will be attending formerly white-only classes when the public schools reopen this fall.

Perhaps nowhere else in the country, certainly nowhere else in the South, do Negroes use their vote with more sophistication than in Richmond. It wasn't always so.

Not many years ago, the Negro vote in Richmond was a commodity to be purchased on the sly by white politicians from Negro salesmen who claimed they could deliver the goods. Public endorsement of a candidate by Negroes meant disaster, a fact used cleverly by more than one politician who would circulate a spurious Negro endorsement of his opponent.

During the days of massive resistance and accompanying racial rancor, Negroes tried "single-shot" voting for Negro candidates in City Council campaigns. But these candidates got only that vote and went down to defeat.

The Heberle Case

BUT THINGS changed in 1960 with the emergence of the Crusade for Voters, headed by intellectual Negro leaders. Abandoned was the single-shot technique. Instead, the Crusade examined each candidate for City Council and endorsed a full slate of nine candidates. The change was dramatic, as the case of Councilman Robert J. Heberle shows.

In 1957, Councilman Heberle urged Richmond to withdraw its financial aid to the Virginia National Guard in retaliation for the federalization of the Arkansas National Guard during the Little Rock crisis. In 1958, when President Eisenhower requested public officials to comply with the Supreme Court's school decision, Heberle, as Vice Mayor at that time, fired back a letter of refusal. In 1959, Councilman Heberle advocated that Richmond cut off local funds to any school that became desegregated.

By 1960, therefore, the Crusade for Voters viewed Heberle as an ardent segregationist and he was not among the slate of candidates it endorsed in the City Council elections that year. The 37 per cent of the vote that Heberle got wasn't enough for his re-election.

A Shrewd Demonstration

AFTER TWO YEARS out of office Heberle announced his candidacy for City Council in the June elections this year. He promised to serve and work for all the citizens. He gave his wholehearted support to the City Council's fair employment resolution, which had been approved unanimously shortly before the election.

With a touch of political genius, the Crusade for Voters endorsed Heberle and he led the field of 25 candidates with 51 per cent of the vote. The lesson was clear. The Negroes had bounced a segregationist from the Council, then returned him when he repented.

Lack of the Crusade's support in 1960 also knocked veteran Councilman Phil J. Bagley, Jr. from office. He was returned to the Council this June, however, without the Crusade's endorsement. Yet he still was to feel the influence of the Negro vote.

In Richmond, a new City Council elects the mayor from among its members, and the new Council in June was deadlocked: four votes for Bagley, four votes for Heberle and one vote for Eleanor P. Sheppard. The Crusade leadership said the Negroes would be displeased if Bagley were elected mayor.

On the 25th ballot, Mrs. Sheppard became the first woman mayor in the city's history. She had been endorsed by the Crusade.

Some Clever Timing

LED AND EDUCATED by the Crusade's leadership of Negro professional and businessmen and faculty members of Virginia Union College, about 8000 Negro voters went to the polls in June, two-thirds of the qualified Negro voters in the city. Some 14,000 white Richmonders voted, perhaps one-third of the qualified white voters.

The Crusade didn't announce its endorsements until just before election day, so the candidates worked to win the Negro vote right up to the deadline. The Crusade's selections included members of the two rival tickets, so one ticket wasn't tempted to use Negro support as an issue against the other.

Seven of the nine Council winners had received the Crusade's endorsement. The two losing endorsees came in 10th and 11th. No. 10 was a Negro. Another Negro candidate without the Crusade's endorsement came in 20th.

Negro Richmonders have matured as a political force. They also have matured in the use of their economic power.

The Richmond Citizens Advisory Council was formed by representatives of 36 primarily Negro organizations 18 months ago to help Virginia Union students who had participated in sit-in demonstrations in Richmond department stores and restaurants. Even before the RCAC asked for funds, the Negro community raised $14,000 for that purpose.

The responsibility of the RCAC leadership was shown early when some Negro pickets at a department store carried signs offensive to Jews. RCAC leaders told the Negroes to remove such signs at once or the RCAC would withdraw its support of the picketing. Down came the signs.

Boycotting of the Miller & Rhoads and Thalhimer's department stores undoubtedly was effective. Shopping excursions to Washington stores were organized by the Negroes.

One of the RCAC leaders is J. Rupert Picott, executive secretary of the Virginia Teachers Association (Negro). He advised a Richmond hotel that teachers attending a VTA meeting would try to register at the hotel. The hotel management said it would prefer that the registrants be integrated rather than all-Negro —so some white teachers from northern Virginia came to Richmond and registered at the hotel, too.

Last year, the RCAC went into negotiations with the Virginia Transit Co., a private company with a municipal franchise that operates Richmond's buses, over the hiring of the first Negro bus drivers. Progress was slow. Finally, the Negroes indicated that a bus boycott might be called.

The transit firm then agreed to hire Negro drivers if the RCAC would postpone any action until after the company took up a new rate schedule with the City Council. The RCAC waited.

On March 5, four Negro applicants supplied by the Richmond Urban League began their training with the VTC. They began driving buses April 1.

Negotiations also have gained Negroes jobs as food checkers in chain supermarkets. The RCAC was surprised to learn that meat cutters in the back rooms, jobs sometimes available to Negroes, paid more than the food checkers, but they wanted Negroes as checkers because they are visible to the buying public, a symbol of progress that can be seen.

One of the remaining uncracked fields of segregation in Richmond is the motion picture theaters. Here the Negroes have no ready economic weapon because they haven't been admitted to the white-only theaters in the past and thus can't withhold their patronage now.

Negotiations are under way. It is felt that the theater owners are awaiting the outcome of a pending suit by Negroes against the Mosque and Parker Field.

The colorful Mosque is the city-owned auditorium which is leased to sponsoring organizations. The lease calls for adherence to the state law requiring segregated seating.

In fact, segregation at the Mosque is spottily enforced. Some "Twist Nights" in the Mosque ballroom have been integrated; operatic and symphonic presentations are generally segregated. In any event, Negroes are contesting the state segregated seating law.

Also segregated is Parker Field, the city-owned baseball park leased to the Richmond Virginians, the International League farm club of the New York Yankees. Negro baseball fans must sit in Section 16.

Negroes are testing the state law to force desegregation at Parker Field and it is likely that the baseball management hopes privately that they win. It would nourish the boxoffice if the fans now easily accommodated in Section 16 swelled to such numbers as to overflow several sections.

Negro leaders good-humoredly tell the story of an injured Negro player on the Virginians' team who didn't suit up for a recent game and sat in a white section to watch it. The player refused to move at the request of an attendant who then called a policeman. Recognizing the player, the policeman said he would have to move to the Negro section unless he put on his uniform.

THE PROGRESS of the Negro in Richmond must be credited in part to the rise of firm, responsible and sophisticated Negro leadership which speaks softly and carries a big stick of political and economic power by commanding the support of the Negro community. But white Richmond and its leadership must also be credited for its good will and understanding.

The top academic senior this year at the Medical College of Virginia was Charles Fletcher Christian, 37, a Negro. But neither he nor the five other Negroes in the graduating class of 88 were sent invitations to the social functions of graduation week-end.

MCV President R. Blackwell Smith Jr. said the exclusion policy was designed "to conform to the social customs of the community." When MCV professors heard about it they voted 70 to 14 against such exclusion. The senior class petitioned the college administration to change the policy.

THE RICHMOND Times-Dispatch said editorially that it was only right for the Negroes to be invited. It also asked understanding of the MCV officials involved. "Like most other Virginians, they have had to adjust their thinking to the changing times," it said.

The Richmond News Leader, while noting that it wasn't yielding in its opposition to school desegregation, said that the Negroes should be invited. "Any other policy is indefensible," it declared.

The MCV executive committee ruled that the Negroes wouldn't be denied admission if they appeared. The policy now is under study and it's unlikely that Negroes will be excluded in the future.

COMPARISON OF the Negro Richmonder's lot today with that in the period of "massive resistance" causes astonishment in observers and participants alike. Yet the progress is not surprising in the light of Richmond's history of race relations before massive resistance.

The city led the South in bus desegregation and the employment of Negro policemen. A Negro won election to the City Council in 1948 with the help of white voters. City officials kept their offices open on Saturdays in 1947 to cooperate with a voter registration drive by the NAACP.

In 1951, the Virginia NAACP held an integrated convention at the Mosque and the city said, well, it's a private organization, and looked the other way. Back in 1925, the city suspended segregation ordinances and Jim Crow regulations when the Negro Elks held their national convention in Richmond.

SOME OBSERVERS see an end to the new political status of the Negro Richmonder if the city succeeds in annexing huge chunks of neighboring Henrico and Chesterfield Counties, reasoning that the white suburbanites would dilute the influence of the Negro vote. The annexation proceedings now are in court.

But others believe that the racial relations progress and the present era of increased racial understanding now have too solid a foundation to crumble. The 225-year-old city, a symbol of Virginia and the South, has turned a historic corner in race relations after a five-year detour.

It was in August, 1958, that the Richmond News Leader urged stubborn resistance to school desegregation as the zero hour neared in "massive resistance."

"Virginians," said the editorial, "are about to have an opportunity to demonstrate to the whole country—indeed, to the whole world—what it means to be a Virginian."

Today, Richmond is demonstrating what it means.

VEP SHOWS RESULTS AFTER FIRST NINETY DAYS

Mr. Wiley Branton, Director of SRC's Voter Education Project, states that the ninety day crash programs conducted by cooperating organizations in anticipation of fall elections have been concluded and the results are now being studied. The VEP will be shortly making long term grants to a number of organizations in the light of the experience gained this summer.

Among the more successful ninety day campaigns this summer were the Atlanta effort under the All Citizens Registration Committee, which netted 7,600 new voters; Durham, N.C., where 3,700 were added to the roles through the efforts of the Durham Committee on Negro Affairs and the Durham branch NAACP; Raleigh, N.C., where an NSA effort increased the number of registered voters by 1,600; and Sumter, S.C., where a CORE effort resulted in the registration of over 1,100 new voters.

The VEP initiated in August a special registration effort in Albany, Georgia, through assistance to the Albany Movement. As a result of this effort, 305 new voters were added to the roles in Albany during the last two weeks of August.

SRC EMPLOYS NEW RESEARCH DIRECTOR

Mr. Staige Blackford is on the job as new Research Director of SRC as of September 4. Most recently Assistant Director of the Louisiana State University Press, Mr. Blackford is a writer, an editor and contributor to various encyclopedias, and a former employee of Time, Inc.. A native of Virginia and a graduate of the University of Virginia, Mr. Blackford was a Rhodes Scholar.

THREE COUNCILS CLAIM MATCHING FUNDS

State Councils in Georgia, North Carolina, and Virginia have claimed all matching funds including supplemental funds, as of August. Other state Councils have until October 1 to meet requirements for matching funds.

During the first two quarters of the current fiscal year the state Councils on Human Relations raised from membership and contributions a total of $37,919. This compares with $30,554 during the similar period a year ago.

The Virginia Council on Human Relations was the top fund raiser during the first two quarters of this year with a total of $8,300. The Georgia Council was second with $6,200. The new Houston Council on Human Relations raised a total of $3,900, a commendable record for a fairly new organization operating in only one community.

OZELL SUTTON HONORED

Mr. Ozell Sutton, Associate Director of the Arkansas Council, was given the distinguished service award of the Arkansas Teachers Association by the District 7 Association. The award was in recognition of Mr. Sutton's work in connection with voter registration and other activities.

ATLANTA COUNCIL FETES DR. BUNCHE

Some 300 members and friends of the Atlanta Council on Human Relations honored Dr. Ralph Bunche at a special luncheon in Atlanta in July. Dr. Bunche spoke to the Council on "The Role of the Individual and the United Nations."

ALBANY STILL SIZZLES

Albany, Georgia, has been the major crisis area during the summer months. The Georgia Council has worked tirelessly in Albany trying to encourage negotiation, attempting to interpret the Albany Movement to the white community, helping to brief news media and other organizations on the situation.

In July, the GCHR sent an occupancy mailing to white residential areas in Albany. The letter brought considerable response from local citizens. Frances Pauley was harassed by nocturnal telephone calls for several weeks, the calls coming from Atlanta. A copy of the letter is appended to the Newsletter.

A local Council on Human Relations has recently been organized in Albany, pulling together concerned white persons and representatives of various Negro groups.

HOUSTON COUNCIL CIRCULATES READING LIST

The Houston Council on Human Relations has recently circulated a list of books for children, which are helpful to an understanding of good human relations. The reading list includes books designated for all age groups. It has been made available to educators and organizations and has been circulated through the Houston Library.

ACHR HOLDS BOARD WORKSHOP

Members of the Board of Directors of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations held a one day workshop June 23. The purpose of the workshop was to consider the role of the board member, to provide orientation for new board members, to provide an opportunity for board members to consider the procedure of "policy making."

NEW COUNCILS ORGANIZED

New local Councils on Human Relations have been formed in Brunswick, Georgia, and in Danville, Virginia.

The Chattanooga Community Relations Council has affiliated with the Tennessee Council on Human Relations.

A Community Relations Council is in organization in New Orleans.

WILLIAMS JOINS MIGRATION TO NORTH

Bill Williams has resigned as Director of the Florida Council on Human Relations and has accepted a position with the Illinois Commission on Human Relations, as of last month.

Bill's new address is in care of the Illinois Commission, 160 North LaSalle Street, Chicago 1, Illinois.

The FCHR is looking for a successor to Bill. Anyone knowing of a good candidate should contact SRC.

FILM ON MIGRATORY LABOR AVAILABLE

A one hour 16 mm. sound film, "Seeds of Progress," available at no charge other than mailing costs, has been recommended by the Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor and may be of interest to you. "Seeds of Progress," according to the Subcommittee release, "tells the story of the migrant who works in the fields of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, a story similar to that of the migrant anywhere in the United States. Expertly photographed and narrated, 'Seeds of Progress' is well suited to be shown either at a large conference or before a small group."

Inquiries should be directed to: Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor, G-237 New Senate Office Building, Washington, 25.

NEW GAINS IN THE CLASSROOM

This fall brought significant new gains in classroom desegregation in a number of states. Thirty-three new public school districts desegregated or will desegregate this fall. School opening has been generally peaceful, although there were demonstrations at several parochial schools in Louisiana.

Perhaps the most significant developments of this new school year were:

1. The desegregation of parochial schools. An estimated 150 Negro children are attending formerly white Catholic schools in Louisiana for the first time. 17 Negro children are now enrolled in 6 previously all white Catholic schools in Georgia. The progress in Georgia involved the Atlanta area, Marietta, and Athens.

2. The defense of tokenism as a means of containing desegregation has been abandoned or struck down in several important Southern communities. In Chapel Hill, N.C., students are being assigned to schools on a strictly geographical basis through the first six grades. In Charlotte, N.C., 413 Negro pupils were assigned to seven predominantly white schools. There were only 27 Negro students in formerly white schools in Charlotte last year. In New Orleans the number of Negro children in such schools is up from 12 to over 100.

3. As a result of federal court decisions in Memphis and New Orleans, the use of pupil placement plans as a means of limiting desegregation is in jeopardy. In New Orleans, the District Judge specifically ruled that the state pupil placement law could not be applied to pupil assignments until and unless dual school districts were abolished.

Community preparation to assist with peaceful desegregation of schools is becoming respectable and almost commonplace. In Chattanooga this fall, virtually every move that has been tried in any other city by way of avoiding difficulty was applied by the police, the mayor, the school board, business leaders, etc.. The community was fully, if quietly, conditioned to accept the inevitable with calm and dignity. In Pensacola, Fla., a School Assistance Committee brought together business, religious, civic and political leadership and planned carefully for the smooth and effective initiation of desegregation which occurred recently. Significantly, in both communities local officials accepted and solicited the help of human relations agencies in making preparations.

MAILING FROM GEORGIA COUNCIL TO ALBANY CITIZENS

July 30, 1962

Dear Friend:

Now in the extremity of misunderstanding and danger in Albany, when racial unrest disturbs the streets, threatens the prosperity and embarrasses Georgia before the country and the world, let us consider what Albany citizens of good will can do to permanently resolve the troubles.

The experience of other Georgia cities--Savannah, Macon, and Columbus, to name a few where white and colored neighbors have come to some agreement on Negro demands for their public rights--suggests several fruitful and reconciling steps which can be taken to help the city out of the impasse.

First, it seems clear that no Georgia community has come to any racial agreement without meetings, sympathetic talk and new understanding between whites and Negroes. Mistakes have been made by the Negro citizens--mistakes have been made by various interracial organizations yet the underlying principles are still there. Truth can be found through knowledge and understanding. Albanians can as individuals and as groups seek this truth.

Second, it is equally clear that Albany's present crisis hinges on the refusal of City Commissioners to meet with and discuss grievances of Negro citizens. These, the elected officials are responsible for the just conduct of public affairs--Mayor Asa D. Kelley, Jr., Buford Collins, L.W. Mott, C.B. Pritchett, Allen Davis, W.C. Holman, Jr., and T.H. McCollum, members of the city commission, who seem to have delegated delicate and vital policy decisions to salaried officials whom they control--need to know their constituents feelings about this disastrous situation. Elected officials are notably responsive to the pressure of such expressions, a salutary change of mind can be brought about at city hall.

Third, it is also clear that the fastest growing town in Georgia is in grave danger of economic loss and stagnation which afflicted Little Rock. Business and political leaders in Albany who value their prosperity can save it by opposing the recalcitrance of city hall and by demanding reasonable agreements to restore peace, healthy business and continued economic advances.

Ask yourself this question: "What can I do?"

a. Talk to or write your city commissioners, asking them to settle this disorder now.
b. Write your Chamber of Commerce--they want it settled. Tell them they have your endorsement.
c. Call or see your minister, discuss the situation with him; pledge your support.

Let us open our minds, let us listen to reason and seek the truth. And let us act for a just and happy end to this dangerous, damaging and senseless struggle.

Sincerely,

(signed)

Mrs. Frances Pauley, Director
Georgia Council on Human Relations

LOCAL FUNDS, PLEDGES COUNT TOWARD MATCHING TOTALS

There has been some confusion concerning the funds that can be counted in the totaling of self-support figures to qualify for matching assistance from SRC. It should be noted that: (1) funds raised and used by local Councils can count toward state matching funds if the locals are related to or affiliated with the state Council; (2) state Councils may receive up to two-thirds credit for outstanding pledges if the pledges are payable by January 1, 1963.

MUSE WINS AWARD

Colonel Benjamin Muse, board member of the Virginia Council and Director of SRC's Leadership Project, received the 1962 Hoey Award from the Catholic Interracial Council. The Hoey Award is annually given to a Catholic layman who has made an outstanding contribution to bettering human relations.

NEW ORLEANS COUNCIL ORGANIZED

The New Orleans Community Relations Council was formally launched in September. The group has some 75 members and is moving ahead with several program activities. President of the New Orleans Council is Mr. Ted Baptist, a local businessman. Assisting in the organization of the Council were representatives of the Anti-Defamation League, the Urban League, the Southern Field Service of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, and SRC.

Communication to the New Orleans Community Relations Council should be addressed to Mr. Baptist at 101 S. Wren Street.

SELF SUPPORT TOTALS UP

Funds raised by state and local Councils on Human Relations continue to edge upward from year to year. During the first three quarters of 1962, the Councils raised funds totaling $46,594. This compares with $43,156 during the same period a year before.

Five of the state Councils raised more during the first three quarters of this year than a year ago.

ON THE AFTER DINNER CIRCUIT

Harold Fleming recently addressed the annual meeting of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations, James Dabbs likewise with the Houston Council.

Others scheduled to address forthcoming meetings of Council units include Ralph McGill to Houston, Dr. Ralph Bunche to Richmond and Alabama, and Andrew Hatcher, Assistant Press Secretary to President Kennedy, to the Atlanta Council.

ACTING DIRECTOR ON JOB IN FLORIDA

Dr. Ralph Dreger, Professor of Psychology at the University of Jacksonville and Chairman of the Northeast Florida Council on Human Relations, has agreed to serve the Florida Council as Acting Director, without pay, until a full-time professional director can be secured to replace Bill Williams.

State newsletters and other materials normally going to the Florida Council should be sent to Dr. Dreger, 2867 Justina Rd., Jacksonville 11.

ROWLAND HEADS SCCHR LEADERSHIP PROJECT

Mr. Gil Rowland, formerly on the staff of the Greenville, S.C., News, is now working full time as director of a special leadership project for the South Carolina Council. Mr. Rowland is travelling about the state, a la Ben Muse, contacting and interviewing economic, civic, and political leadership throughout the state. He has already visited 18 South Carolina communities with others scheduled for the near future.

NAIRO CONFERENCE SCHEDULED THIS MONTH

The annual conference of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials will be held from November 28 to December 1 at the Park Sheraton Hotel in Washington. Those attending may still save a little by advance registration but registration in advance is not necessary to participate.

Fred Routh, new Executive Director of NAIRO, states that: "NAIRO needs more southern representation. This year's conference in Washington should make it possible for most of our southern professionals to make the meeting who have not been able to attend conferences further North and West."

Wiley Branton of SRC's Voter Education Project will give one of the major addresses.

NEW BOOK AVAILABLE AT SPECIAL RATES

Sarah Patton Boyle, nationally known author, fighter for civil rights, and a member of the Virginia Council, has recently written a new book, The Desegregated Heart, published by Morrow. The book is a warm and human story of Mrs. Boyle's own experiences during the days of massive resistance in Virginia and her emotional and mental transition during that time.

The book is available through the Virginia Council at special rates. Any of the state Councils may purchase or promote the book on the basis of $3.00 each, 40% under the standard purchase price. We will be happy to make arrangements for any of the other state Councils. As of December 1, SRC will be ordering some of the books for promotional purposes. Let us know if you would like a supply and how many.

ARKANSAS COUNCIL COMPLETES VOTER DRIVE

With some assistance from the Voter Education Project, the Arkansas Council and the Urban League of Little Rock conducted a voter registration effort in the Greater Little Rock area during the month of September. Ozell Sutton of ACHR and George Henry of the Urban League were co-directors.

The report of the Arkansas Council notes that "some 3,742 poll tax receipts were sold through the efforts of nearly 800 workers who made more than 14,000 contacts. Seven PTA units, three political organizations, five civic clubs, and numerous religious, fraternal, and social groups took an active part. This was probably the greatest united effort in the Negro community in many years."

STATE PARKS OPEN IN TENNESSEE

As a result of negotiations last summer between a committee of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations and public park authorities, the public park facilities of the state of Tennessee are now open to all citizens. Negro and bi-racial groups have used picnic, restaurant, and lodging facilities at several of the parks.

LEE DOES TELETHON

VCHR's Heslip Lee, star of pulpit and banquet circuit, has now emerged as a video celebrity. Lee recently appeared for an hour on a television station in Bluefield, West Virginia, fielding questions telephoned in by viewers. According to Lee, his performance was "well received."

Demonstrating a lack of concern for superficial matters of territorial integrity, VCHR claims a local Council in Bluefield, West Virginia. It is further rumored that the Virginia and Tennessee Councils are engaged in a vendetta for the loyalties of a local Council that is organizing in Bristol, a city which straddles the Tennessee-Virginia line, but is really closer to Charlotte, North Carolina.

CHRs EMPHASIZE WORK WITH YOUTH

A number of the state and local councils have been working with college and high school youth. Several have made special efforts to assist in the preparation and orientation of Negro children going into newly desegregated situations.

In South Carolina there is a Junior Council on Human Relations which brings together college young people of both races from around the state. In Virginia there is a campus chapter of VCHR at the University of Virginia, and high school chapters in Charlottesville and Fairfax County. There is a youth Council on Human Relations in Atlanta.

The University of Virginia chapter of VCHR is sponsoring during the current academic year a series of outstanding monthly forums involving prominent speakers from across the South.

In New Orleans last summer, Mrs. Mary Sand, former president of SOS and presently a board member of the New Orleans Community Relations Council, conducted a series of discussions and field trips for first and second grade children who were going into new desegregation experiences. The group was interracial and visited together most points of interest in the city. Perhaps more important than the actual learning experience was the opportunity for the children to know each other prior to the opening of schools.

In Nashville, Tennessee, a crafts workshop was conducted by the Tennessee Council for a number of elementary school children. About 15 children were involved in this interracial experience.

The Atlanta Council held several meetings of transfer students going into formerly all white high schools in Atlanta. The group plans other occasional meetings during the school year.

In Little Rock, the Negro children involved and their parents have created their own organization which is growing in size and influence as desegregation moves to the Junior High School level. The group meets monthly to share experiences and meet with resource persons in the community.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT AND MINORITY GROUPS*

What are the major areas of concern to municipal government in the provision of equal opportunity for all citizens? What examples of good practice are available in employment, education, housing, and other areas?

The principal purpose of this report is to show the work being done by selected city governments in working toward the goal of equal opportunity for all citizens. The principal obstacle in the way of achieving this goal is race relations. Much publicity has been given in the past decade to racial problems both in the North and the South. But the steady progress being made by hundreds of communities in all parts of the country toward the achievement of equal opportunity is a less well-known story. This report shows the scope of progressive practices together with suggestions and guidelines for city government officials.

Growth of Equal Opportunity

Four developments in the past decade have heightened the expectations of Negroes and other minority groups in securing full civil rights.

Court Decisions

The school desegregation decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court in 1954-55 culminated the legal trend of 50 years of litigation by declaring that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal." Although the decision applied initially only to public education, it has since been extended to most facets of civil rights in succeeding court cases. Subsequent decisions in both state and federal courts have broadened civil rights in housing, public accommodations, and other areas. This growing body of court decisions has been supplemented by acts of Congress, Presidential orders, federal administrative rulings, state statutes, and county and municipal ordinances. In earlier years this body of law applied only to direct state actions (and, by extension, to actions of local jurisdictions), but recent rulings have enjoined private discrimination whenever "to some significant extent the state in any of its manifestations has been found to have become involved" in private acts of discrimination.[1]

Population Mobility

Approximately 1.5 million Negroes left the South between 1950 and 1960. "Although the largest cities have generally registered the largest numerical gains, the largest proportional gains have been experienced by medium-sized cities in the 100,000 to 500,000 range. Syracuse, Rochester, New Haven, San Diego and Fort Wayne all saw Negro populations . . . double in the past decade."[2]

During the 1950-60 decade, for example, the Negro population doubled in the state of Connecticut and tripled in the city of Milwaukee. The 1960 Census of Population shows that one out of every

BY WAY OF INTRODUCTION AND APOLOGY.....

My distinguished predecessors, Frederick B. Routh and Paul Rilling, each established a uniquely sporadic schedule for the Newsletter. Perhaps partially as an awareness of this and from an appreciation of their work, I have, consciously or unconsciously, set out to beat their record. Whatever the reason, this questionable distinction has been achieved.

At our meeting of state staff on March 5-7, we noted your criticisms of this policy and your suggestions for the content of the Newsletter. We will therefore try to include the following changes:

The Newsletter will be issued monthly on or about the 15th.

It will be directed exclusively to state staff with copies going to a few other interested persons. (It will be mailed to the SRC board so you can omit those persons from your mailing.) Each state office will receive 25 copies to be distributed to their Executive Committee members and others. If you wish more than 25 copies please let us know before the next newsletter is mimeographed.

Included will be information on developments in the region, techniques employed by local and state councils, comments from SRC staff, analysis of trends, etc.. A section will be set aside for announcements from the state councils. Material for this section--as well as for all the newsletter--is welcomed and encouraged.

UPCOMING SRC PUBLICATIONS, MARCH-APRIL, 1963

L-41 - Excerpts from Speeches Delivered Respectively by Governor Burt T. Combs of Kentucky and Secretary of Commerce Luther T. Hodges.

These speeches, delivered on February 24 and February 25 respectively, were both concerned with essentially the same theme--the opportunity of the South "to demonstrate to the nation and to the world both its capacity for orderly change and the extent of its faith in the future."

A Study of Tokenism by Kenneth Morland, Professor of Sociology, Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

This pamphlet examines the various plans devised by southern politicians and school boards to keep integration at token levels. It discusses the rulings made by federal courts in cases involving token integration plans, and it describes the heavy price the South is paying in trying to uphold a segregated school system long since declared to be unconstitutional.

Federal Programs to Promote Employment and Development in Rural Communities.

A report prepared following a conference in South Carolina sponsored by Penn Community Services and the South Carolina Council. Included are descriptions of the federal programs and a detailed bibliography of publications dealing with this subject. Copies in quantity will be available to councils without cost.

FROM THE MEETING OF STATE STAFF

SRC will plan to arrange, if at all feasible, a yearly meeting of state council presidents.

A second state staff meeting will be held during 1963, probably in early June. Harry Jones is investigating the possibility of facilities in North Carolina for this meeting. More on this soon.

At our second meeting special attention will be given to establishing a closer working relationship among the councils and to developing resources to be used by all of the councils. A policy statement and the machinery for the joint announcement of programs and policies will also be considered.

A memo will be prepared on minimum and desirable staff benefits for the guidance of councils.

All are urged to send to Margaret Long ideas for New South and to help her in developing these articles.

NEW PROGRAM FILM AVAILABLE

On October 24, 1962, CBS Reports presented a one hour television program entitled "The Other Face of Dixie." The program told the story of school desegregation in four cities--emphasizing the positive aspects: Clinton, Norfolk, Atlanta, and Little Rock. It was shown on a nationwide basis but a number of local stations exercised their option not to show this item.

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights has been presented with a copy of this film. It will be made available from the Commission wihtout cost to any civic, religious, or educational group. Inquiries should be directed to Peter M. Sussman, Assistant Staff Director for State Advisory Committees, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, Washington 25, D.C.

PREDOMINANTLY WHITE HOTELS ACCOMMODATING NEGRO GUESTS

The predominantly white hotels listed below are reported (either by newsclips or by individual informants) to accept overnight guests without regard to race. Most of them were desegregated during roughly the last three years; some, however, have never been segregated. Hotels largely for Negro guests are not listed here; many also accept whites.

If you have positive information regarding non-segregated predominantly white hotels not listed below, we would be grateful if you would report their names to us, with documentation (either a reliable news report or information from a reliable individual). Be sure, if possible, that all facilities in those hotels you report to us are open to Negro guests--coffee shops, swimming pools, etc., managed by the hotel.

ARKANSAS FUND RAISING, MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGNS

ACHR has launched a state-wide fund raising and membership campaign. Two capable members of the board have agreed to serve as chairmen of the drive and other board members have pledged active support. Among other plans, a special appeal will be made to businessmen and other community leaders who have reason to know of the unique and valuable services of the Council.

MISSISSIPPI

With the guidance of Mississippi Council on Human Relations president Dan Beittel, President of Tougaloo Southern Christian College, and under the most severe circumstances, the Mississippi Council continues its program of reorganization. An outstanding Executive Committee has been selected and the Council periodically mails material to several hundred friends. No general membership is sought at this time. A second state-wide meeting has been held without the harassment experienced during the first organizational meeting.

STAFF ADDITIONS IN VIRGINIA, FLORIDA

VCHR announces the addition to the staff of Gregory Shinert, to direct the Virginia Equal Job Opportunity Bureau. Gregory was formerly Executive Director of the Missouri State Commission on Human Rights. Inquiries concerning this program should be directed to the VCHR office in Richmond.

This brings to three the number of state Councils with three professional workers: Virginia, South Carolina, and Arkansas. SCCHR's third staff member, Mr. L. S. James, is co-sponsored by the National Sharecroppers' Fund. Also, in Georgia the Greater Atlanta Council has two professional staff persons and in Florida Ernest Lent began service as Director of the Greater Jacksonville Council earlier this year. Both Atlanta and Jacksonville's staff people are provided by the Unitarian Service Committee, and Ernie Lent also serves as the Southern Field worker for USC.

With the employment of Lent, the Jacksonville affiliate of FCHR, formerly called the Northeast Florida Council on Human Relations, announced a change in name: it is now called the Greater Jacksonville Council on Human Relations, with offices at 129 E. Forsyth Street, Jacksonville.

NCCHR HONORS MCNEILL SMITH

On May 1, The North Carolina Council will honor McNeill Smith, former chairman of the North Carolina Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights,at a dinner at the Carolina Inn, Chapel Hill. The N.C. Advisory Committee has done an outstanding job and has been the pacesetter among the state advisory committees.

GEORGIA HOLDS "CAMP MEETING"

The Georgia Council's coming annual meeting (April 26-28) will be held in a camp setting, the new Episcopal Camp Reese near Brunswick, Georgia--an atmosphere in which members can relax and get to know one another during the three day program. This is the first time a state Council meeting has been held in Georgia in which participants were able to all stay under the same roof, except for meetings in Negro colleges. Over 50 people have already registered to attend. The conference theme is "Can Man Get Along With Man?--The Personal Side of Human Relations."

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES WORKSHOPS

The Chattanooga Community Relations Conference, the Houston Council on Human Relations, and the Huntsville (Alabama) Council on Human Relations have, within the past few months, held workshops on Equal Employment Opportunity. In Chattanooga, informal talks discussing various factors affecting employment and a panel discussion featuring persons familiar with Chattanooga employment problems were main workshop features; Dr. Vivian Henderson directed.

Huntsville's workshop was held in the minicipal public utilities building, by permission of the City Council. As follow-up, committees were organized to contact Federal contractors, and a research committee was organized to study the employment patterns in Huntsville and gather facts upon which to base future actions.

In Houston, the conference (titled "Present Employment Picture in the Houston Area") was moderated by Mr. Frederick Wiener, Executive Director of Houston's Vocational Guidance Service. Program topics were: Status of Employment at NASA-Houston; A Look at Manpower Patterns Through 1966; Educational Implications Relevant to the Employment Picture; and Observations Germane to New Job Opportunities for Minorities. Presentations were made by the Director of Personnel at NASA, the District Director of the Texas Employment Commission, the principal of a Houston high school, and the director of the local AFSC Merit Employment Committee.

"PROGRESS" DISTRIBUTED BY SCCHR

Gil Rowland, who worked on a special leadership project for the South Carolina Council last summer and fall, is continuing to assist in its program by developing occasional reports titled PROGRESS. The February issue of PROGRESS reprinted editorials and excerpts from magazine and newspaper articles emphasizing how the peaceful admission of Harvey Gantt to Clemson has helped to create a "new image" of South Carolina. Five thousand copies have been given wide distribution in the state by SCCHR.

FAIR PRACTICE CODE IN KENTUCKY

Kentucky recently became the first Southern state to adopt a Governor's Code of Fair Practices. The Code, signed by Governor Bert Combs in mid-March, prohibits discrimination in all state government agencies and functions: specifically, employment and job opportunity in state agencies, state financial assistance, licensing by state agencies, the appointment and assignment of state personnel, all state services and facilities, state educational and vocational guidance programs, and services by the state employment agencies. It also includes antibias provisions for contractors doing business with the state.

According to a news report, a spokesman for the Governor said the principal provision in the Code covered contractors, since most of the other facets were covered earlier. Michigan, New York, and Pennsylvania have similar codes.

The text of the code may be obtained from Galen Martin, Director of the Commission on Human Rights, Frankfort, Kentucky.

DESEGREGATED MOVIE THEATRES

Previously all white movies (or those with a Jim Crow balcony) in the following cities are now desegregated, according to newsclips and other sources. If you have reliable information on additional non-segregated movies, please send it to us, along with documentation.

GEORGIA

Atlanta: All downtown movies, neighborhood art movies.

KENTUCKY

At least five Kentucky cities, including Lexington and Louisville, have desegregated indoor movies. A 1961 survey determined that 70% of the state's outdoor movie theatres are open to all on a non-segregated basis.

NORTH CAROLINA

Raleigh: One movie.
Chapel Hill: All movies.

TENNESSEE

Knoxville: Two downtown movies.
Oak Ridge: All movies.
Nashville: Some downtown movies.

May, 1963

RALEIGH SPEAKS

We believe the following resolution, approved by the Directors of the Raleigh Merchants' Bureau on May 13, is of tremendous significance:

"God-fearing people, as responsible citizens, and all people of good will, must face the fact that peace in human relations is essential.

"Being charged with the responsibility of offering leadership to business in the community of Raleigh, we are convinced we should, without further delay, remove all policies in both government and business which deny rights and services because of race.

"The overriding challenge now confronting every Raleigh business person is to do these things that would further human relations and the continued economic growth of Raleigh."

-Directors of The Merchants' Bureau of Raleigh, N.C.

THE BENCHMARK

During June one member of the Tennessee Council in each community in the state will receive a questionnaire requesting information on desegregation in each public facility and service. The questionnaire will bear a specific date--probably July 1--and all information is to reflect the condition as of that date. Thus for schools, parks, theatres, etc., there will be a "benchmark" from which future programs can be measured. Sounds like a good idea.

ATLANTA WORKSHOP FOR SOUTHERN STUDENTS

The Southern Office of the United States National Student Association has an urgent request for the state and local Councils: your assistance in recruiting students (high school seniors and college students) to attend a USNSA sponsored mid-summer Civil Rights Leadership Institute is needed. The availability of funds has only recently become certain, thus recruitment began late and time is short. All state Councils will receive application blanks and fuller information within a week or so; in the meantime, here are some of the pertinent facts:

The Institute will be held on a college campus in Atlanta from July 15 through August 12. Forty Southern high school seniors and college students will be selected to participate, with the National Student Association paying all of their expenses including travel. The purpose of the Institute is to provide students who are interested in participating in the Civil Rights Movement with an intensive study of historical, political, economic, and other factors as they relate to Civil Rights in the South. Its last week will be devoted to discussing the goals of the Civil Rights movement, methods of organization and ways of developing political awareness, responsibility and effectiveness within a Negro community. USNSA hopes students who participate will subsequently provide more effective leadership in Civil Rights activities on their campuses and in their communities.

THE QUIET REVOLUTION

The Jack Paar Show will be preempted Friday, May 24, in order to present the NBC Special called "The Quiet Revolution" at 9 P.M. Eastern Standard Time. The program includes excerpts from the January National Conference on Religion and Race and reports on the new concern of American religion with social matters.

SKIT CONTEST IN HOUSTON

It's old hat in intergroup relations circles to recognize the arts as an excellent tool for human relations education (as it is to mention the dramatic arts as one of the most effective of educational medias--old "straw hat" in this case). But answers to the question of how community groups and agencies can, without great expense, utilize the art forms in community education are scarce. For this reason, a summer program project of the Houston Council on Human Relations is of more than passing interest. HCHR is sponsoring a playlet contest, open to elementary pupils enrolled in summer religious programs of any church or synagogue, with prizes to be awarded for the most significant and original dramatic skit on the subject of Brotherhood and Freedom. The playlets must be written and staged by elementary pupils (although their teachers may help). All entries will be presented in a day-long program at the local Town Hall and judged by top personnel from Houston's professional and community theatres.

Three prizes will be offered, totaling $50.00; however, this appears to be the only expense other than minimal publicity costs HCHR will incur. (And, in some communities at least, TV stations would be willing to telecast winning productions from similar local contests as a public service feature--a possibility for further educational "mileage" from such projects.)

CONSULTANTS FOR SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

SRC is developing a special panel of consultants to work with community groups in preparation for school desegregation. Some communities will need consultants to work with "Save Our Schools" groups where closing the schools is threatened. Others will need consultants to advise on how best to mobilize community resources to insure orderly change.

A wealth of information and experience in these areas has been developed during the past several years. SRC has worked with a number of the people involved and has helped in detail in some of the communities where the "pioneer programs" were developed. Now we hope to develop means of sharing this information, especially where time is short. As you spot communities where this kind of help is needed, let's explore the available resources.

DECLENSION OF A SHIBBOLETH

Interesting data from an address by the Honorable Berl I. Bernhard, Staff Director of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, (to Wakefield High School in Arlington, Virginia) titled "Slogans, Semantics, and Shibboleths":

"You've heard that the District's crime rate is the highest in the Nation and that this rate continues to soar. Here we have two untrue assumptions that have been taken as gospel by people who don't bother to question the source of their information. Instead of being first, Washington actually ranks thirteenth among America's 25 largest cities in the number of crimes per population thousand, according to FBI Uniform Crime Reporting statistics. Further, compared to a national crime increase of 7 percent for the calendar year 1962 over the year 1961, the crime rate in Washington increased only 4.9 percent.

"These statistics are taken from a March 4, 1963 report of the FBI. This report also shows that in murder, non-negligent manslaughter, Atlanta is first with a 13.5% increase over 1961, and Washington is fourth, with an increase of 3.4%; forcible rape, Chicago is first, and Washington eighteenth, with an 18% decrease; robbery, Chicago is first again, and Washington sixth with a 16.6% increase; burglary-breaking or entering, Los Angeles is first with a 6.4% increase, and Washington is sixteenth, with a 2.4% increase; larceny $50 and over, Los Angeles is first with a 6.5% increase, and Washington is eighteenth with a 8.2% increase; and auto theft, Chicago is first, and Washington is fourteenth, with a 5% increase. Only in aggravated assault is Washington first, with an increase of 1.7%. However, aggravated assaults increased in Los Angeles 2.6%, in Houston 12.9%, and in St. Louis 99.9%."

BIRACIAL FACULTIES

The following state-by-state listing of known desegregation of faculties in predominantly white schools--both public schools (elementary and/or secondary levels) and public and private colleges--was compiled from newsclips and the SERS Statistical Summary (Fall, 1962). (Those states having segregated school systems prior to 1954 are covered.) Additions or corrections are welcomed.

DELAWARE:
Public schools: Wilmington and Newark.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:
Public schools: all faculties desegregated; no racial distinctions made in hiring or assigning teachers to schools.
Colleges: faculty of Teachers College desegregated.

FLORIDA:
Public schools: segregated; however, federal court desegregation orders for Volusia and Duval Counties included instructions to begin teacher desegregation.
Colleges: Miami-Dade Junior College - 6 Negroes; University of Miami - 1 Negro.

Kentucky:
Public schools: an estimated 20 districts of 206 in the state employed some 137 Negroes on biracial faculties at 50 schools in the 1962 fall term (some of these schools may be predominantly Negro).
Colleges: University of Louisville - 1 Negro (Department Head); Bellarmine College - 1 Negro.

MARYLAND:
Public schools: about 1,458 Negro teachers on predominantly white staffs in some 8 districts.
Colleges: University of Maryland;
Baltimore, Essex, and Harford Colleges (2 yr. colleges).

MISSOURI:
No data available.

OKLAHOMA:
Public schools: about 28 Negro teachers are said to be on desegregated faculties in four districts: Fay, Ponce City, Arcadia, and Tulsa.
Colleges: University of Oklahoma - 1 Negro on regular faculty.

TENNESSEE:
Public schools: Oak Ridge High School - 1 Negro.

VIRGINIA:
Public schools: none at present; however, the Arlington School Board announced earlier this year that summer teaching positions will be open to Negro teachers, "opening the way for the first Negro to teach a white or mixed class," according to news reports.

WEST VIRGINIA:
Public schools: some faculties desegregated.

"JOBS AND COLOR"

You've probably received a copy of "Jobs and Color: Negro Employment in Tennessee State Government"; if not, you'll want to order one. Prepared by Dr. Herman Long and Dr. Vivian Henderson for the Nashville Community Conference on Employment Opportunity and published by the Tennessee Council (also available from TCHR), this concise study could provide useful guidelines for organizations wishing to investigate the employment of Negroes in their own state government.

For the hospital survey, questionnaires were sent to every hospital with an intern program connected with medical training centers in the South - 64 hospitals.

For the hotel survey, questionnaires were sent to 11 hotel chains, 30 hotel associations, and contacts (either a Council on Human Relations, Urban League chapter, or NAACP chapter) in the same cities.

For the survey of cultural facilities, questionnaires were sent to the mayors and contacts in 20 southern cities - these cities selected because they represent the major population centers.

A tabulation of the results of the hospital survey was given the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations to assist it in its efforts to desegregate Grady Hospital.

The survey on cultural facilities is scheduled for publication in a forthcoming issue of New South.

FIELD ACTIVITIES

The state Councils on Human Relations continue to show growth and increased vitality and effectiveness. These factors are due both to improving climates in many of the states and to sound and dedicated leadership. As of May 15 the total membership of the state Councils stood at 6,338. This compares with a total of 6,171 in July, 1961. During the last 12 months six of the state Councils have shown substantial improvement.

The largest is Virginia, with a membership of 2,100. The second largest is now Tennessee, which has grown from 581 to 781 during the last year, followed by Florida with a membership of 700.

During the first quarter of the current fiscal year, the state Councils have raised $19,541.00. This compares with $14,224.00 raised during the comparable period a year ago.

In addition, three of the state Councils have received special foundation grants this year. Last fall the Georgia Council received a grant from the Field Foundation to make possible the employment of a second staff member. The Rev. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., formerly president of the Savannah Council, is currently serving ably in this capacity and giving the Georgia Council benefit of biracial professional staff. The Tennessee Council also received a small grant from the Field Foundation to strengthen its work for the next two years. In May, the Virginia Council was notified that the William C. Whitney Foundation had determined to grant $3,500 for each of the three years beginning with 1962. The VCHR plans to employ a Negro professional staff member as associate director for the coming year and hopes that sufficient funds will be found to continue the position into the future.

On May 3 some 55 persons from throughout Mississippi gathered on the Tougaloo College campus in Jackson to organize a new Mississippi Council on Human Relations. Although the group was harassed by adverse press and TV publicity and by agents of the State Sovereignty Commission and White Citizens Council, it determined to move ahead and raise a standard of constructive progress in Mississippi. Selected as chairman was Dr. Dan Beittel, President of Tougaloo College and SRC board member. Elected as vice-chairmen were Rabbi Charles Mantinband of Hattiesburg, SRC board member, and Dr. D. I. Horn, Jr., President of Mary Holmes Junior College at West Point, Mississippi. The group authorized the appointment of a constitutional committee and plans to move ahead with local activity in all parts of the state, looking toward another and larger meeting in the fall.

New local interracial groups have been organized in recent months, particularly in Georgia and Virginia. Since last fall the Virginia Council has organized local affiliated groups in Fredericksburg, Williamsburg, and in Bluefield, West Virginia, right across the border from Virginia. The Georgia Council has recently organized in Rome, Brunswick, and Albany.

Other notable activities of the state Councils include:

1. The involvement of both Georgia staff members in the critical Albany situation. At two points during the crisis the director of the Georgia Council was able to arrange new negotiations.

2. The presentation of able and prominent speakers. Carl Rowan, Assistant to the Secretary of State for Public Affairs, has spoken to the Georgia and Arkansas Councils. Berl Bernhard, Staff Director of the Commission on Civil Rights, has spoken to the Tennessee and Virginia Councils. Secretary of Labor Goldberg has agreed to speak to the Tennessee Council in the near future. Ralph McGill spoke recently to the North Carolina Council. Dr. Ralph Bunche is scheduled to address the Richmond Council and Dean Rusk has tentatively agreed to speak to the Richmond group in the near future.

3. The North Carolina Council has met several times recently with the Governor to press for progress beyond tokenism and for the employment of more Negroes in state departments. The NCCHR also made a public statement in behalf of broader school desegregation which received wide publicity.

4. The Virginia Council has organized a state inter-agency meeting involving some 75 organizations and agencies with some human relations concern. The group will meet periodically. John Feild, Director of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, will address the meeting in late May.

5. The Houston Council sponsored a seminar for 50 selected high school students representing various ethnic, racial, and religious groups.

6. The Florida Council was able to play a helpful role in advising and negotiating in Cocoa, Fla., where a tense situation concerning recreational facilities was solved with the appointment of a Mayor's biracial committee, which recommended the complete desegregation of the facilities.

7. The Atlanta Council published a survey of the first year of school desegregation in Atlanta. The document received widespread notice and was recently quoted in the New York Times.

8. The director of the Alabama Council has been extremely active in the current crisis situation in Birmingham and is one of the few persons in the city with access to Negro leadership and white persons in the business and civic leadership of the city.

Activities of SRC Field staff since January have included:

1. Several trips to Albany, Georgia, at the request of the Georgia Council to assist and supplement activities of the Georgia Council there.

2. A trip to Pensacola, Florida, to advise a citizens group there concerning preparation for peaceful desegregation. This trip involved also meetings with the school superintendent and school principals, white and Negro.

3. Several trips to New Orleans to offer suggestions to groups there preparing for desegregation next fall and to explore the flickerings of interest in the organization of an interracial council in the city.

4. A trip to Charleston to consult with white and Negro leaders concerning the boycott situation and to explore ways of strengthening interracial cooperation there. This trip was at the request of the SCCHR, which does not have a local organization in Charleston.

5. The planning and direction of the annual State Staff Meeting, which was held at SRC February 15 and 16.

6. Several trips to Birmingham to advise with the director of the Alabama Council concerning the constructive steps that might be made in that situation.

7. Supervision of a pilot project to attempt to reach Black Belt areas through radio in conjunction with the Friendly World Broadcasting Company and Mr. Edwin Randall.

8. Participation for SRC in the regional meeting of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee in Atlanta April 27 and 28.

9. Assistance to the organizing committee of the Mississippi Council on Human Relations and participation in the organizing meeting on May 3.

10. A series of speeches to six political science and sociology classes at Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss., May 2.

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

While awaiting approval of Internal Revenue on our request for tax exemption, contact was established with various federal agencies, private foundations, organizations, and others interested in voter registration in the South. In a letter dated March 22, 1962, SRC was informed by Internal Revenue Service that if we "operate the project strictly in accordance with the representations made . . . the activity will not adversely affect your present exemption from Federal income tax . . ." News of the tax ruling came while Leslie Dunbar and Wiley Branton were in New York for conferences with participating agencies, and the group agreed to a March 29 news release.

Grants have been received from Taconic Foundation of $250,000 for a two year period; $75,000 from Field Foundation for one year; and $124,000 total for a two year period from the Edgar Stern Family Fund. This gives VEP $262,000 for the first year's operation.

Proposals for a two year campaign have been submitted by NAACP, CORE, SCLC, SNCC, and NUL, and representatives from each met with VEP in Atlanta on April 17. SRC Research and VEP held a conference in Atlanta on May 1 and 2 to discuss research problems involving the voter project, which was attended by a dozen or so political scientists and other scholars from over the South. All in attendance promised continuing cooperation to the Project research.

VEP decided to launch Ninety Day Programs in states where registration deadlines could still be met for summer primaries and made the following grants: CORE - $8,625.00; SCLC - $11,500.00; SNCC - $5,750.00; NAACP - $17,250.00; and NUL - $5,750.00. CORE will be working in Baton Rouge, La., Jackson, Miss., and in the 6th Congressional District and in Clarendon, Sumter, and York Counties, South Carolina.

NAACP will work in Jackson, Miss.; Shreveport, Baton Rouge, Lake Charles, and Monroe, La.; High Point, Fayetteville, Charlotte, Rocky Mount, Wilmington and Edenton, North Carolina; Beaufort, Columbia, Greenville, and Charleston, South Carolina; and Memphis, Fayette County, Haywood County, Knoxville, Chattanooga, and Clarksville, Tennessee.

National Urban League will be working in Winston-Salem and Richmond.

SCLC will work in Shreveport, La.; Chowan County and Elizabeth City, North Carolina; Charleston, South Carolina;

Knoxville and Chattanooga, Tennessee; and in the 4th Congressional District of Virginia.

SNCC will work in Orangeburg County, South Carolina and in Jackson, Hattiesburg, Marshall County and the old 3rd and 4th Congressional Districts of Mississippi.

The first VEP grant was made to the Atlanta All Citizens Registration Committee on April 12 in the amount of $2,000.00, with a supplemental grant on May 15 in the amount of $1,600.00. A grant was also made to the Durham Committee on Negro Affairs on April 27 in the sum of $2,500.00

VEP requires participating agencies to deposit the proceeds of our grants in a separate bank account and to make disbursements from same only when supported by vouchers. Agencies are required to coordinate their registration efforts where more than one agency is working in the same area. Plans are now being formulated for a long range program in 11 Deep South states. Immediate attention is being given to "crash programs" in New Orleans and Nashville.

SOUTHERN LEADERSHIP PROJECT

Short Statement of SLP Activities since January 1, 1962

The activities of the Southern Leadership Project followed a somewhat more selective pattern of travel but continued in the main along the lines of previous efforts. I have personally concentrated on South Carolina, Alabama, and Georgia; Mr. Brewbaker has visited school authorities in the more critical situations.

Mr. Brewbaker took part in a workshop on desegregation problems in Chattanooga January 16 and attended the annual meeting of Virginia school superintendents April 16. He was invited to the latter by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. He has conferred with school authorities in Spartanburg and Greenville, S.C.; Atlanta and Savannah, Ga.; Mobile, Ala.; New Orleans and Baton Rouge, La.; Tallahassee and Pensacola, Fla.; and Raleigh, N.C.

I have given somewhat more time to desk work and counseling with my colleagues in Atlanta on general SRC problems. I have collaborated with the newly active Catholic human relations movement, visiting three Catholic bishops and conferring with a group of advisers to Archbishop Rummel in New Orleans. I have also cooperated increasingly with the Department of Justice and the Commission on Civil Rights.

I have been especially concerned in recent months with the need for emboldening the Southern clergy to witness forthrightly for the Christian attitude in race relations. After much discussion of the problem with Dr. Dunbar and Rev. Will Campbell, of the National Council of Churches, it has been decided to engage a minister consultant who would be identified as a representative of the National Council of Churches, but who would be financed from this project. Such a minister would be expected to travel in the South visiting and talking with Protestant ministers, especially in the rural districts.

INFORMATION ACTIVITIES

We've had 36 foreign visitors since Jan. 1, for stays ranging from two to seven days and have arranged about 44 full days' programs for them, including an increasing number of home dinners with the help of the Atlanta Council on Human Relations. The 36 do not include drop-in visitors we talk to, show around the office and mail or give publications to, nor 24 Ohio students with whom we conferred and for whom we arranged appointments.

I've made nine speeches (or will have by May 22) - at Oberlin College, Daytona Beach, the Indiana Civil Liberties Union and two womens clubs and the Senior Citizens Club in Atlanta.

New South promotions have been mailed to five lists of possible subscribers, with little return.

We are rather pleased with our New South book section, when we have room for it. Jan wrote to a lot of publishers asking for review copies and we've had books from Random House, Norton, Dial, Harcourt Brace, Simon and Schuster, University of North Carolina Press, Charles C. Thomas, Houghton-Mifflin, Louisiana State University Press and maybe some others.

We've cast about for some distinguished and authoritative writing for New South and wangled some good pieces from names like Lillian Smith, Louis Lomax and Nedra Tyre. We don't count Mr. Dabbs and Mr. Wright, because they have to do for us, anyway. New South lately seems to take more editing and letter-writing as we're getting in manuscripts and even poetry to be considered and usually rejected.

I did a little literary consultation and editing for fellow laborers in the vineyard, SNCC and SCLC, which may have been more offensive than helpful, because I haven't heard thanks or you're crazy or pea turkey from them since.

I spend about every fifth day cleaning up my well-ordered mess in search of some mysterious document you seem to think I'm sitting on, a highly constructive activity which is, however, perhaps not too susceptible to appraisal and value judgement.

We had a great literary tea for Lillian Smith March 31 at the Biltmore Hotel, a gladsome mingling attended by some 600 of all colors. We sold 110 books and Miss Lil figured she autographed over 200. The Ku Klux Klan came and picketed. We think this was good for the town, us, the Georgia and Atlanta Councils, and Miss Lil.

DIRECTOR OF WOMEN'S WORK

The 'rolling chair' has traveled many miles to doctors' offices, clinics, and meetings.

February:

The Atlanta Fellowship of the Concerned had a program at the Atlanta Library during Brotherhood Week, with about 200 present.

March:

Attended the Annual Meeting of North Georgia Women's Society of Christian Service, Augusta, Georgia.

April:

Attended the Spring Student Conference at Paine College, Augusta, Georgia, which lasted three days, and spoke to the student body.

Spoke to the Augusta Council on Human Relations.

May:

Spent the week of May 14, as a Special Guest of the Woman's Division of Christian Service, in its 6th Assembly of Methodist Women, in Atlantic City. Over 10,000 women were in attendance.

I have been to Washington, D.C. twice - once for the Board Meeting of the ADA, and later to attend the annual meeting. The biggest job I have had is to make a comparative study of the social action program of the Methodist Church and the present civil rights action of the Federal Government.

In addition to the above, I taught a district-wide class - Atlanta West District Woman's Society of Christian Service, Fair Oaks, Marietta, Community Bible Study each month, a Forum class of young people.

I have met four times with executive committees of the United Church Women as we planned a day on "The Family," held at a private home in Lithonia, Georgia, and planning for the fall meeting of the Fellowship of the Concerned, which is to be held on October 30-31.

DAYLIGHT IN HUNTSVILLE

The following is the lead editorial from the Huntsville Times of June 11, 1963, the day Vivian Malone and James Hood entered the University of Alabama:

THE DAY

Certainly there must have been few citizens of the state who did not awake this morning aware this was to be the day that the Little Judge was going to write a new chapter in Alabama histrionics.

NEW STAFFERS AT SRC, HOUSTON COUNCIL

Vernon Jordan has joined the SRC staff as Assistant to the Director, a position which will entail some administrative duties but which will emphasize program assistance. A graduate of DePauw University with a law degree from Howard, Jordan was Georgia State Director of the NAACP before coming to SRC.

The Houston Council announced a giant step this month: Charles Kelly has been appointed to a newly created professional staff position, Executive Director. Ethel Dumbauld will, of course, continue as Executive Secretary. Kelly has served as HCHR president since fall of 1962.

PERIPATETIC HUGHESES SETTLE

In a recent letter, former ACHR director Bob Hughes sends "warm greetings from the heart of Africa." After seven months in language school and a several-months' assignment as pastor of the church at a mission station located in a remote mountainous area on the Mozambique border, Bob has now been assigned to the work which called him to Africa--race relations. He and his family are located in Southern Rhodesia, at what appears to be a stable address: 62 Galway Road, Avondale, Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia.

He writes: "Week before last the first item in every BBC and Rhodesian Federal Broadcasting Corporation newscast was on Birmingham, as were the headlines of every newspaper in Southern Rhodesia and South Africa. The impact here has even been greater than that of the Ole Miss riots because of the drama involved. Without reference to the tarnishing of the image of America as the land of freedom and equality, the damage done to American missions in this part of the world is very real...."

Also, "When we moved into a new neighborhood recently I took a stroll around the back fence and met our new neighbor. We introduced ourselves and when I told her I was from Birmingham, Alabama, she reached across the fence, grabbed my hand and vigorously shook it, saying, "Keep the niggers down!"

MCHR URGES JACKSON BIRACIAL COMMITTEE

The Mississippi Council recently made public, via a news-release, an appeal for the appointment of a responsible bi-racial committee to consider the grievances of Jackson Negro citizens. The Council called upon "the people of Jackson, on those who carry political responsibility, on leaders of business and industry, on the clergy, and on all other thinking people to see that a responsible bi-racial committee is set up now, and to pledge themselves to make changes in our way of living which will bring human dignity and respect to our citizens regardless of race or color."

PRIVATE FACILITY DESEGREGATION

"Those who do nothing are inviting shame as well as violence. Those who act boldly are recognizing right as well as reality." Thus spoke President Kennedy of dampening the "fires of frustration and discord burning in every city" since the significant events in Birmingham last month. And bold action, the kind of action which demonstrates what progressive community elements can accomplish when moved and, perhaps more importantly, what seemingly inflexible community elements will accept without murmer, has been taken in many cities in the South during the last few weeks.

The expanding total of facilities "open to the public" which have been, since late May, opened to all of the public includes, in part:

First class restaurants in Nashville and Clarksville, Tennessee; Richmond and Lynchburg, Virginia; Charlotte, Asheville, Greensboro, Concord, Winston-Salem, Raleigh, Durham, Statesville and Wadesboro, N. C.; Atlanta, Georgia; Austin, Texas; Fayetteville, Arkansas (test period underway in Fayetteville);

Hotels and motels in Nashville, Knoxville, Clarksville, and Memphis, Tennessee; Charlotte, Winston-Salem, and Durham, North Carolina; Atlanta, Georgia; Tampa, Florida; Houston, Texas;

Movies in Little Rock, Arkansas; Memphis, Tennessee; Norfolk, Richmond, Lynchburg, and the Fairfax-Arlington-Alexandria area, Virginia; Raleigh and Charlotte, North Carolina.

(Listing above does not necessarily mean that within a named city all of the indicated facilities have desegregated, but that a significant number--and in some cases all--of them have. This listing is also far from complete, for the Department of Justice recently announced that, of 244 cities in Southern and border states on which it is "keeping close tab," 143 have taken "some positive visible step" toward removal of racial barriers. The Department's breakdown was: theatres in 61 cities, restaurants in 67 cities, hotels in 22 cities, lunch counters in 61 cities. SRC is currently preparing for publication as complete as possible a listing of newly desegregated facilities; it is scheduled for release in the very near future.)

During May and June, demonstrations, the threat of demonstrations, or in some instances the unpressured desire for progress has resulted in the formation of official biracial committees in: Anniston, Alabama; Pine Bluff, Arkansas; Daytona Beach, Gainesville, Melbourne, and St. Petersburg, Florida; Baton Rouge, Louisiana; Durham, High Point, Lenoir, Raleigh, Roxboro, Winston-Salem, Fayetteville, Concord, Sanford, Hickory, and Greensboro, North Carolina; Chattanooga and Nashville, Tennessee; Arlington, Hampton, and Roanoke, Virginia. The committees in Winston-Salem, Nashville, and Arlington are to be permanent bodies.

(Previously existing official biracial committees continue to function in Monroe and Charlotte, North Carolina; Athens and Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and Tampa, Florida. Similar committees are reportedly in operation in Asheville and Lumberton, North Carolina and in Fredericksburg and Newport News, Virginia; whether they are newly formed is unknown.)

"Who's Blocking Desegregation?" by Robert Coles, MD. The New Republic, June 22, 1963. pp. 17-20.
An especially excellent article, which treats of the reasons why Dixie segregationists are "protected" by others in the country (and the unfairness of such protection to Southerners).

"A Beginning in Birmingham," by Vincent Harding. The Reporter, June 6, 1963. pp. 13-19.
An account of steps in the negotiated settlement in Birmingham, with thoughts on the possibilities presented by the current situation.

HOUSEKEEPING

Four state Councils have earned full SRC matching funds for amounts raised locally this year: Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and Virginia.

Quarterly reports for the March, April, and May quarter are currently due.

OUTLINE FOR QUARTERLY REPORTS

We have promised to provide the state Councils with a guide to the preparation of quarterly reports. No simple outline can fit all situations but the following may help. This is only a guide, not a requirement.

General comments:

1. Two things are needed, a program and a financial report. Each is generally outlined below.
2. It is helpful to SRC to have two copies of the report and all attachments. One copy can then be immediately circulated and is available for special filing, such as in research.
3. The program report need not be long nor should an undue amount of time be devoted to its preparation.
4. Frequently a brief report can be supplemented by material prepared for other purposes.
5. Several Councils effectively use the quarterly report as a report to the board. Such a report, prepared for the board or for members, meets all our needs if it includes financial information. We won't feel slighted if we receive a mimeographed copy of a report prepared for others.

Outline:

I. Program.
   A. Significant developments in the state.
   B. Factual report of specific instances of change.
   C. Council, board, and staff involvement.
   D. Specifics of local Council program.
   E. Staff analysis of events.
   F. Council plans and needs.
   G. Administrative. (This is optional but very helpful to SRC. An occasional report of this kind would be highly desirable.)
      1. Membership as of end of quarter (total paid to date, not number carried).
      2. Distribution of membership by city and local Councils.
      3. Total funds contributed to date by members and individuals.
      4. Results of any special membership and/or fund raising dinners.

II. Financial.
   A. Statement of income and expenses for quarter in detail, especially as to income. Income should state, specifically:
      1. Local contributions.
      2. Out of state contributions (foundations, SRC, etc.)
      3. Membership fees.
      4. New South subscriptions.
      5. Other.
   B. Indication of total operating funds available at end of quarter.
   C. Indication of all outstanding bills and obligations.
   D. Separate listing of all special funds in savings, investments, etc..

LAPSE IN COMMUNICATION

On July 5, the Wall Street Journal reported that "Congress gets surprisingly little civil rights mail. Many Southerners report few white protests other than organized segregationist letters...."

BASEBALL YET

There seems to be no end to the imagination--or the audacity--of the Virginia Council on Human Relations. On August 9, at Parker Field Baseball Park in Richmond, there will be a double header between the Richmond Virginians and the Atlanta Crackers.

That occasion will be designated as "Human Relations Night." Everybody who is anybody will have a box seat. Everything in sight, including the band, will--of course--be representative of all of the people of Richmond. VCHR Director Happy Lee will make a "brief" speech between games.

Baseball yet!

STAFF CONFERENCE

On June 20-22, the professional staff of the state Councils met at the Blue Ridge YMCA Conference center near Black Mountain, N.C.. Despite constant rain, the meeting was pleasant and successful. The group agreed that we should spend more time together, share more information, and give more attention to discussions of mutual concerns.

Next year we hope a number of people can be invited to parts of these sessions. Perhaps one meeting of Council presidents, another of local Council leaders, etc.. Some of our grandiose plans will be realized, others will have to be discarded. But it was agreed to meet for a full week in 1964 at the same place. For those who know what a talented, unorthodox, cantankerous group this is, the decision is a good and satisfying one!

JUSTICE--NOT JUST RACE

The following are excerpts from a statement made by Bishop Paul Hardin, Jr., of the South Carolina Conference (S.E.J.) of the Methodist Church on June 13.

"...It is a source of personal concern and grief to me to see my beloved Southland and the Methodist Church torn by the race issue.

"My anguish is all the more acute when I realize that basically the main issue is not race but simple justice and personal dignity. It is as natural for a colored person to seek his place under the sun as it is for a white man to do so.

"In Christian calmness and dignity, let us work together in an effort to grant justice and opportunity to all people--not because of economic and political pressure, but because we believe that justice is the common property of all free men."

SEPTEMBER SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

School districts expected (as of mid-July) to initiate desegregation with the opening of school this fall are listed below, together with districts in which September desegregation is quite possible. Kentucky and the border states are not included. CO=court ordered; V=voluntary.

	Definitely Expected:	Possible or likely:
ALA.:	Mobile (CO); Birmingham (CO)	Huntsville (CO)
ARK.:	Pine Bluff (V)
FLA.:	Leon Co. (Tallahassee) (CO); Duval Co. (Jacksonville) (CO); Orange Co. (Orlando) (CO)
GA.:	Chatham Co.-Savannah (CO)	Brunswick (V); Columbus (V); Macon (V)
LA.:	East Baton Rouge (CO)
MISS.:		Jackson (CO)
N.C.:	Burlington (V); Durham Co. (V); Rocky Mount (V); Guilford Co. (V): Wake County (V)	Statesville; Thomasville
S.C.:		Charleston (CO)
TENN.:	Madison Co. (CO); Sevier Co. (V); Shelby Co. (One school V; ct. case pending); White Co. (Sparta) (V)	Roane Co. (V)
VA.:	Albemarle Co. (V); Charles City Co. (V); Culpeper Co. (V); Dinwirdie Co. (V); Fauquier Co. (V); Frederick Co. (V); Greene Co. (V); Hanover Co. (V); Henrico Co. (V); King and Queen Co. (V); Middlesex Co. (V); Powhatan Co. (CO); Spotsylvania Co. (V); Danville (V); Surry Co. (V); Martinsville (V); Staunton (V)	Radford (V)
TEX.:	Arlington (V); Birdville (V); Denton (V); Waco (V-ct. case pending); Boerne (V); Irving (V); Grand Prairie (V); Sherman (V); Martindale (V): Hale Center (V); Kemper City (V)

Action in Brunswick, Columbus, and Macon, Georgia, illustrates the significant fact that for the first time communities in Deep South states are exploring the possibility of voluntarily desegregating public schools (below the college level--a number of Deep South colleges earlier opened their doors to Negroes in the absence of court orders). Deep South states will also experience some acceleration in the pace of desegregation: only two Deep South cities desegregated public, sub-college level schools in the nine years since 1954; four will--and five others may--this fall. (Mobile, Birmingham, Chatham Co.-Savannah, and East Baton Rouge are in the former category; Huntsville, Brunswick, Columbus, Macon, Jackson, and Charleston are in the latter.) Alabama--and possibly Mississippi--will have initial public school desegregation below the college level.

Those districts in which some resistance appears likely include Danville and Powhatan County, Virginia (in the latter community a strong move toward boycott and possible closing of public schools is evidenced), Birmingham, Alabama, and East Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Resistance might also be expected in Jackson, Mississippi, and Charleston, S.C., in the event schools desegregate this fall. Community preparation groups have been active in Mobile, Huntsville, and Birmingham, Alabama; Jacksonville, Florida; Savannah, Georgia; and Jackson, Mississippi. A group is working for preservation of public schools in Powhatan County, Virginia.

BURIAL AT ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY

Some thousands--probably millions--of words have been written about the assassination of Medgar Evers. Nothing, in our opinion, expresses that tragedy as well as the story by Charles W. Bailey, correspondent for the Minneapolis Tribune, which appeared in the Tribune of June 20. Subsequently the story was inserted in the Congressional Record.

Here follows the full text of that story, because of its quality and because we tend to forget so quickly.

"AT BURIAL IN ARLINGTON-'HE WAS CUT DOWN LIKE A FLOWER' EULOGIZER SAYS

"ARLINGTON, VA.--The humid haze of early summer lay hot and heavy on Washington, D. C., but here across the river, under the oak trees, the air was fresh and cool.

"The little girl sat on a folding chair, her mother on one side and her older brother on the other. The child's face was blank and bemused, almost dazed. Around her stood a thousand others. Closer in, a score of men with cameras crept and scuttled and snapped their shutters at her.

"In the center of the crowd, just in front of the girl and her brother and her mother, stood six soldiers. They held an American flag stiffly over the casket in which the little girl's father was to be buried.

"All around stood the small white headstones. Closest to the new grave, they marked men from New Mexico, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Minnesota, North Carolina.

"'In the midst of life,' the preacher said, 'we are in death... he cometh up and is cut down like a flower.' A big airliner, just airborne from the nearby field, drowned out the rest of the prayer, and the little girl twisted her feet and looked up, trying to see the plane.

"Something touched the girl's hand and she looked down. It was her mother's hand, seeking hers and enfolding it.

"The words went on, but the little girl seemed not to be listening. She sat still in her wide-skirted white dress, its color seeming brighter in contrast to the black clothes of all around her.

"A man's voice snapped out a muted command, higher up on the hill, and there was the rattle of rifle bolts, a warning in the quiet. But neither the child nor her mother seemed to have heard this, for the crash of the three volleys shattered their composure.

"Then, from above, came the long sad sweet notes of taps, just 24 notes in all. The bugler stood over the crest of the hill, out of sight of graveside, and it was probably just as well. Surely no man could play those notes every day, as this one must, if he had also to look at those who have to listen.

"The little girl wept for the first time now, as did her mother. The boy gave his sister a clean handkerchief. She twisted it in her hands as other men spoke at the graveside.

"There were two men from the American Veterans Committee, which had long known the girl's father as a worker and a companion, and which only a fortnight ago had elected him to its national board. Their words seem not to touch the girl or her family, despite the sorrow in them and in the speakers.

"Then another man, the director of the organization for which her father worked, began to speak, and the little girl began to listen.

"This man did not pray or read from scriptures, as others had earlier. Instead, he spoke the words of the Declaration of Independence:

"'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.'

"He said that the man being buried 'believed in those principles' and that when the time came, he had put on his uniform and gone 'far from Decatur, Mississippi...to help a strange people who, like those he left behind, were threatened by racism.'

"He told how the little girl's father came home to Mississippi--to 'the land he refused to disown'--and how he turned down opportunities to move elsewhere.

"The speaker referred again to the Declaration of Independence, this time to its closing sentence. 'Every time he left his family,' he said, 'he too was offering his life, his fortune, his sacred honor. That offering was finally accepted. He believed in his country. It now remains to be seen whether his country believes in him.'

"When the speaker finished, another man stepped forward and led the crowd in a hymn--the only one sung. It was a song the little girl's father had often led at home:

"'We shall all be free;
We shall all be free;
We shall all be free--someday;
Oh, deep in my heart
I do believe
We shall all be free--someday.'

"Now the little girl wept again, and then, looking at her mother and seeing her weeping too, sobbed aloud and clung to her uncle's arm. He lifted her into his lap.

"The six soldiers at the grave, moving for the first time in a half hour, silently and in intricate pattern folded the flag. Silently they passed it to a chaplain; silently he took it to the widow. She hugged it to her, seeing nothing as the chaplain saluted her and turned away.

"Then the little girl and her brother and her mother were taken away, leaving their father and husband under the oak trees with the others who, like him, earned in war their right to lie there.

"In a few weeks, he too will have a little headstone, with an inscription like all the thousands of others on the hills and in the hollows under the trees. His will say: Medgar Evers, Mississippi."

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENTS

SRC ANNUAL MEETING, JANUARY 29-30

The 1963 SRC Annual Meeting (cancelled because of the assassination of President Kennedy) will now be held in Atlanta January 29-30. Council presidents have been invited to attend. SRC pays all Atlanta expenses, state Councils are responsible for travel. Please do everything possible to encourage Council presidents to be present. We think the opportunity to see SRC at work and to have presidents meet each other well worth the effort and cost.

PLANS FOR 1964 MEETING OF STAFF

Tentatively, the 1964 meeting of Councils on Human Relations staff will be held at Black Mountain, N.C., at the Blue Ridge Assembly June 15-19. Please reserve these dates now. We hope to have a week-long meeting with plenty of opportunity for work and relaxation. Finances permitting, we also hope to have meetings of state presidents, local Council leaders, etc.. Your ideas on this meeting are welcomed, and needed.

PROGRAM IDEAS FOR 1964

FLORIDA COUNCIL TRIES NEW APPROACH TO ORGANIZATION

On October 5 the Executive Committee of the Florida Council voted to emphasize the establishment and growth of local Councils and to have the Executive Director and state office concentrate on servicing the needs and requests of local groups. This new emphasis was interpreted to the Council on November 2 at a meeting of delegates and presidents of all local Councils.

As a part of the new emphasis membership fees were abolished. An individual may now join FCHR simply by signing a statement indicating support of the objectives of the organization. Voluntary pledging will replace dues as a basis of financial support. The potential success of this approach was demonstrated in Palm Beach when that chapter held its annual dinner in late November. Over 300 persons attended the dinner held at the Palm Beach Towers Hotel; 178 persons joined FCHR and pledged over $5,000 for support of the 1964 program. On a statewide basis, FCHR now has approximately 1,200 members (from 501 in July) who have pledged $12,253 in support.

The Florida Council experiment will be watched closely and the results will be shared with all.

VIRGINIA COUNCIL ANNOUNCES STATEWIDE MEETING OF LAWYERS AS FIRST IN A SERIES OF MEETINGS OF PROFESSIONAL GROUPS

The following is a news release issued by VCHR on this new program:

"Lawyers who are concerned about constructive approaches to current tensions in race relations in Virginia are being invited to a one-day consultation at the Executive Motor Hotel in Richmond on Saturday, January 11.

"Principal speaker of the day will be Assistant U.S. Attorney General Burke Marshall, who will discuss current aspects of civil rights litigation and legislation.

"Invitations which are being issued say that a large number of lawyers have expressed concern about future developments in the field of race relations throughout the nation and, particularly, in Virginia. The letter to lawyers is signed by a 'Special Invitation Committee' composed of former deans F. D. G. Ribble of the University of Virginia Law School and Dudley Woodbridge of the William & Mary School of Law, and by former Senator Armistead L. Boothe of Alexandria.

"Panel discussions will focus on 'Respect for Law and Order and for Our Judicial System'; 'Bi-Racial Committees'; and 'The Bar and the Community.' Among the panelists will be two Greensboro, N.C. attorneys, W. O. Conrad, General Superintendent of the North Carolina Western Electric Company, and Percy L. Wall.

"Chairmen of the panel discussions will be Robert Millman, Harry L. Cohn, S.W. Tucker, Richard Ballard, and Lewis T. Booker, all Richmond attorneys.

"Although the consultation is planned and will be conducted by lawyers, the January 11 meeting is announced as 'the first of a series of such consultations sponsored by the Virginia Council on Human Relations, seeking to bring together leaders in the professions who exert unusual influence in their respective communities.'"

PROGRAM FOR YOUTH

Several Councils sponsor work with children and young people. In Northern Virginia a successful kindergarten and day camp is conducted for underprivileged children. In Dade County (Miami), Florida, a group of concerned persons have organized a program, Wider Horizons. Here follows their description of this important program:

"Wider Horizons is a community effort to broaden the cultural and educational experiences of Dade County's culturally deprived children.

"It is composed of thoughtful citizens, willing to give their time and talents in order that these children have greater opportunities to enlarge and understand their own capabilities. The volunteers participate in activities ranging from driving a car full of students to the Lowe Art Gallery, to teaching kindergarten two mornings a week.

"The following programs form the nucleus of Wider Horizons:

"1) Tutoring - Housewives, college students, chemists, all sit side by side in the Community Schools, helping with reading, multiplication tables or other problems.

"2) Field trips - Groups are driven to places of interest in the community to better acquaint them with their environment and widen their interests.

"3) Lyceum classes - Small groups of students meet with a leader in the Community Schools, to discuss problems that interest or concern them in their education, relations with society, or the arts. New concepts are introduced to stimulate creative thinking.

"4) Kindergartens - Non-profit pre-schools, taught by experienced volunteers, give youngsters a pleasant introduction to formal education, and ready them for first grade."

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL HAS FIELD REPRESENTATIVE SPECIALIZING IN RURAL PROGRAMS

The South Carolina Council, in cooperation with the National Sharecroppers Fund, employs Mr. L. S. James as a specialist in rural work. Recently, 245 persons attended a conference on Farmer Cooperatives and Job Training, jointly sponsored by the two agencies. NSF is interested in exploring the possibility of assisting other State Councils in establishing programs of this nature. SCCHR recently issued the following guide for local Councils concerned with economics and employment, especially in the rural and small town areas.

PURPOSE: To improve economic status, especially of low-income families.

To promote vocational and technical training and job placement based on merit.

PROPOSED PROGRAMS AND PROJECTS: Suggestions to groups and to individuals:

1. Become informed about available job training opportunities.
   a. Technical Education Centers in S.C.
   b. High School and Area Trade School vocational educational courses
   c. Courses under the Area Redevelopment Act (ARA)
   d. Courses under the Manpower Development and Training Act (MDTA)
   e. Educational provisions of the National Defense Act, Title VIII Courses

2. See that all unemployed and underemployed persons (those with families and annual incomes of $1,200 or less) register at nearest local employment service office for both training and work.

3. Work closely with schools, especially with guidance and vocational education teachers.
   a. Help to inform and raise aspiration levels of youth and of parents
   b. Assist with "Career Day," chapel programs, field trips, "Big Brother" assignments, etc.

4. Request feasibility studies
   a. For training classes
   b. For "cooperatives" where they seem to be needed.

5. Recruit trainees and employees for jobs and training in non-traditional areas.

6. Seek new job openings for disadvantaged youth and adults.
   a. In government at all levels
   b. In voluntary agencies and institutions
   c. In private business and industry.

7. Encourage and assist cooperating employers and employees.

8. Make and carry out plans for local economic development.
   a. By serving on local ARA committees and making Overall Economic Development Plans (OEDP)
   b. By initiating new business and industrial ventures--to provide new jobs and raise the per capita and total income level.

ON 1964...

From this "comfortable Atlanta office" we would like to report that we strode confidently into 1964, modestly pleased with our accomplishments of 1963 and with an absolute determination of what we could and should accomplish in the new year. But we cannot. 1963 ended abruptly without any consideration of our convenience. 1964 simply happened while we were brooding over what had not been done. Such as...

In Virginia, we didn't do enough to help Happy Lee get off to a running start on his ambitious and wise program to raise an additional $50,000 within the state and increase his membership to 5,000...

In North Carolina, we haven't found an ideal replacement to continue the work of our beloved colleague, Harry S. Jones...

In South Carolina, we haven't been much help to Alice Spearman in her determination to strengthen the SCCHR structure and expand membership beyond the present (and commendable) 900 plus...

In Georgia, we haven't given Frances Pauley a magic formula, or enough assistance, in her efforts to have meaningful programs in South Georgia...

In Florida (where some think we've spent a lot of time!) we haven't given enough assistance to helping Lou Mitchell get started with his bold new experiment...

In Alabama, we haven't done well in trying to insulate Norman Jimerson against the intolerable atmosphere of that state...

In Tennessee, we did very little to see that Kay Jones was successful in getting a stronger base of local support...

In Arkansas, we encouraged Nat Griswold in what was to become a very successful year, but we failed to follow-up what we started...

In Kentucky, we didn't give enough attention to the efforts of a good group of people who are trying to re-organize the KCHR...

In Mississippi, we did precious little to help that courageous group...

In Texas, we never did get back to Houston...

In Louisiana, we never did....

Be that as it may, we honestly feel that you had a good year.

Where are we--all of us--at the beginning of 1964? The concept of helping to achieve the decent society through Councils on Human Relations is a sound and workable one, perhaps the soundest and most workable of all the commendable programs being conducted. And there is now some real momentum toward decency. In even the most difficult situations there is some inkling that some of the people can respond to the best rather than the worst of society. This is our hope and our opportunity for 1964. A realistic consideration of what was not done in 1963 may indicate some of the specifics which should be done in 1964. But in its most basic terms we simply must try to be a part of and increase the momentum toward decency which is the reality of 1964. Perhaps we can even muse that, while being aware we are not indispensable to it, we helped to create that momentum. The important thing is that we choose to be a part of it in 1964.

Our sincere good wishes to all of you.

THE CHANGING MIND OF THE SOUTH: THE EXPOSED NERVE

LESLIE W. DUNBAR
Southern Regional Council

I

I PREMISE THAT THERE has been such a thing as a southern folk, clearly if not definably more a single people than any other Americans, composed of two grades of persons, both of whom have been truly part of the same folk, and yet one of whom, the Negro Southerners, because they were ruled by the other did not sense and hallow as did the whites their folk integrity and their distinctness from the rest of the nation. And because white Southerners have consciously known that they were set apart, they have struggled to define themselves, have striven for self-identity, and with every Cash or Percy—or Faulkner—asking "Who am I?" have moved nearer the point which comes in every self-examination, where discovery means either release or reunion.

Who is there who is not tired of this search, who would not rather give it up before he has to choose between release, and rejection, or recoil into the mind of the South, who would rather not stop short in self-discovery and become what history makes of him? And indeed, there has been a re-directing of the South's self-study. The intellectual and artistic concern is changing, has changed, from a deep, self-combative hoeing and chopping of souls and history and eternity, and toward commitment to the active issues of the day. The dark, Faulknerian, problems recede.

The classic interpreters of the South began with the conviction that there was a "South" and a "Southerner," and they hunted for definitions. Because the interpreters were themselves Southerners, dredging their prey up through their memories and revealing it as a Protean substance, their definitions were never abstract, and they never tired of examining countless aspects. Nor did they, however, ever yield the belief that something constant and essential lay under the aspects. The Southerner was to be known as a being, and not an active one at that. Only the public figures of the South defined themselves in activity, and the interpreters tended to be less interested in them than in regarding the South's election of them as another aspect of the essential being which needed to be pondered. The essential Southerner acted occasionally, savagely and without premeditation, and this proclivity of his was another aspect to be explained. But except for this, the Southerner "was"; he did not, since the Civil War, "do."

Our preoccupation today is with how Southerners do and will act. For this is a time of testing. We are re-learning an old truth, which historians have nearly always known and social scientists have frequently forgotten, that men reveal themselves more accurately through their action than through their established feelings, opinions, and beliefs.

Another change has occurred as well. Cash, writing as late as 1941, was not really much attentive to Negro Southerners, and Percy, writing also in 1941, could say that he was "usually in a condition of amazed exultation over the excellent state of race relations in the South." James Agee, almost the quintessential New Dealer, took only an occasional and not seriously interested glance at the Negro neighbors of his white Alabama sharecroppers. Of the classic writers, only Lillian Smith had the greatness to wrestle with what the others saw, but passed by, and that was the centrality of race to the southern self-consciousness[1]

In fact, not until the sit-in movement began in Greensboro in 1960 did the "mind" of Negroes become of conscious interest to white Southerners, in the sense that an active awareness began that the southern consensus had to include Negro values and desires. Even in the titanic controversies after 1954, the actors—those who were conspicuously making history—were almost always white: Senator Byrd, Governor Faubus, and the other captains of massive resistance. Negroes appeared only as a shadowy mass, from whom now and then emerged an impersonal lawyer or a poker-faced schoolchild walking through white faces lit with expression. The state of North Carolina might well put one of its historical markers at that dime store in Greensboro: here is where, after more than three centuries, the white and the Negro South were finally met.

In result, they have learned to know each other better. One Negro civil rights leader remarked to me that southern racial relations in the past had been like an unfaithful marriage, which could be preserved only by the two parties not speaking the truth to each other. Negro Southerners are today speaking the truth to their white neighbors. If white Southerners can learn to live with this truth, the marriage can be continued, and may even become a fruitful one. Still today, no Southerners are more bred to the essence of the region's distinctive history, manners, and outlook than are the Negroes. If Dixie is not yet ready for its epitaph, it will be only because Negroes, freed of illegitimacy, may give it new life.

For earlier white Southerners, even for those as late as Cash, a decision about racial policies was not socially crucial. Men had different opinions and beliefs, but these were like other personal preferences, or even convictions, that were tolerable by the folk. Southern racial relations were like Hinduism, able to absorb and contain many changes and interests and ideas. The advent of industrialization, the steady immigration of non-Southerners, the growth of learning, the magnification of cities—all had come and had modified the old patterns and would surely in time overthrow them. But the endurance—what a Southerner might call the "cussedness"—of the old ways was remarkable.

But now this changes, and I know no better way to illustrate the change at its profoundest — though infrequently perceived — level than by contrasting Faulkner with that present-day southern writer who, in surface aspects, is most like him. The genius of Faulkner was such that he was able to suffuse his characters in life and individuality even though, in fact, they were little more than marionette's. They were held in the hand of God, but that hand which controlled them kept them in ceaseless confrontation with their home, i.e., with southern history, and in it they defined themselves. Miss Flannery O'Connor's characters are also marionettes and also in the grasp of God. They are Southerners too, but this is only an artist's detail. They could be anyone, they are caught directly, as simple individuals, in the human predicament, and they act diretcly to meet it, not, as Faulkner's characters always did, as Southerners, but as mere people.

Fundamentally, this is where Southerners find themselves today, forced to act directly without validating their acts against their history, much of which is sinking fast underneath them. Another southern writer, Allen Tate, in his novel The Fathers, depicts the deep psychological hurt felt by conservative Virginians in 1860-1861 when pressures from the cotton states and from the North were mysteriously pushing Virginia into severance from the government in Washington, of which over the years since 1787 they had come to feel as proprietors. Something similar is happening today over the South, as men see institutions which they had thought were theirs (e.g., the churches, the town school), relationships which they had thought secure (e.g., mistress and maid), begin to take on new shape and purpose.

All this has meant that, for today's white Southerner, an explicit rationalizing of his views about race has become the most urgent of his intellectual and spiritual tasks, and that he has had to achieve it on his own, or with new referents. He has had to attune himself, harmoniously or discordantly, to the authoritative words and practices of institutions from outside his region, such as the federal government, national church bodies, national media, and even-in fact-Wall Street. Perhaps still a man living in a remote Black Belt county untouched as yet by racial controversy may be as unengaged as nearly all of us were but a few years past. But I suspect that no white man living now in a Danville or an Albany or a Birmingham can support himself either by mores or by Faulknerian brooding. For the strong segregationist, the mores will appear too mild when the protest comes; for nearly all men, the brooding will seem irrelevant.

It is astonishing how often a southern white liberal can date his acceptance of racial equality at some specific episode in his life, much as did the ex-Communists in The God That Failed[2] tend to date their break with Communism with a decisive, illuminating event. It is even more notable that almost every liberal can (and often does) recount the history of his changing attitudes. This sort of keen self-awareness occurs only with those life problems deeply and genuinely felt. Nevertheless, in accepting racial equality, the southern liberal does not typically reject the South. In Turgenev's

Fathers and Sons, when Bazarov's tolerance of an older conservative is asked—"you must take into account his upbringing as well as the times in which he lived the best part of his life"—, Barzarov exclaims: "His upbringing: Every man should educate himself. . . . As to the times, why should I depend upon them: Much better they should depend on me. No, brother, all that is just loose thinking, there's nothing solid behind it!" To a Southerner, if to no one else, this is questionable doctrine, because inadequate tolerance; and rightly or wrongly, the key word of southern liberalism has been "tolerance."

Southern liberalism deserves more serious study than it has had. What, in this context, is worth remarking is the long sustained refusal of southern liberals to repudiate the South, and this is one side of the tolerance which they have elevated above all other social virtues. Few liberals have acted out their beliefs. They do not try to enter their children in Negro schools, do not usually refuse to eat in segregated restaurants or worship in segregated churches, do not spontaneously and widely mingle socially with their Negro peers. This is not well described as either hypocrisy or timidity. It is something a good bit more basic. The general conformity of the liberal to social practices which he opposes is a mark of his dogged refusal to alienate himself from southern society. He has counted himself a Southerner, with an obligation to respect the community and, so far as possible, to keep it whole. He often will, in fact, contend (and not only from polemical motives) that he—and not the defenders of segregation—represents the core of southern traditions, and he will sometimes appeal to other values acknowledged to be "southern," such as "courage" or "manners" or "individuality, against the less venerable practice of segregation. The tenacity with which liberals hold to southern culture, while endeavoring to reform it, is a quality which cannot be measured, but it would seem at least as intense as the somewhat comparable spirit of the Benthamites and later Labourites in England; they too insisted on behaving as Englishmen as they went about changing the country.

On the whole, this attitude of respect toward the community is not alien to a great many of the Negro leaders. And on the whole, this shared attitude presents the only real possibility, for those of us who want one, of preserving the South as a cultural organism, and not merely as a cultivated, but mummified, memory, analogous to

New England. It is not a very strong possibility, though the relative poverty of the region may help along its chances: poverty is a strong folk-tie. I may be wrong and shortly proved so, but I see the white South today, outside the Black Belt but even there in some measure, as disposed, though often reluctantly, to accept more and more racial integration, but wanting also to keep the community much as it has been. I see Negro Southerners wanting equality desperately and angrily, but disposed to keep the community much as it has been, if they are admitted to it.

The South that Cash sought to track down was the white South, and, assuming that Cash found what he sought, it was unprepared for 1954. That South is still here. But because, being what it was and is, it stayed distant from the black South, called itself and itself only "the South," it has become an inert thing, a mere environment. Within this environment and against it, the southern leaders of today —the Negroes—act. It is the antithesis of motion against matter, and unless it can be cured there is not even a meager chance that the South will persevere. The white South is become an object, and only subjects can, even in a Faulknerian sense, endure.

Myrdal remarked that, "The intellectual energy spent on the Negro problem in America should, if concentrated in a single direction, have moved mountains."[3] In truth, almost the profoundest thing one can say about southern race relations is that it is an old problem, toughened and complicated and made wondrously intricate by age, which has confused its diagnosis, rendered uncertain its treatment, and obscures its prognosis. Ancient as it is, it has had changing definitions, and these have, in the past, been determined by the interests and policies of white people. As Myrdal put it,

> It is thus the white majority group that naturally determines the Negro's 'place.' All our attempts to reach scientific explanations of why the Negroes are what they are and why they live as they do have regularly led to determinants on the white side of the race line. In the practical and political struggles of effecting changes, the views and attitudes of the white Americans are likewise strategic. The Negro's entire life, and, consequently, also his opinions on the Negro problem, are, in the main, to be considered as secondary reactions to more primary pressures from the side of the dominant white majority.[4]

[3]Gunnar Myrdal, et al., An American Dilemma, N. Y., 1944. p. 27.

This analysis was undeniably correct as an interpretation of the pre-1945 period; it is no longer so. Beginning about the close of World War II, the power to determine the Negro's "place" began to shade off from white control. Today, the Negro grip on the levers of social change is secure, and much more firm than the remnants of white direction.

The race relations policy of the southern white leadership from 1619 until Reconstruction, and from about 1890 until the 1940's, was governed by the objective, How to get the maximum satisfaction from the Negro population. The policy was pursued in economic, political, and social relationships, frequently with unsuccess. This fairly unanimously held single policy has, in the years since the 40's, been both losing adherents and singleness of application; the growth of Negro votes combined with pressures from Washington are forcing on our public life policies markedly more progressive than those which still dominate our churches and other more or less privately determined activities. Perhaps only in Mississippi today is there near unanimity about racial policy. But it is not the old policy of maximum satisfaction. Instead, it is, How to maintain white control of the institutions of society. At least, Negroes are not regarded as instruments and tools, but as antagonists. That, in itself, is a higher status.

If initiative has passed from the white majority to the Negro minority, the principal cause has been the success of Negroes in achieving a new and more stable self-knowledge. The dilemma—intellectual, emotional, political—of the Negro, especially the Negro male, has always been the problem of identity.[5] A man's valuation of himself is derived and sustained by his reading of other people's assessment of him, and at all times in a person's life there are some "other people" whom he regards as the most authoritative assessors. Because of history and color, Negroes for centuries got maddeningly confusing reports whenever they inquired of their society, "Who am I?"

[5]There has been a lot of recent writing on this subject, mostly by non-southern interpreters. See the three books of essays by James Baldwin: Notes of a Native Son. Boston, 1955; Nobody Knows My Name. N. Y., 1961; The Fire Next Time. N. Y., 1963. Essays in the first book are of uneven quality and interest, but some of them and all of the two later books are superb and required reading for insight into the Negro revolt. For the latter reason only, so too is Louis Lomax, The Negro Revolt. N. Y., 1962. See also the excellent book by Harold I. Isaacs, The New World of Negro Americans. N. Y., 1963. Isaacs has an especially interesting essay in Encounter, August, 1963: "Blackness and Whiteness." One scientific inquiry is B. P. Karon, The Negro Personality.

With some notable variations, they adopted the social values and standards of the dominant white society. For generations, Negro Southerners had no sustained insight into white society beyond their own neighborhood, and they consequently shaped their self-portrait through the terms of local opinion. The past three or four decades have been a time, even for rural Negroes, of awareness of a larger universe of values and authoritative opinions, and increasingly they have tended to disregard local definitions in preference for more favorable nation-wide and world-wide judgments of their worth. But even in the old days, the answer to their question, "Who am I?", was far from clear. The Christianity they had been taught affirmed some things so surely that not even the utmost ingenuity of white pastoral apologists could altogether obscure them. The grand generalities of American democracy seeped into their consciousness. Their white neighbors behaved toward them with contradictory manners, producing what was (and, to a large extent, still is) surely one of the most weirdly implausible patterns of human relations ever observed. And always, Negroes were accompanied by a few stereotypes which sprang easily into the minds of white persons, even those a Negro might regard as friends, and displaced the actual Negro person they knew—or thought they knew.

The stereotypes were and are the damning judgments of white society on Negro identity. What is happening today is that Negroes are disowning the stereotypes, the white man's creations, are refusing any longer to acknowledge themselves to be what the white man said they were. White Southerners are confronted with a blunt demand from the Negro that he be accepted on his terms: and this is the crucial problem of race relations today. For years, whites have decreed that Negroes must think of themselves as the whites thought of them. Negroes now are insisting that the white majority revise its opinion of them in accord with their own, newly fashioned self-conception.

N. Y., 1958; its findings and methods aroused some dispute. As a stranger to psychology I hesitate to cite writings in this field but from a dilletantish reading I might mention three pieces which were suggestive to me: Robert Coles, "Serpents and Doves: Non-Violent Youth in the South" (in Erik H. Erikson, ed., Youth: Change and Challenge. N. Y., 1963). Lewis W. Jones, "Negro Youth in the South" (in Eli Ginzberg, ed., The Nation's Children, Vol. 3, N. Y., 1960); D. C. Wilson and E. M. Lantz, "The Effect of Culture Change on the Negro in Virginia, as Indicated by a Study of State Hospital Admissions," American Journal of Psychiatry, July, 1957.

Negroes found that in the same European-American culture which had relegated them to inferiority, white supremacy had become a strand of that culture which "tends to wear away protective strata, to break down its own defenses, to disperse the garrisons of its entrenchment." The words are Schumpeter's,[6] and taken from a context which, though not analogous, is suggestive. Some other words of his are exactly applicable to contemporary Negro agitation: "Secular improvement that is taken for granted and coupled with individual insecurity that is acutely resented is of course the best recipe for breeding social unrest."[7] A concatenation of economic and educational factors, supported haphazardly and minimally by politics, produced the secular improvement; another array of political, emotional, and social circumstances caused and kept strong the individual insecurity. The social unrest is a direct outcome of the combination, and is given its specific form and intensity through the re-infusion of ideas and values into American culture by a constantly growing number of educated Negroes who have derived these ideas and values from the cultural property of western white peoples, the terms of whose inheritance require them to admit non-whites with whom they come into regular communication to equal shares in the property.

tion conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." If, in this centennial year of the Emancipation Proclamation, of Gettysburg and Vicksburg, we look back four score and seven years, we confront a less happy and auspicious event: 1876, the year when Hayes defeated Tilden, or Tilden defeated Hayes, whichever it was. Hayes became President through the Compromise of 1877, and for the next 70 years or so the white South was left alone by the nation in its policies and in its relationships toward Negro citizens.

The Civil War had freed the slaves and preserved the union. It had, besides, put on two Amendments to the Constitution—the 14th and 15th—which in the years after 1876 would be, as to Negroes, well nigh meaningless: four generations of Negro and white Southerners would come and go and live without acknowledging that Negroes could and should vote, or that laws should give them equal protection. The Civil War, moreover, left all these people in a ravished region, where men would get used to desperate poverty. The War and its aftermath made the South feel its spiritual and cultural separation from the rest of the nation more keenly even than before.

Then, earlier, and now, we have defined "the South" by its differences from the rest.

Southerners and non-Southerners have been, in fact, much alike. White men everywhere ruled, and Negroes were subservient, and treated as inferiors. Society belonged—and still largely does—to the white man. Protestants ruled, dominating the economic and cultural and political life of the nation. Society placed a high sentimental value on farm or small-town culture and people, and long after the bulk of our population moved into cities the rural districts kept political power. And North and South, East and West, we all believed that any man who worked hard could get ahead.

These common qualities of American life, native both to the South and the non-South, are dissolving. And the present crisis in the South, which became acute in 1954, does not result from traditional differences from the nation; it results instead from the dissolution of things which have in the past united us.

Six landmark dates conveniently illustrate the changes. Although they affect the whole nation they are a special challenge to the South. Somebody—Arthur Koestler, I think—once spoke of the Jews as humanity's exposed nerve, feeling first and most sharply all the troubles and pains. Sometimes one feels that the South is America's exposed nerve, and that issues which are national in scope are most intense, or at least most apparent, here.

There was 1944, and Smith v. Allwright, and the ensuing erosion of the white monopoly of power to make political decisions. There was 1954, and Brown v. Topeka, which in its deeper import signified that the civic institutions of American society could no longer be operated as if they were the property of one race, and which, in its application since the New Rochelle case,[8] has upset the North as well as the South. There was 1960, and confirmation that non-Protestants have a share in the power to make the country's highest decisions. There was 1962, and Baker v. Carr, and the consequent remarkably fast crumbling of the rural fortress of political power.

There was 1940, the last year before our entry into World War II, the last year of a peace-time economy. After seven years of prodigious effort by the New Deal, unemployment in the United States was 14.6% of the working force. We went into the war and unemployment virtually ceased. We came out of the war and unemployment stayed low while the country was busily engaged in converting to peace-time needs. We had a recession in 1948, and the next year unemployment shot up to 5.9%. We went into the Korean fighting, and again unemployment declined. We had another recession in 1954, and unemployment was up again. We had yet another recession in 1958, and this time unemployment really rose—to 6.8% of the working force of this country. After each recession, recovery was slower. There has been little improvement since, and President Kennedy in March 1963, called unemployment our "number 1 economic problem," and reported that it was still about 6%; the rate for August 1963 was a seasonal 5.5%. Many economists believe that the government's way of computing unemployment seriously minimizes its extent.[9]

Neither the policies of Republican nor Democratic administrations have, as yet, been able to lick this problem. Unemployment is high despite the boosting of the economy with huge expenditures for armaments and for space exploration; without those would we be back to the 14.6% unemployed of 1940?

Here we meet a tragic irony; as has happened in the past Negroes seem to be the victims not only of discrimination, but of impersonal history. After the first World War the country severely restricted the flow of immigrants from abroad. Up to then, American industry had grown by drawing on a boundless labor supply of European immigrants. With immigration drastically cut, industry met its need for new labor by drawing from the farms of America, including those of the South. Beyond this last large supply of white manpower, waited in economic succession the Negro. The tragic irony is that when his turn is come, the job market is declining. This is occurring in manufacturing and mining, chiefly, and these are fields which have been a gateway for new entrants into the free competition for economic advancement. No one seriously can continue to believe that America is for everyone now a land of opportunity where any man, unaided, can get ahead by dint of his own hard work. Some five to seven per cent or more of those people who want to work, find that there are no jobs, even though there is general prosperity in the country, and for the Negro the unemployment rate is about double that for whites.[10]

And, finally, there was 1947, when Mr. Truman appointed the President's Committee on Civil Rights, and later espoused its recommendations, even at the cost of a party split at the Democratic convention of 1948. No political act since the Compromise of 1877 has so profoundly influenced race relations; in a sense, it was the repeal of 1877. Among the consequences were (a) a shift of emphasis from Negro "uplift"—essentially a paternalistic approach—to civil rights, i.e., the achievement of more than nominal citizenship; (b) a renewal of the fateful rupture between South and non-South; and (c) the ensuing complications for economic and social reform by statute, so that, since 1948, law-making for domestic problems has fallen into desuetude.[11]

[10]See Charles E. Silberman, "The Businessman and the Negro," Fortune, September, 1963.

[11]The ability of southern Congressmen to act through concepts of the national interest, so long as they felt presently secure in race relations, made pos-

These six landmarks suggest, if I am not mistaken, that we shall have much more democracy in the United States. The price of that will be the ending of certain old ways and traditions. Groups who have led and controlled the country from its earliest days will have to accept a lessening of their influence. And if the South had trouble joining the old union—which, like it, was white, Protestant, and rural in its outlook and leadership—can it join this new union? The South was separated from the basically similar non-South of yesterday by a sharp enough cleavage; the new division would be a gulf.

To put it differently, the policies which Mississippi represents would not merely perpetuate North-South differences. The longer these policies are pursued, the greater becomes the alienation of Mississippi and the Black Belt generally from the American consensus. Just by standing pat, residents of these places will become strangers in their own land, because the nation as a whole is moving farther and farther from them.

IV

Over the years, Negro Southerners tried various methods of effecting change. They occasionally resorted to violence in the slave revolts of the ante-bellum period. During Reconstruction they sought the power of office. In Populist days they experimented—to their sorrow—with an electoral alliance with small farmers and mechanics. They tried the Booker T. Washington regimen of self-improvement, in the expectation that they would be accepted when their uplift was completed. They left the South, for the uncertain and often unrewarding North and West.

Finally—and with really their only success—they converted the political issue of equality into the Constitutional issue of equal rights. The "direct-action" movement has been a new force, and one of tremendous effect. It has produced results and it has unleashed and directed energies. Yet even its appeal has been to values thought to be in or implied by the Constitution, and the safety and success of the movement have been protected throughout by the procedural guarantees of the Constitution. The reform of the Negro question in the United States has been a striking instance of the effect of a constitution upon the life and events of a society. The constitution, created by the society, becomes a force which changes society.[12]

The Constitution becomes a revolutionary instrument, for Negroes, being political outcasts, have had to combat the government, and not merely the government of the day. Nowhere yet in the old Confederacy does a politically representative body debate and settle on policy, except in two circumstances: to shore up the legal defences of segregation; or to circumscribe as closely as possible the scope of a judicial decree when defiance is considered inexpedient. Nowhere has a deliberative body accepted the premise that social change is necessary or inevitable, and that action to guide that change is its responsibility.

None has done so, because southern political theory has been incapacitating. Although formal democracy has been in short supply in the South, the tone and practice of southern politics has been democratic almost to an extreme—among the whites. Probably no where else in the country have there been closer personal relationships between voters and representatives, at all levels of government. But a democracy which is short on formal controls and efficient methods of obtaining popular consensus, and which puts a high value on informal means of effecting accountability, is going to be a conservative society. And when not all the inhabitants are constituents, the conservatism will be, in fact, defensiveness. Thus both the democratic and the conservative spirits of the South combined to defend the folk, its monopoly of power and its cultural integrity. There is nothing to deliberate about, and to do so is betrayal. There is no relief from this paralysis except through an enlarged Negro vote, and a few municipalities of the South are already tasting this emancipation.

We may well ask again whether, when a conflict runs deep, democratic politics and its institutions can solve it. If the southern conflict is being resolved, it is because it was possible to appeal it to a constitution, whose first principle is that it itself is enforceable law. There is still some life left in the old maxim that democracy requires agreement on fundamentals, although it may more accurately be this: that democratic politics cannot be counted on to bridge deep chasms of opinions and values unless undergirded by a fundamental authority (e.g., a self-enforcing constitution) which is independent of parties and legislatures.

[12]cf. the interesting analysis by Gerhard Loewenberg, "The British Constitution and the Structure of the Labour Party," American Political Science Review, September, 1958.

Impersonal causes—the boll weevil, farm technology and chemicals, faster-paced industrialization, communications media, and still others—re-arranged the roots of southern life after World War I. But human action did not, until the last decade.

Now Southerners are not only being moved by their environment, but are revising themselves and their manners of living with and getting along with each other. Events and change are pell-mell, and unpredictable. Whatever we say, we must say most tentatively. I note, therefore, that the case has often, even usually, been that white Southerners can and do change their racial mores when inescapably confronted by a community-wracking situation to which they must respond in one way or another. But I note further that this has not been invariably so; witness, e.g., Albany (Ga.). Those places, however, which have refused to yield to the Negro demands, modest as they often have been in the South, have been able to do so only through techniques of suppression which tear at precepts of the Constitution. They have maltreated the right of assembly, denigrated the supremacy of federal law, whored the police powers of the states.

The Negro demands have been within the Constitution. The Negro methods have been within the liberties and privileges of the Constitution; only occasionally have they violated the rules of the game. Southern communities have been tested, therefore, not only in their customs and morality, but in their understanding of and affection for the Constitution. Those many which have accommodated, and have stepped into the currents of change, have shown to us that the feelings men have do not necessarily determine their actions or reactions; that when confronted with practical choices, men discover themselves more accurately than they had before. I have to leave to others the scientific analysis,[13] but I believe we can see the mind of the white South changing through the action of the black South and the accommodating reaction of the white South, and that a new South is shaping itself through history-making, and not through history-consciousness.

[13]Which is, of course, being supplied. The point of view I have here expressed is consistent with that of Allport and his supporters. See, e.g., Thomas F. Pettigrew, "Personality and Sociocultural Factors in Intergroup Attitudes: a Cross-National Comparison," Conflict Resolution, March 1958; and "Regional

Success breeds hard problems, and it seems to me that the Negro movement is courting two very serious ones. There is disquieting evidence that a great many Negroes, naturally imbued with the excitement and the power of having led America's first sustained experiment in government by the street, are oblivious to the fact that their guiding rule and their indispensable ally has been the Constitution. Secondly, the availability of the political process has been so long withheld from them that they may not learn soon to value it.

I see little or no prospect for rational answers to America's or the South's racial woes unless the channels of politics are opened up for their resolution, by Congress and by the states. This means a steady transference of issues from court to legislature. The Constitution has done its work, and the way is cleared to reach decisions through consensus. For the long run, Baker v. Carr may be the avenue through which Negroes, under the leadership and representation of new, political types, may bring racial issues finally into political settlement. In the nature of things, the South's practical alternative to government by the street may include the price of a half dozen or more Adam Clayton Powells, but that is democracy's age-old exaction.

In the meantime, we can note that any government has but three possible postures toward the question of racial equality: in favor, opposed, or neutral. The political theory of the South has for more than three centuries been grounded on the principle of white supremacy. It has been the cardinal doctrine. If, then, southern state governments were to follow the lead already given by some municipalities, and move from opposition to neutrality, this would be a truly historic change.

Differences in Anti-Negro Préjudice," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, July 1959, From the former: "The success of the movement in the South does not depend—this hypothesis would contend—on changing the deeply ingrained orientations of prejudice-prone personalities; rather, it rests on the effectiveness with which racial integration now going on in the South can restructure the mores to which so many culturally intolerant southerners conform."

In fact, the border states have already moved beyond neutrality,[14] and have begun incorporating into their public policy commitments favoring equality. And of even greater historic moment, some of the old Confederacy states have begun the withdrawal of state power from the defense of segregation and inequality.

This seems to me the sine qua non for the preservation of the South, as a community of persons acknowledging a common heritage. There must be an end to governmental hostility toward Negro advance, and acceptance of a political theory which sees government as neutral toward the competing aspirations of all economic and social elements. Such theory has been a commonplace in American national politics since at least Theodore Roosevelt. It will have to be established in the South and will have to be founded on the conditional truth that neutrality of the governmental power has to exist if there is to be order. Hobbes may not have said the last word in political philosophy, but he did say the first: power should be independent of the competition of private interests, and, because of its recognition of the equal potential threat of every person to public order, must acknowledge the equality of rights.

V

Let us say only that as long as a large number of people sense an identity among themselves, the South as a specific, self-conscious culture will endure. As was said at the start of this essay, who is there who is not tired of struggles for more definitive answers?[15] Perhaps I could venture that a Southerner is a person who feels, as against all other people, that he is the more moral, using that word in its broadest meaning of being spiritually fit for life as it is. But this would say no more than that the Southerner shares a widespread conceit. Perhaps it would mean more if I said that the Southerner is someone who can recognize that he has lost every argument about good and evil he has ever had—and he's had a lot [14]Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, and West Virginia have all legislated some minimal standards and mediation procedures for racial relations, and the governor of Kentucky has gone further with a sweeping executive order.

[15]I have been privileged to read a draft of the forthcoming book of James McBride Dabbs, whose The Southern Heritage (N. Y., 1958) is the likeliest candidate of recent years to stand beside the classic interpretations of Cash and Lillian Smith. Dabbs has not tired of the search.

—yet he still feels himself somehow more moral, again in the broadest meaning.

But it is safer to come back to the simple test of identification. The deepest wisdom in human relations is to accept a man as whatever he names himself. Ten years from now, or 20, will people living between the Potomac and the Rio Grande still identify themselves with each other, still feel worthwhileness in calling themselves Southerners?

I don't know. But I think we all do know some things that bear on the answer.

We know, most importantly, that politics is the way a people conducts its affairs, and that politics not only serves a group of people pragmatically but gives it unity, helps make of it a community. When the political processes cannot handle the affairs of the people, and when to settle grievances men have to act outside those processes, the polity is always hurt, sometimes to the point of death. Both Negroes and intense segregationists, including segregationist officials, have felt that they must take their causes outside the normal processes of politics.

The South is a little place. It cannot act greatly, and its survival means hardly anything to the world. Except that, as I have tried to argue, the only way it can, in fact, survive is to do something that would matter to the world, and that is to become a rarity, a bi-racial community at peace with itself. It can do so, I think, only by integrating Negroes into its political processes.

Southern politics is just now, as usual, full of curious things. Mississippi is experimenting with a Soviet style government, with the Citizens Council paralleling the state machine in emulation of a successful Communist Party. Southern governors have become the de facto executive directors of the state chambers of commerce, and spend their time competing with each other as supplicants for new plants. We have talked of state socialism and state capitalism, but what do we call governments whose chief affair it is to entice and propitiate business? And all over the South, battle lines draw close to each other, portentous of an epic contest which may never occur in any explicit, decisive engagement, but which will, one way or another, reach to the innermost desires of the South.

For southern conservatism is blending now with that of the nation at large in spirited defense against the dissolution of the old unities of American life. Southern liberalism has, and this is its good luck, no choice but to accept the Negro's cause as its own. The pains of the warfare between those who are rebelling against 300 years of history and those who want to move more rapidly into the future, will probably be most acutely felt in the South; it is the South's ancient calling to deflect pain and guilt from the rest of the nation.

Negroes have hymned the American dream, but only its battle-cries. There are other parts of it and, if we read our history honestly, the Birchites and lesser breeds within the law are responsive to them. A "nice" home; people like ourselves; Jesus, and "our" church; the righteousness of property. America is on its way, not to a confrontation with its dream, but to a study of it, a mining of its content. The cutting edge of one drill is the radical right, and the other is the Negroes. It is in the South that each will probably cut most deeply. We are likely to learn a lot about ourselves, these next few years, as the drills cut away.

5 Forsythe Street, N.W.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Branton:

Thank you for your letter of May 22, 1962.

East Texas is certainly a strategic area in which to work in Texas. We certainly will be most happy to distribute educational material on the project.

For your information, I am enclosing an which was made by Mr. Gould Beech of the voting May 5th here in Harris County. Mr. Beech is a member of our organization and as he says he is "hep" on politics.

Anything that we can do, please let us know.

Sincerely yours,

Ethel Dumbauld

CANDIDATES WHO HAD LIBERAL SUPPORT WON WHEN THE PUBLIC---

Knew the issues---and the candidates---

YARBOROUGH (first in Governor's Race)
KILGARLIN
COLE
WHITFIELD

CONSERVATIVES WON WHEN---

(a) They were incumbents---

Floyd
Grover
Garrison
Shipley
W. H. Miller
McDavid

(b) A combination of billboard and advertising money, and more people who were willing to "swallow the conservative icket whole", together with the growing strength of the John Birch Society and the F.I.A. made it possible for unknown conservatives to win---

Duggan
Whatley

IN THE RUN-OFF, TWO NEW LIBERALS ARE RUNNING FOR THE FIRST TIME---BASS and HARRISON, and face two CONSERVATIVES ALSO RUNNING FOR THE FIRST TIME: Keith and Shutt. A LIBERAL RUNNING FOR THE SECOND TIME, BROOKS, FACES A CONSERVATIVE RUNNING FOR THE SECOND TIME, Kohler.

WHY DID SO MANY OF THE LIBERAL LEGISLATIVE CANDIDATES LOSE?

1. The growing strength of the John Birch-F.I.A. secret organizations. This has cut into Liberal strength in the North Side, East End, North Shore, Southeast and Pasadena boxes.

2. The fact that more Conservatives were incumbents.

3. The Lack of voting machines. 300 voting machines had been assigned the Republicans, and increased Republican voting made lines shorter in Conservative precincts which got their same pro-rata share of machines based on total registration.

4. Lines were longest at the predominantly Negro precincts.

   This contributed directly to the loss of some legislative positions to Conservatives; for example:

   CLYDE MILLER received a total of only 8,204 votes in the 41 predominantly Negro boxes.

   Only one-third of the Negro voters who voted in these 41 precincts voted for CLYDE MILLER.

   MILLER's opponent, Grover, received 1,883 votes in these same boxes, indicating that Conservatives can win support even for candidates whose records are so bad that the Houston Press opposes them!

   The real loyalty of Negro voters is shown by the fact that they voted 70% for YARBOROUGH!

   MILLER lacked only 4,400 votes of being elected.

SIGNIFICANT FACTS ABOUT BARBARA JORDAN'S CAMPAIGN:

1. MISS JORDAN got more votes than any other HCCO-HCD backed candidates except ECKHARDT and WHITFIELD, who are incumbents, and CLYDE MILLER, who had been in the Legislature previously and who was in a two-man race. (BARBARA JORDAN had two opponents, and in many predominantly Liberal boxes, Shock, a Church of Christ minister, split the vote.)

2. In the white boxes, those who voted for the HCD slate voted strongly for MISS JORDAN, and she trailed the other first-time candidates by only a small percentage. This was true in River Oaks, Box 135, where there are traditionally about 50 voters who vote for the Liberal candidates---MISS JORDAN got a few more votes than some of the other first-time candidates.

   It was true also in the North Side boxes, East End boxes, and Pasadena boxes.

3. Slightly more than half of all of the votes BARBARA JORDAN received came from white voters.

4. Only 47% of the registered Negro voters voted. Of these about 10% failed to vote for MISS JORDAN.

5. All of the first-time Liberal candidates either LOST, or are in run-offs---MISS JORDAN included. It was not a matter of Liberals electing other candidates and failing to support MISS JORDAN. BILL SHEAD, for example, got only 2,672 votes in the IDENTICAL white boxes than she did. HARRISON received 5,500 more, PHILPOT 5,800 more (despite the fact that he had organized support outside of the HCD).

6. The basic Liberal ticket would seem to have had about 28,000 votes in the white boxes. MISS JORDAN received all but 4,700 of these votes.

7. Where BARBARA JORDAN'S votes came from:

22,090	41	boxes
1,528	7	mixed boxes
22,773		white boxes

There is a growing effort to persuade Negro voters to join in supporting conservative and ultra-conservative candidates.

"The Liberals let BARBARA down" is being repeated by those who are leading the movement to get Negro support for Conservative candidates. There is no law which will prevent the spread of this lie. The facts, however, may help.

There is also some disappointment among those who backed losing Liberal candidates, who point out that MISS JORDAN received more than twice as many votes in white boxes than any of the other Liberal candidates received in Negro boxes.

Both arguments are pointl ss, and can only damage the cause of decency and fairness in government.

The important fact is that there is a big job to be done in the future in getting the issues to all voters.

Dear Mrs. Dumbauld:

Thank you for your letter of May 9 regarding registration problems in the State of Texas.

There was some question at first as to whether or not the Voter Education Project would do any work at all in the State of Texas, but we finally concluded that we would include East Texas as a part of the area in which we would work. We have not yet established any line of distinction as to what constitutes East Texas.

We will be printing a lot of educational material at an early date, and I am sure that the Houston Council could assist the Project by distributing these materials in your area to aid the educational phase which you mentioned. We do not have our long-range plans for Texas developed at this time, but we will keep you advised as those plans progress.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Mr. Wiley Branton
Voter Education Project
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Branton:

Please forgive me for not writing sooner after receiving the article for release on the Voter Education Project.

In Texas there is no problem regarding voter registration --to the extent that there is no discrimination and anyone paying their poll tax can vote. Some people feel that this may become a problem if we do away with the poll tax.

Our problem in Texas and certainly in Houston is voter education--education as to the importance of the individual in securing a poll tax and then voting and the weight he/she carries in the all important function as a good citizen.

Mr. Rilling is aware of the unique situation that we have in Texas with the staff person being on a city council rather than a state council. I am wondering if this might be a cooperative endeavor on the part of the two groups with the load being carried through this office. This might be the first step toward coordinating our efforts, as well as getting an important task done. Also, the NAACP is certainly not a strong group locally and the efforts of this group might be coordinated with ours.

For your information: 1960 Census Harris County population was 1,243,158 and of that 246,351 or nearly 20% is Negro. In 1962 in Harris County the total paying poll tax and exemptions were 357,000 and 60,000 of these were negroes. In the voting May 5, only 23,000 Negroes voted.

I shall be looking forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. George Dumbauld

Dear Mr. Jones:

Thank you for your letter of May 18 in which you sent us information pertaining to voter registration efforts in North Carolina. We appreciate receiving the names and addresses of the organizations mentioned in your letter.

We have not made a grant to the North Carolina State Conference of Branches, N.A.A.C.P. as such, but we have made a grant to the national office of N.A.A.C.P. with the understanding that a portion of the grant will be spent toward voter registration efforts in North Carolina. The National Urban League will carry on a registration program in Winston-Salem, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference will work in Elizabeth City and Chowan County. N.A.A.C.P. has promised to work in High Point, Fayetteville, Charlotte, Rocky Mount, Wilmington, and Edenton.

We are pleased at the reports which we have been getting regarding the registration effort in Durham, since we made a grant to the Durham Committee on Negro Affairs to assist in this project.

Very truly yours,

Voter Education Project

Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Branton:

Paul Rilling has asked the directors of State Councils on Human Relations to write you regarding voter registration efforts in our state and to suggest what organizations are best equipped to carry on this work.

I understand that the state NAACP has already received a grant from the project. In addition to the NAACP and its local chapters, I might suggest some other local groups which might be interested in voter education work:

Greensboro Citizens Association
Henry E. Frye, President
P. O. Box 401
Greensboro, N. C.

Asheville-Buncombe County Citizens Organization
Rosella Hill
Allen High School
Asheville, N. C.

Raleigh Citizens Association
Dr. Grady Davis
Shaw University
Raleigh, North Carolina

I understand that a very good voter registration project is now underway in Durham, sponsored either by the NAACP or the Durham Committee on Negro Affairs. John H. Wheeler is chairman of the latter.

MORE

Of course, the League of Women Voters is active in most communities in this state, and voter registration is a part of their program. Here in Charlotte they have been setting up stations in shopping centers, urging people to register.

This is about all the information I can give you at the present time, but I will keep the project in mind and send any further information that may come to my attention.

Sincerely yours,

Opening the Door to Employment

The Civil Rights law makes it possible for a Negro to eat where he wishes, patronize the hotel of his choice, go to the movies when he pleases. These are giant steps forward. But practically speaking, what good are they to the Negro who does not have the price of a meal or a hotel room or a theater ticket?

What is needed to make them meaningful is the assurance that a Negro can get a job on his merits so that he can pay his own way. For until Negroes are financially free, the social and political freedoms they are winning will have little reality.

Some Negro leaders are reluctant to enter the employment struggle now. They say:

"We're having a tough enough time with school desegregation or public accommodations without getting involved in employment."

"Let's face it. We would be selling something we don't have. There simply aren't enough qualified Negroes in our town for white collar jobs."

"When the employment provisions of the Civil Rights law take effect, we won't have to organize for jobs. Washington will handle it."

To such objections we would answer:

1. The winning of jobs will accelerate advances all along the line. The struggle for equal education, voting and public accommodations will be enhanced, not neglected.

2. If there is a lack of qualified Negro personnel, you can help remedy it. What more important project could you undertake?

3. The federal government may pass laws, but unless there is community acceptance of those laws, they will be ignored. An employment project helps to create such a favorable community climate. But more important, organizing for better jobs is a do-it-yourself community undertaking which increases the pride and self-respect of every Negro.

These three conclusions are not idle speculation. They are based on the experience here in Georgia of three cities where Negroes organized for equal employment. In Atlanta, Macon and Brunswick — a large city, a medium-sized city and a small town — they proved it can be done.

What did they do? What problems did they run into? Would their techniques apply to your town? The stories vary. But each may contain some new way of working, some new approach which would be useful to other Georgia leaders in opening the doors to employment.

ATLANTA: OPERATION BREADBASKET

The Atlanta operation is based roughly on the techniques used by a group of Philadelphia ministers with the same name. Early in 1963 it organized to work exclusively for employment opportunities. It involves 400 Negro ministers of every denomination. Among the most active leaders in Operation Breadbasket is Rev. Oliver W. Holmes, Assistant Director of the Georgia Council on Human Relations. The techniques described are those he has personally participated in or observed.

Getting Started: A local minister acted as convener, calling and chairing the first meeting. At that time, three "call" men, each of a different denomination, were elected to get other ministers to join in. Each of these "call" men has sufficient prestige to guarantee a good response from Atlanta's Negro ministers.

Selecting Targets: What business is most likely to employ Negroes? Obviously one whose products Negroes buy. Whether it is a grocery store or department store or manufacturing plant, management will not want to antagonize a large percentage of its customers by denying Negro applicants a fair shake at employment.

Seasonal fluctuations must also be taken into account. In the retail field, management is most likely to be cooperative at peak buying periods like Easter or Christmas when refusal to hire Negroes could send regular customers buying elsewhere. Similarly, in a manufacturing plant, regular seasonal lay-offs would be a poor time to press for new hiring.

Selecting good targets at the right time is a prime requisite for successful negotiation.

Preparing to Negotiate: Once a target has been selected, a negotiating committee is appointed. The negotiating committee makes an appointment with management. Before that appointment, it gathers as much information as possible from people who work there, or have worked there and from general community knowledge of this particular business. Based on this information, a list of questions is prepared in advance of the meeting, designed to get more information and to probe the attitudes of management.

At a pre-appointment caucus, the negotiating committee appoints its spokesmen to avoid repetition and speechmaking. Those who are not experienced negotiators thus have an opportunity to observe the spokesmen so that at some future negotiation they can be spokesmen themselves.

The negotiating committee may number anywhere from five to eight people. Operation Breadbasket found that when a large number of negotiators met with management, those with no roles to play stood around restlessly. Inexperienced members, impressed by an elegant office or a forceful manner, or for lack of something better to do, unconsciously nodded agreement with everything management said. This must be avoided, for it puts the spokesmen under a dangerous psychological handicap.

The First Meeting: This first meeting simply sets the stage. No actual negotiations are conducted; no requests for hiring made. First, the committee drives home its credentials, making clear that through its members and their pulpits, they represent the Negro population of the city. (This does not mean that in your town an employment campaign must be organized by ministers. It can be a coalition of organizations or of civic leaders or just one organization doing the job — whatever best suits your setup.)

Next, the committee seeks information on hiring and upgrading practices. It also makes a point of finding out practices concerning physical facilities such as lunch rooms, lockers, rest-rooms and the like. For it is as much concerned with eliminating discrimination on the job as with hiring.

A tour of the plant or store on this first visit is a big help. Observant eyes will see much that management withholds. For instance management may say that it has taken down every "Whites Only" sign and there is no more discrimination in use of facilities. A tour of the plant reveals, however, that all the janitors and porters are assigned one restroom and all the assembly line workers are assigned another. And guess what? All the janitors and porters turn out to be Negroes.

After the meeting, the committee studies its information and presents its recommendations for hiring, upgrading and use of facilities to the parent body. It accepts, rejects, adds to or subtracts from the recommendations. When general agreement is reached, the negotiating committee is ready for the second meeting.

The Second Meeting: The negotiating committee arrives with requests for a specific number of workers to be hired or upgraded. If there is discrimination in the plant, correction is suggested. The committee indicates a reasonable time to comply — say two weeks.

It is customary in trade union negotiations for the union to present a much larger demand than it really wants. This gives the union something to bargain with and gives the appearance of reasonableness by settling for less. This is a perfectly legitimate technique which may fit your situation.

But Breadbasket does not work this way. They have found that management is not above trying to drive a wedge into the committee's unity by private offers. For instance, a national firm hired a negotiator's sister for a good job in a northern city in the hope that the negotiator would influence the rest of the committee to modify its hiring requests in Atlanta. Other firms offer gifts to negotiators or promise to hire relatives, friends or parishioners of the negotiators. Management is aware that while the negotiators may not succumb to such temptations, their mere existence is enough to cast doubt on the negotiating committee's integrity and to weaken the community's confidence in it.

For this reason, Breadbasket decides in advance how many persons should be recommended for employment and then sticks with it. In some circumstances, the committee might agree to consider substitute promotions and upgradings, but these must have the approval of the parent body.

How does management react to these meetings? Initially, resistance commonly takes these forms:

"We're working on a tight budget and may lay people off."
"We have such a low job turnover that we rarely do any hiring."

"I've got nothing against hiring Negroes personally, but my employees will never stand for it."

And of course, the grand-daddy of all alibis:

"This isn't the time for it."

How does the negotiating committee cope with such attitudes? First, by having in hand information about hiring and upgrading before the meeting, it is able to expose subterfuges and deceptions about company practices. Getting the facts is essential.

Second, by pointing out the successful experiences of other companies, it is able to allay fears about employee acceptance. It can suggest ways for management to make that acceptance trouble-free.

Third, and most persuasive, it points out that consumer acceptance of the product makes the business grow. If the Negro community should become disaffected, the business could be permanently damaged. (The first fact the committee should research is what percentage of the company's market is Negro.) A soft-drink company for example, by its refusal to negotiate employment, found that thousands and thousands of Negroes shifted to a rival drink. Even when they hired Negroes as drivers and salesmen, they failed to recapture 25% of their Negro customers, who had simply gotten out of the habit of drinking their product.

This soft-drink company has learned an expensive lesson. It has told other businessmen of its experience, which of course has proved helpful in subsequent negotiations.

How Successful is Breadbasket? Breadbasket's first target was, appropriately enough, the bread industry. Through the methods described above, more than sixty Negroes were hired in non-traditional jobs, adding a quarter of a million dollars to the Negro economy. After that, it negotiated successfully with soft drink companies, shoe outlets and large department stores — roughly 750 new jobs. But the influence it has had on the hiring policies of other businesses is incalculable.

MACON: SOME NEW WRINKLES ADDED

In Macon, a year and a half of planning went into opening the doors to employment. A steering committee, including representatives of 98% of the Negro ministers, directed the movement. But unlike Atlanta, this was not a movement run exclusively by ministers. It involved all Negro organizations, including clubs and fraternal associations. Both white and Negro members of the Georgia Council on Human Relations played important parts in its activities.

The steering committee divided responsibility by the Committee system: Training and Placement, Negotiating, Conferences and Contacts, Public Relations, and Picketing.

Training: Breadbasket had no training programs. They felt there were enough qualified Negroes on hand and enough non-traditional jobs available for the question of training to be deferred until later on.

Macon, with a smaller variety of businesses and a smaller supply of qualified personnel available made training a prime necessity. The steering committee enlisted the aid of seven volunteer teachers (six Negro, one white) to teach Business Math and English, refresher courses in typing and shorthand and the use of business machines.

These volunteer courses trained over 150 students. But they served an even more important function. They convinced Macon's vocational school of the need for business classes. Now the public vocational school has classes which are turning out qualified personnel regularly. The National Cash Register Company also trained workers to use their machines — registers, accounting machines, calculators, etc.

Negotiating — Conferences and Contacts: Most of the jobs available in Macon are in retail stores. Therefore the Negotiating Committee worked through the Merchants' Association. The Committee realized that negotiating takes many weeks — they could not hand the Merchants Association an ultimatum and let it go at that. They began their exploratory negotiations many months before their target date, leaving time for the training program to take effect so they could answer the charge of "No qualified applicants."

By dealing with the Merchants Association as a body, they sought to obtain simultaneous hiring of Negroes in many stores so no businessman could complain: "Why am I being singled out first?"

In addition, fifteen others were trained to conduct conferences with individual merchants. This was done to help iron out the problems of each manager or owner in hiring or upgrading or use of facilities. But these managers understood that their stores were part of a united effort.

Public Relations: The Negotiating Committee operated with confidence because it knew that the Negro community fully understood and approved its activities. The Public Relations Committee arranged weekly mass meetings which moved from church to church, large and small. At these meetings, the final goals were explained and the day-to-day problems discussed. Regular notices gave the names of businesses which had employed Negroes. Naturally, Negro customers traded more heavily with the merchants on the list. This positive approach made merchants anxious to get their names on this honor roll.

Picketing Committee: In spite of some progress through negotiation, it finally became necessary to use pickets. This was not a haphazard action, but carefully disciplined to get community support and compliance.

First, the Picketing Committee cleared arrangements with the police well in advance.

Pickets were neatly dressed and instructed on keeping good order.

Picketing began the day after Thanksgiving, the big sale day which traditionally marks the start of the Christmas shopping season. One hundred twenty-five pickets went to twelve stores at a time.

Observers and messengers kept constant touch with picket headquarters, relaying new instructions and information as necessary.

Placards carried out the picketing theme: "We want to work where we spend our money."

Customers stayed away from the picketed stores in droves — Estimates range from forty to fifty per cent loss of normal Thanksgiving Sale trade.

After only a day and a half of picketing, the merchants called for a conference and immediately began hiring Negroes. In the following six weeks, one hundred Negroes began working where no Negro had ever worked before. And since New Year of 1963, the number has increased week by week and many more than the original one hundred are working today.

Operation Breadbasket refined the negotiating technique. Macon added the new wrinkles of: Emphasis on Training, Keeping the Community Informed, Discipline, Well-Timed Picketing.

BRUNSWICK: NEW PATTERNS FOR OLD

Brunswick is a small South Georgia town — 21,700 people of whom 8,900 are Negro. Here the techniques employed are entirely different. There is no community-wide organization of ministers working specifically for jobs. The push for jobs is one part of a broad spectrum of demands — for open public accommodations, for voter registration, for desegregated education, for better housing.

All of these demands are being handled by the NAACP under the leadership of Rev. J. C. Hope, a young, energetic Baptist minister.

Brunswick's white community has a somewhat better understanding of Negro aspirations than many South Georgia towns, partly because of the Urban Renewal Program. When the program first began about three years ago, Negroes testified at open hearings. They talked not only about their housing needs, but what they were up against in employment, training and education.

White politicians listened and learned. As one result, the city government hired a Negro — a well-qualified housing expert — as assistant manager of the Urban Renewal Program. He and his secretary are the only white-collar city employees in South Georgia.

Brunswick has a Bi-racial Commission, with white members appointed by the white Chamber of Commerce and Negro members appointed by the Negro Chamber of Commerce. Several of the Negro members are active in the Georgia Council on Human Relations.

The Bi-racial Commission acts as a buffer between the Merchants Association and the Negro leadership. The Negroes put their job demands to the Commission. The merchants submit their counter-proposals. Working in secret, the Commission hands down its hiring recommendations. These can be accepted or rejected by either side.

Brunswick's Bi-racial Commission — the first in the state, appointed in 1960 — is a help in reducing tension. But it by no means guarantees equal job opportunities to Negroes. The old problems of management resistance and lack of qualified people must still be solved.

Training: Here as elsewhere, the failure of Negro high schools to offer standard commercial courses results in a lack of people trained beyond the semi-skilled stage. The Brunswick NAACP is meeting this need by conducting a training school for retail cashiers and clerks with the assistance of the National Cash Register Company. They now have from 75 to 100 trainees on file.

Federal Resources: It is worth remembering that in addition to volunteer training courses such as conducted in Macon and Brunswick, the federal government provides vocational and on-the-job training under the Manpower Development and Training Act. It provides for allowances to trainees and financial assistance for training programs set up by private employers. Your local office of the State Employment Service will have details about how to participate in the program. Also, the United States Department of Labor in Washington will send information on request.

Jobs in Industry: Although Brunswick is a small town, it has several large industrial plants: sea-food picking and packing, paper and building materials, chemical plants including the big Hercules Powder Company. The Brunswick NAACP has conducted a survey of these plants and found that they are complying with the President's Executive Order on Equal Employment Opportunities issued in June, 1963.

If there are such large industrial plants in your area, you will want to find out whether they hold federal contracts or federal sub-contracts. If they do, they are required to hire without discrimination under penalty of losing the government's business.

Getting Results: Since industry in Brunswick is hiring without discrimination, negotiations were directed solely to local merchants. But in Brunswick, as in Macon, negotiation went just so far. It finally became necessary to picket. Two grocery stores in Negro neighborhoods were picketed for three successive weekends. At the end of that time, both hired Negro clerks. A third grocery store got the message too, and without waiting for pickets also hired a Negro clerk.

As a result of NAACP activity under Dr. Hope's leadership, there are now about fifteen Negroes in clerks and cashiers jobs. The hiring of these people has broken down some traditional prejudices. For example, a leading merchant hired a Negro as a maid, but told her that if the customers were Negroes to go ahead and sell. Now she sells to all comers and her commissions are as high as any salesperson's in the store.

* * * *

We have described briefly how three communities are opening the door to equal employment. Each is different, but the common denominator in all is the determination of the Negro leadership to act now.

Each community found negotiating slow and arduous — a process which does not pay off in newspaper headlines or the excitement of a demonstration or mass desegregation of a public facility. But Negro leaders willingly invested their time in employment because they know it pays rich long-range dividends in dignity and self-respect.

The Georgia Council on Human Relations freely offers its assistance to any group in the state seeking equal job opportunities. We invite you to consult with our staff members:

Rev. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Assistant Director of the Georgia Council and one of the chief architects of Operation Breadbasket.

Mr. Jac Wasserman, who as Field Director of the National Sharecroppers Fund, is thoroughly familiar with federal manpower programs, including such resources as apprenticeship and on-the-job training programs.
